Gain of $5,100,000 in Net Working Capital—Ratio of Assets to Liabilities is 2.07 to 1

Another shake-up in the industry's banking connections was revealed this week coincident with publication of the earnings report of Warner Brothers for the company's second fiscal quarter.

Announcement was made that Walter E. Sachs, of Goldman, Sachs, and Richard F. Hoyt, of Hayden, Stone & Co., had resigned as directors and members of Warners executive committee, a step reported to have resulted from differences regarding new financing and other matters between Warners and the bankers.

Report of Warners for the quarter ended February 28 showed that theatre and picture operations were successful, although the company was put in the "red" by a net loss of $500,066 through operations of Brunswick Radio and National Radio Advertising divisions. In the preceding quarter the company reported net income of $1,576,421, equal to 38 cents a common share.

The radio interests sustained an operating loss of $1,269,276, while film and theatre divisions showed net earnings of $769,209, after deducting all charges, including interest and depreciation. Net profit, after deducting losses sustained by the radio interests and after all charges, including interest but before amortization and depreciation of fixed assets, amounted to $2,024,261.

Net available for interest, including requirements on the optional 6 per cent convertible debentures, after all charges, including losses of radio interests, but before

THIS picture should delight everyone—fans and producers alike.

It follows none of the formulas of present-day pictures; it has nothing sensational to recommend it; it is wholly without obvious sex appeal; it offers no preachment, yet it is one of the finest pictures turned out this year. Charles Norris will certainly rejoice that the lesson in his book is presented so forcefully and yet with such delicacy.

Lois Wilson, as the wife, has her first good opportunity in months. She gives a beautiful, sympathetic performance. Genevieve Tobin, as the former sweetheart, is lovely and justifies all predictions made for her, but the big surprise is John Boles, who doesn't sing but who walks away with a most difficult rôle. The children are all natural and lovable.

Director John Stahl deserves much credit for this excellent picture. If you miss it, you won't forgive yourself.

"Seed"

Universal Time, 97 mins.

A REAL MONEY-GETTER INTENSELY HUMAN AND MOVING MOTHER LOVE AND TRIANGLE DRAMA WITH STRONG FEMININE APPEAL.

This one is likely to end up among "the ten best" of the current year. After the avalanche of gangster pictures it strikes a refreshing and comparatively wholesome note. As a mascara-destroyer it's a pip. The story itself is not heavy with plot or particularly new but the manner in which it is done—from the standpoints of both acting and direction—counts heavily. Lois Wilson gives a great performance as the wife and John Boles and Genevieve Tobin are both splendid.

"Seed," by the way, is doing particularly well with matinee audiences, one of the few pictures which can boast of big houses in the afternoon as well as the evening.

Reading the White Lights

"Seed," Universal picture, at the Rivoli, is a real money-getter. This feature is intensely human with strong feminine appeal. "Seed" is a ehallenge to women in love. This feature is scheduled for another week.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY

Off the Record

CYCLES may come and go, but pathos is still a sure-fire ingredient in story plots. At the Rivoli this week the women are enjoying a lot of crying. During the sequences in "Seed" showing the wife deserted by her husband and then left alone by her children, sobs were heard in all parts of the house, not to mention sniffles, and hundreds of handkerchiefs were in constant use. And many of the men present also rubbed their eyes furtively.

Great credit is due to John M. Stahl for his direction of "Seed." It is a real American home that he portrays on the screen and the players act like human beings instead of puppets. It is an intelligent picture with a primitive appeal.

Oh, Boy, How They Cry

If you are one of those sentimental souls who enjoys a good cry, or an old stone-heart who likes to see others cry, or perchance one who enjoys the novelty of seeing practically an entire audience in tears, drop into the Rivoli Opera House any evening at 7:16 o'clock. You'll see more hankies in full view than in evidence at a chautauqua salute. The why and wherefore of it all is "Seed," in which Director John Stahl stages a most impressive comeback. Fox '30 Report to Show $3.70 Net the report and which became a matter of semi-public knowledge.

After much deliberation, the Board of Directors have adopted the Touche Niven report in which amortization of film inventory has been treated by a method radically different from the method developed by Price, Waterhouse & Company. Clarke's statement to the stockholders, it is said, will treat frankly and fully the difference of accounting methods of the two firms.

The differences between the Touche Niven and the management on one side, and Price, Waterhouse on the other, are of as much interest to the motion picture industry as to the Fox stockholders. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has been able to learn from reliable sources the details of those differences.

Price, Waterhouse proposed a formula under which 93% of the cost of negative and prints on each picture was amortized on a definite week-by-week schedule over a period of 26 weeks from release date, and the remaining 7% amortized over the subsequent 26 weeks. Under this system each picture was written off inventory each week at a fixed percentage of total cost regardless of distribution results.

The Touche Niven Plan

The Price, Waterhouse system has, with certain modifications, prevailed as the basis of amortization of inventory over a period of some years, but the schedule which was previously applied to silent pictures provided for amortization of 86% of negative cost in the first 12 months of release and 14% of negative cost in the subsequent six months.

Touche Niven evolved a plan of amortization under which 50% of the gross receipts of all pictures were set aside during each of the first 52 weeks of release toward the amortization of negative cost regardless of distribution performance. When a picture had completed its 52nd week under the Touche Niven system, is was written off inventory at $1. If 50% of the receipts of the picture at the end of its 52nd week had exceeded its negative cost, the amount by which it had so exceeded the negative cost plus 50% of all subsequent receipts were transferred to inventory surplus. If, at the end of the 52nd week 50% of the picture's gross receipts did not equal its negative cost, the deficit was charged against inventory. The system provided for a reconcilation of inventory account at the end of the 52nd week of each picture's life which amounted, substantially, to a reconciliation of inventory account each week in the case of Fox Film Corporation.

How Plans Work Specifically

Under the Price, Waterhouse system a picture like "Common Clay," which is said to have earned out its complete negative cost in six weeks, would have had 93% of its cost amortized by a fixed schedule over 26 weeks. The surplus of each week over scheduled amortization would have gone to profit, whereas a picture like "The Big Trail," which had a high negative cost and played its contracts slowly, would have been amortized in the identical way and a weekly loss would have shown. Under the Touche Niven system 50% of the gross on both pictures would have been applied against inventory during the first 52 weeks of release and the profits of "Common Clay" would be applied to an inventory surplus account to off-set deficit on "The Big Trail."

The Touche Niven system of amortization was put into effect by the Fox Film Corporation as of January 1, 1929 so that the profits shown in the annual report for 1929 and the profits shown on the annual report of 1930 are based upon the same method of amortization of negative cost.

The report for 1930 covers the 52 weeks ending December 27, 1930 and represents the results of the first full year of operation of the Fox Film Corporation under direction of Harley L. Clarke.

A Scandinavian Management for Beverly M. Jones

Beverly Mills Jones, of New York and San Francisco, and Edis Christiansen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Christiansen of San Diego, were married Tuesday afternoon at the Little Church Around the Corner in New York by the Reverend B. A. E. McLaughlin.

Mr. Jones is a director of production for Pathe Revue, with which he has been connected some three years, going to that post from editorial activities in the Long Island studio organization of Paramount. He was previously a member of the editorial departments of various newspapers, West and East. He is also an occasional contributor to the magazines, including the New Yorker's merry persiflage, so kindred in spirit to his contributions to the screen. He is a brother of Guy Jones. adventuring journalist of international experience and repute.

The bride, whose stage name is Edris Christie, has been in Hollywood for two years in pictures with Warner Brothers.

Jones' studio apartment in Greenwich Village has long been a famous rendezvous for a small and ardent set of waffle fanciers and amateur cooks. The beverage mixing had always been of a professional calibre, rather than amateur. Due to his skill in the technique of sound mechanisms Jones' radio set is one of the more remarkable instruments of the art. Friends are forecasting that under a new and Scandanavian management some changes of policy will be made.

Red Russia Now On U. S. Screen

the lay press, the MOTION PICTURE HERALD's Washington office made certain inquiries in governmental offices, resulting in the following dispatch:

By FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington—Looking to the motion picture industry itself to take such steps as it may deem necessary to safeguard the American public from Russian propaganda films, high officials in Washington today expressed themselves as helpless to take any action regarding the Five Year Plan, announced by the Amkino Corporation as ready for general distribution.

At the State Department it was pointed out that there is no censorship law by which the distribution of such pictures could be prevented. Officials of the Customs Service also pointed to the lack of a censorship law other than that dealing with obscenity and similar matters. One Russian picture has been barred from the country, it is understood, but it was for reasons which might as well have applied to an English, French or German film.

Officials of the State Department are somewhat concerned about the number of Russian pictures which have been brought in from time to time, but administration officials generally feel that the guarantee of free speech extends to motion pictures as well as to the spoken and printed word and are reluctant to take any action which might lead to Russian charges of discrimination.

It was pointed out at the Department that the film industry has a strong organization and that under the circumstances all that can be done is to rely upon the distributors and exhibitors of the country to preserve the screen from use for propaganda purposes. Unless the industry acts, it was said, there is nothing the Government can do.

First information regarding proposed distribution of the Five Year Plan was given Department officials by the representative of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. In view of their helplessness, no attempt is being made to watch Russian film activities in this country, the Customs Service being relied upon to scrutinize each film as it arrives and bar those which are in violation of the law. Generally speaking, it was pointed out, there would be no objection to Russian films faithfully depicting the situation. However, the Five Year Plan will undoubtedly be found to be a story of far greater success than has actually been achieved and designed to give a very rosy impression of the Communist state; nevertheless, there is nothing Washington can do except sit tight and hope that the industry itself will deal with any situation needing action.

Now Another Side

Wednesday afternoon the MOTION PICTURE HERALD received a publicity release concerning Pathe News, reading in part as follows:

Following the Pathe News presentation of the Soviet Five-Year Plan, in serial form, the company is currently releasing uncensored pictures which a descendant of the first Czar claims to be the real story of red Russia.

The suppression of all but authorized pictures has made the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics a land of mystery. The startling scenes obtained by Pathe News is a camera study of Communism in fact as well as in theory.

"Russia is the hardest of crossword puzzles," says Princess Alexandra Kropotkin. "Read one way it spells liberty. Read the other it spells slavery. Russia is a country of untold wealth and unbelievable poverty, a land of magnificent ideals and sordid realities. The Soviet Government started fourteen years ago, proclaiming a great ideal, equality for all who work. But strangely enough today, you find neither freedom nor equality. The ideal has vanished.

"Instead the Government has turned the Russian people into a vast army of slaves. Under the Soviet Government the Russian people are organized and have to work. The average wage for the worker is 25 cents a day * * * "

Scene Sketch Chart Evolved by Milestone

To Lewis Milestone, director of "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "The Front Page," goes credit for an innovation in picture making.

A scene chart, in which a complete scenic record of the entire play is sketched from the proper camera angles before the picture is filmed, is used by Milestone.

Each set of characters in the action of each sequence is pictured by the artist as if it were from the eye of the camera. Beneath each sketch on each page of the chart is the dialogue and cues pertaining to the action.

Thus this scene sketch chart proves a valuable guide both for Milestone and his technical staff. The cameramen, film editors, assistant and technical directors have a daily reference index for their assistance in working out the details of each shot in the picture.

Paramount Adds To Musical Shorts

Paramount will greatly increase the number of musicals in its short subject 1931-32 schedule at the New York studio, and proportionately decrease the number of dialogue shorts.

The change is due to the dominance of dialogue in the company's feature output, and an effort to balance the program. One reel films only are affected, the original schedule of 52 one-reelers, of which 12 were to be musicals, being changed to 36 musical and 16 dialogue shorts.

26 FEATURES, TWO ACTION SERIES, 104 SHORTS IN COLUMBIA LINEUP

Eight Pictures Also Will Be Made in Foreign Tongue at Studios in United States

Columbia Pictures starts the season of 1931-32 with 26 major productions, 16 action dramas, 104 short pictures and eight foreign versions scheduled for release.

This program, representatives attending the New York sales convention at the Park Central Hotel (the first of three to be held through the country) were told, represents the most elaborate yet undertaken by the company.

The success of Columbia pictures in Broadway and other theatres of the country during the season just closing prompted executives to intensify production plans for 1931-32, the managers and salesmen were advised.

Announcement of the company's product for the new season is contained in the following statement:

"The success of such films as "Africa Speaks," "The Criminal Code," "The Last Parade," "Ten Cents a Dance" and "Dirigible" has brought about a determination to concentrate upon quality productions with a view to obtaining longer runs on each picture and extended runs on many.

"Because of the audience and box office demand for several stars and directors now under the Columbia banner a number of productions built around these personalities will be included in the group of 26 major productions. Listed among these productions are: Two vehicles starring Barbara Stanwyck, three starring Jack Holt alone, one co-starring Holt and Ralph Graves, one starring Evelyn Brent and one Frank Capra production.

"The stories, plays and books secured by Columbia for the coming season's production were selected after a canvass of exhibitors had been made to learn the type of productions most in demand, so as to secure the greatest possible box office and audience reaction from the picturization of these stage successes and popular novels.

"For the past several months, production and distribution executives of Columbia have been lining up story material from the pens of internationally known playwrights and authors, as well as players and directors of note.

"Backing 'The Showmanship Group,' and its supplementary group of features and 104 shorts, Columbia plans a more extensive advertising and exploitation campaign than before. The outline includes national advertising in newspapers, magazines and trade papers and merchandising tieups with some of the largest national advertisers of staple products. A new line of accessories also will be brought out.

"During the coming year Columbia will continue with great casts, directors and story technicians. "'Shopworn,' a human interest drama starring Barbara Stanwyck.

"'In the Secret Service,' a romantic story of adventure and diplomatic intrigue starring Jack Holt in a role different from his past performances.

"'Pagan Lady,' William DuBois' Broadway stage play. It is a story of a cabaret girl's regeneration through love which will star Evelyn Brent under the direction of John Francis Dillon. The supporting cast includes Conrad Nagel, Charles Bickford, Roland Young, William Farnum, Gwen Lee, Lucille Gleason and Leslie Fenton.

"'The Men in Her Life,' by Warner Fabian. Written by the author of 'Flaming Youth,' 'Sailor's Wives,' 'Summer Bachelors' and 'Unforbidden Fruit,' it tells a story of a girl's struggle to adapt herself to a new moral code.

"'Guilty Generation,' a drama from the stage play by Jo Milward and J. Kirby Hawkes, co-authors of 'She Got Away with Murder,' 'Life Is Like That' and 'Mrs. Cook's Tour.'

"'The Halfway Girl,' a sophisticated story of Broadway night club life based on the novel 'Via Manhattan,' by Hawthorne Hurst, author of 'Goldie Gets Along' and 'No More Woman.' Written by a newspaperman whose beat was Broadway and its show places, it tells a modern story of romance centering around a blues singer and a Broadway columnist.

"'The Final Edition,' a drama that unfolds its gripping action against the background of a great metropolitan newspaper.

"'Love Affair,' the College Humor story by Ursula Parrott, which was included immediately upon publication in the 'Anthology of the World's Best Short Stories.' A dramatic tale of a girl who tried to play the love game the man's way and lost. It was written by the author of 'Ex Wife' ('The Divorcee') and 'Strangers May Kiss.' Kiss.'

"'The Master Mind,' a drama of modern life and a tragic insight into the human side of a man who was drunk with power.

"'Hollywood Speaks,' telling the inside story of the glamor of movieland with all

"'Vanity Street,' from the short story 'Park Avenue,' by Fannie Hurst. A sophisticated tale of sham and pretense.

"'The Substitute Wife,' from the Red Book serial, 'Help Yourself to Happiness,' by Frank R. Adams. A story of mystery and adventure about a beautiful girl who finds herself unjustly accused of crime.

"'Unwanted,' by Belle Muni and Abem Finkel, co-authors of stage plays. A mystery drama, which will feature a prominent character actor.

"'The Artist's Model,' from the Cosmopolitan short story 'The Rented Body,' by Rupert Hughes. It tells the dramatic story of a disillusioned artist and a beautiful girl, who bartered her soul to win her lover's freedom.

"Two True Story Productions bringing to the screen two stories from real life. Backed by the True Story Magazine circulation of over 2,000,000, they will have a radio tieup, the True Story Hour, broadcast weekly over the Columbia chain through 22 stations.

"'Zelda Marsh,' the best seller by Charles G. Norris. A story of a girl so bewitching she drove men mad and of her rise to theatrical stardom.

"The following two series of outdoor thrillers will supplement the 26 features:

"Eight Buck Jones, presenting the Western star and his horse, Silver, in a series of eight outdoor dramas from the pens of outstanding Western writers.

"Eight Tim McCoy in a different group of action pictures—a fast moving series of human dramas of the colorful West.

"To supplement its various long feature groups Columbia will again offer a diversified lineup of single reel shorts. The eight series follows:

"Thirteen Disney's Mickey Mouse, internationally known animated cartoon. Backed by the exploitation of the 'Mickey Mouse Clubs,' and an unusual lineup of accessories including the Mickey House dolls, books, theme songs and a syndicated cartoon strip.

"Thirteen Krazy Kats produced by Charles Mintz. A popular pen and ink character in pictures, taken from the cartoon strip by George Harriman.

"Thirteen Scrappy animated cartoons produced by Charles Mintz. A pen and ink cartoon which introduces a new angle in the animated field. Instead of the usual animal characters, the central figure will be a mischievous character 'Scrappy.'

"Thirteen Bedtime Stories for Grownups, starring Eddie Buzzell in a series of one-act playlets which offer a sophisticated one-reel fare. Written, acted and directed by Eddie Buzzell with a prominent supporting cast and with the collaboration of some of the most prominent comedy writers.

"Thirteen Walter Futter 'Curiosities,' a unique series, presenting a photographic record of amazing oddities. An offstage talk explaining the unusual subjects or offering humorous comment is synchronized with each reel.

"Thirteen Walter Futter 'Travelogue' with John P. Medbury dialogue. Touring the four corners of the globe with an internationally famous humorist and columnist as guide. Combining the authenticity of a travelogue with the entertaining wit of the columnist of 'Maybe I'm Wrong' and 'Mumble and Mutter.'

"Thirteen Monkeyshines, something new in shorts—a series of animal comedies to be directed by Bryan Foy. These one-reelers will consist of hilarious stories, with trained animals taking the place of human actors. An entire menagerie of trained animals, including lions, tigers, giraffes, dogs and cats will be used.

"Thirteen Screen Snapshots, Columbia's fan magazine of the screen which reveals intimate scenes and talks of the stars at work and at play."

"It shall be the obligation of THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD to look cheerfully upon its world and to be at once as dignifiedly important in the presentation of business matters as any morning-coated directors' meeting and as merrily entertaining in lighter matters as the persiflage of the cocktail hour.

"THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD comes into being in a consciousness that this community, of which it is to be so definitely an integral part, is in a trans-mountain empire with a great continent and 3,000 miles between it and New York with its Broadway and its concentrations of capital and administration.

"This new journal will chronicle day by day the life and activities of our Hollywood, with news and comment on the serious, exacting business of picture production, and as well will record the activities of the personalities who make up this colony, reflecting in type and the printed page in appreciative terms the glamorous picture of the land of picture making.

"THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD faithfully promises to represent in true color the interest and attitudes of its community, which so markedly by reason of the forces of creative construction, climate, geography and the strong but intangible heritage of its years of pictorial and dramatic experience have in a sense made it a separate world with a mood and tempo of its own, understandable completely only to those intimately familiar and sympathetically attuned to its labors, its problems and its triumphs."

Lightman Demands Fair Protection In MPTO Address

M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, in addressing delegates at the annual convention of the MPTO of Kansas and Western Missouri, demanded fair protection and equitable zoning for independent exhibitors.

Lightman, whose speech featured the session, declared the presence of the independent in the cities and towns was vital to the success of the industry, stressing the local contacts, close association with public officials, and good will obtained by the independent.

He called attention to the successful negotiations between the MPTOA and Electrical Research Products, whereby service charges were reduced, claiming the saving to theatre owners would amount to $1,000,000 per year. He intimated that further adjustments would follow.

Sponsored Film Does a Fadeout

product. Therefore his parting with the "sponsored" project is tantamount to the cancellation of an expired insurance policy.

At the Fox offices it was pointed out that while no one might speak officially on such an element of policy except Harley Clarke, it would not be amiss to point out that Fox had not presented in its theatres any sponsored or advertising film. The Fox activity in this sector consists only of the production of films for non-theatrical use of industrial clients.

Sam Morris of Warner Brothers observed that they had never been really engaged in the presentation of sponsored pictures. In the Warner attitude it was apparent that they were cheerfully willing to see the passing of the theatre screen advertising wave.

So it seems the great furore of the disputed hope of an advertising rainbow with a pot of gold in the box office is silenced. It came upon the industry largely as one of the consequences of the invasion of sound. For many years, in fact from the days of the birth of the screen in 1896 there have been advertising pictures, and occasionally, sporadic and regional presentations of them on the theatre screens. When sound came sales managers found that sales arguments could be presented along with pictures of the merchandise. The temptation was inevitable. A sales manager by the very necessity of his art and the impulses of his disposition will use anything that he can lay his hands upon. He tried to lay a heavy possessive hand on the screen. The millions who gather nightly before the screen represented a potential market that was to be his if he could get it. He tried, and no one blames him for that.

But now, even before time has permitted the public to give voice to an active opposition by a negative vote at the box office, the motion picture's observers of the trend of general thought and attitude, have abandoned this hybrid endeavor of entertainment-and-merchandising.

A militant attitude on the part of the publication trade press, and some expressions of opposition on the part of publications themselves, have had a part in the crystallization of today's decision.

It has been, however, inevitable, as pointed out editorially by MOTION PICTURE HERALD some months since, that the "sponsored" picture question would have to be settled by the industry by the old experience method. Now, as is so often true of action and reaction in the fast world of the motion picture, it seems the period of required experience has proved rather shorter than would have been anticipated.

Because of the position of Paramount Publix in the industry a decision of policy of this character from "the cross roads of the world" assumes a special import to the entire industry. It has been evident that the enthusiasm in some quarters of the Paramount Publix organization for the advertising picture idea was a heavy contributor to the interest of the whole industry. A reversal of attitude in the same organization is just as influential. It is understood that the issue has been a hotly debated one in Paramount from the beginning, and that Sidney Kent, who has made no public utterance on the subject, has been a persistent opponent of the sponsored picture.

While this week's developments promise to end the larger career of the sponsored picture, especially in connection with the great circuits, it is inevitable that some parts of the movement will survive and that in a marginal way with lesser enterprises, local in character, advertising will from time to time find its way onto the theatre screens. This, however, is of no such significance to the whole of the art and industry of the motion picture, as the major movement set in motion a year ago.

Schenck Going Ahead with U. A. Coast Circuit

Despite the reported truce between Fox West Coast Theatres and United Artists, which would immediately curtail U. A.'s proposed circuit expansion along the California coast, intended as competition to West Coast, Joseph M. Schenck, United Artists' chief, visited San Francisco recently to inspect newly acquired sites for U. A. theatres at Berkeley, San Jose, Palo Alto, Richmond and Alameda, all in California.

Jos. M. Schenck

Schenck launched plans for a new United Artists circuit several months ago, following what he declared to be his inability to break into Fox West Coast theatres with United Artists pictures. In recent weeks, Schenck's theatre activities have been more or less dormant, with reports from Los Angeles crediting both interests with having effected a truce. His San Francisco inspection trip, apparently, dispels the truce rumors.

When Schenck returned to New York last week end he stated that the circuit would stay out of independent territory. Eighteen new theatres are now under construction, averaging 900 seats.

Untiedt, Guest of Hoover, Makes Personal Appearance

In connection with the M. These contests are being held to encourage juvenile patronage.

The American Theatre is in a bad way for pictures. At the moment, it is obliged either to play the secondary program stuff or else repeat on all the much smaller theatres which surround the big West Side house. The old management dallied too long over the bookings, and the result, naturally, was the current releases became available to the little competing spots in the neighborhood. Future releases, the new manager reports, are properly cared for; but the American is weathering a few worrisome weeks right now because of the situation.

Chicago Theatres Reduce Admissions

Chicago houses, anticipating warm weather slackness, are cutting prices. Neighborhoods in the 40 to 60-cent admission group are dropping to a 25 to 50-cent rate; while second runs are off from the 20 to 40-cent rate to a 15 to 35-cent scale.

Operating and advertising costs are being shaved, and exhibitors are planning contests to battle the summer outdoor competition. Golf courses are generally not feared.

B & K Refuses Chaplin Price; Will Not Show "City Lights"

Chaplin's "City Lights" will not play the 36 Publix-Balaban & Katz pre-release Chicago houses, as a result of the breakdown of negotiations between the circuit and United Artists, which refused the B. & K. offer.

The film is being sold to individual theatres in the regular manner, an added clause prohibiting double featuring. B. & K. objections to the Chaplin figure were based on precedent, rather than fear of losing out on the film.

Agreement Opens Chicago to Universal on Film "She Wolf"

Judell Pictures, Chicago, and Universal have reached an agreement on "Mother's Millions," permitting Universal to sell the film, bought from Liberty, in the territory. Judell held distribution rights on all Liberty product.

Universal has changed the title of "Mother's Millions" to "The She Wolf" for national distribution.

48 FEATURES AND 197 SHORTS ON M-G-M's PROGRAM FOR 1931-32

Plans Call for Over Half of the Year's Full-Length Product to Carry Star Names

Forty-eight feature productions and 197 short feature releases will make up the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production output for the 1931-32 season.

More than half of the feature releases for the coming season are vehicles for the 15 stars now under contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Simultaneously working at the Culver City studio will be Marion Davies, Greta Garbo, John Gilbert, Ramon Novarro, Marie Dressler, Joan Crawford, William Haines, Norma Shearer, Buster Keaton, Robert Montgomery, Wallace Berry and Lawrence Tibbett. Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne will also be working for M-G-M in June, as will Helen Hayes, Bert Lahr and Jimmy Durante.

Among the players under contract to M-G-M who will support these stars, or who will appear themselves in leading roles, are Dorothy Appleby, Lionel Barrymore, Edwin Bartlett, William Bakewell, Charles Bickford, Lillian Bond, Edwina Booth, John Mack Brown, Janet Currie, Reginald Denny, Kent Douglass, Cliff Edwards, Phyllis Elgar, Madge Evans, Clark Gable, Ralph Graves, Charlotte Grenwood, Neil Hamilton, Leila Hyams, Jean Hersholt, Hedda Hopper, Leslie Howard, Dorothy Jordan, Joan Marsh, Adolphe Menjou, John Millan, Ray Milland, Conchita Montenegro, Polly Moran Karen Morley, Conrad Nagel, Ivor Novello, Monroe Owsley, Anita Page, Irene Purcell, Marjorie Rambeau, C. Aubrey Smith, Ruth Selwyn, Gus Shy, Lewis Stone, Ernest Torrence, Lester Vail and Robert Young.

These personalities will be directed by Harold Austin, Harry Beaumont, Clarence Brown, Tod Browning, Jack Conway, Cecil B. DeMille, Marcel DeSano, Paul Fejos, Jacques Feyder, George Fitzmaurice, Nick Grinde, George Hill, Robert Z. Leonard, Zion Myers, Harry Pollard, Charles Reisner, John Robertson, Arthur Robison, Edgar Selwyn, W. S. VanDyke, King Vidor, Jules White and Sam Wood.

Stories and dialogue will be supplied by such writers as Beatrice Banyard, Malcolm Stuart Boylan, Frank Butler, Ruth Cummings, Jack Cunningham, Delmar Daves, Joe Farnham, Edith Fitzgerald, Martin Flavin, Becky Gardiner, Harvey Gates, Benjamin Glazer, Ralph Graves, Howard Green, Eric Hatch, F. Hugh Herbert, Robert Hopkins, Cyril Hume, Boris Ingster, L. E. Smith, Zelda Sears, Matt Taylor, Sylvia Thalberg, Wanda Tuchock, Ernest Vajda, John Van Druten, Bayard Veiller, Lieut. Comm. Wead, Claudine West, P. G. Wodehouse, Edgar Allan Woolf and A. P. Younger.

Stress Juvenile Appeal

A number of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer 1931-32 productions will have special appeal for younger members of the audience as well as the older ones, the company declares. Examples given of this type are "Cheri-Bibi," "Huddle," "Pardon Us," "Flying High" and "Sea Eagles."

Juvenile appeal is also stated to be emphasized in a series of Dogville comedies. Six of these productions with dog stars and synchronized human voices will be available in 1931-32, and also in the appearance of Jackie Cooper. The other shorts on the 1931-32 program are also listed among product stressing appeal to youngsters.

Marion Davies, Greta Garbo and Joan Crawford will each be seen in at least two vehicles during the coming year, titles to be announced later.

Robert Montgomery, new star, previously in "Shipmates" and "Strangers May Kiss," will be seen in three starring films during the coming year. One of these will be an adaptation of the stage play, "The Truth Game," and another one will be based on the football romance, "Huddle."

William Haines will be seen in three pictures during the coming season, and two starring films have been definitely announced for Buster Keaton. Two pictures are also announced for Ramon Novarro, titles to be made public later.

Norma Shearer will be seen in at least two new productions, and Wallace Beery is listed for "Sea Eagles" and at least one other production.

Three starring vehicles are announced for John Gilbert: "Cheri-Bibi," an adaptation of the French adventure story; "Candlelight," based on a well-known stage success, and one other picture not yet announced.

Among the special starring releases are a Lawrence Tibbett production, title to be announced in the near future; a production co-starring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne; and also "Pardon Us," feature with the Hal Roach stars, Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy.

Among the four Cosmopolitan productions included in the lineup is "Skyscraper Souls," an adaptation of a hitherto unpublished magazine story by Faith Baldwin.

In the group of all-star productions, which will comprise an important part of next season's M-G-M release schedule, are the following titles:

"The Christian," an adaptation of Hall Caine's "The Squawman"; "Guilty Hands," based on an original story by Bayard Veiller; "Arsene Lupin," with Tod Browning directing; "West of Broadway"; "After All"; "Bridge vs. Bridge"; "The Red-Headed Woman"; "Night Court"; "The Awakening"; "Honolulu"; "Boarding School" and "Flying High."

An additional group of pictures classified as "The Marquee Five," will include important titles. Information about these releases is to be made public in the near future.

Metrotone News to Be Linked With Radio and Papers in Tieup Featuring Announcer

Short Features

The Hal Roach line-up for the coming year includes eight pictures starring Zazu Pitts and Thelma Todd, eight Laurel and Hardy releases, eight comedies starring Charley Chase, eight Our Gang productions, and eight Boy Friend comedies. Besides these will be four one-reel subjects starring Harry Lauder on the 1931-32 M-G-M shorts program. Lauder will appear exclusively in these releases, which will include comedy, dialogue and singing. The four subjects are tentatively listed as, (a) "Roamin' In The Gloaming" and "Keep Right on 'till the End of the Road," (b) "She's My Daisy," (c) "I Love a Lassie" and "My Own Dear Nell," and (d) "Nanny."

The short feature output will also include six Dogville comedies, 13 FitzPatrick Traveltalks, 12 Flip the Frog cartoons, 12 M-G-M Sport Champions productions, six Fisherman's Paradise releases, and 104 issues of Heart Metrotone News. All of the latter releases are one reel in length, except the Dogville comedies, which are two reels.

Newsreel Expansion

Hearst Metrotone News, distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, under a new arrangement will include in addition to news subjects in sound, an announcer to be known as "The Globe Trotter, the radio voice of the Hearst newspapers." At the present time, daily throughout the country in every city where Hearst newspapers are located, The Globe Trotter broadcasts news of the day. In the new Hearst Metrotone News, released twice a week by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, The Globe Trotter will describe the important events included in the current reel.

It is also stated that newspapers outside the Hearst chain in key cities throughout the country and new radio stations will be added regularly. This newspaper-radio-screen hook-up now includes the Atlanta Georgian, Baltimore News & American, Boston American, Chicago Herald-Examiner, Detroit Times, Los Angeles Herald, Wisconsin News, Milwaukee, New York American, Oakland Post-Enquirer, San Francisco Call-Bulletin, San Antonio Light, Seattle Post-Intelligencer and Washington Herald.

The following radio stations are also part of the new tie-up, with more being added: WGST (Atlanta), WCAO (Baltimore), WLEX (Boston), KYW (Chicago), WJR (Detroit), KMTR (Los Angeles), WISN (Milwaukee), WOR (New York), KROW (Oakland), KFRC San Francisco), KTSA

Studio Developments

New sound stages at the M-G-M Culver City studio include several features. One, a theatre stage, contains a theatre in its entirety, with an auditorium 250 x 100 feet, and a stage 80 x 80 x 80 feet. Hydraulic lifts and tanks are under the stage for aquatic spectacles. A steel and asbestos curtain, working by hydraulic lifts, can separate this stage into two separate ones, each soundproof from the other.

Opposite this, connected by a runway for freight and scenery, is a stage unit that contains three stages with soundproof partitions that can be removed if necessary to permit it to be thrown into a single stage nearly 400 feet long. These stages have double walls with three-foot air spaces between them. Complete forced ventilation, cooling and heating plants have been installed. Adjoining this stage unit is a double unit with stages of similar construction, 100 x 125 x 40 feet each. In addition, a block of four stages has been remodeled from existing silent stages into the same type of construction. The recording building has been augmented by a second concrete unit of two stories, containing twice the equipment that the original unit maintained.

Coincidental with these stage improvements has been built an industrial center, which centralizes all shops and construction about a spur track running into the studio property. Location trains are packed and equipped here, and all freight and supplies are unloaded direct to the store houses. The new shops are of glazed wall construction and include the carpenter, furniture, machine and plaster shops, foundries, property shops, construction buildings, electrical shops and labor departments, as well as lumber yards accommodating 100,000 square feet of material. There are more than 50,000 feet of paved roadway in the industrial center, a miniature city of shops a half mile long, in which more than 1,000 workers are employed.

Composers, musicians and orchestras employed by the music department, at first housed in rented property outside the studio, are now housed in a special soundproof music building, a two-story concrete structure 80 x 150 feet. Offices and studios for writers, orchestra rooms and six rehearsal halls for dance spectacles or for plays, are in this structure.

A new power installation, to "step down" the current brought in direct on high tension lines, has also been constructed. In 1929 the studio used about 250,000 kilowatts hourly, or about 1800 horsepower. In 1930 it used 400,000 kw., or 4,000 horsepower, and the coming year's schedule of production will increase this about 30 per cent, studio engineers estimate. Electrical requirements of recording have much to do with the increase, according to E. S. Bradley, electrical engineer at the plant. Six ten-foot, 500-kilowatt transformers are the stepping down units, and motor generator plants for rectifying and distributing this current are housed in two concrete buildings.

Another building addition is a new cutting and projection building. This three-story structure of concrete, houses 40 cutting rooms, each fully equipped for sound work and sound-insulated, and also five soundproof projection rooms for viewing "rushes." In addition, there are two more sound projection rooms in the recording building. The new cutting and projection room building is connected by an ornamental iron bridge with the executive offices for quick access to producers.

De Mille Sees More Freedom In Sound Films

William C. de Mille, president of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, declares that the development of talking pictures during the past two years has freed the hands of the creative artist and is offering a freer rather than a more restricted art form, and has "insured a real drama of the people whose audience will be the whole world."

Wm. C. de Mille

De Mille makes this statement in his preface to "Recording Sound for Motion Pictures," declared by Lester Cowan, editor of the book and assistant secretary of the Academy, to be the "first official compilation in book form of authoritative chapters on sound recording and reproduction by outstanding studio technicians and engineers." The book was published this week by McGraw-Hill, New York.

In his preface, de Mille states: "The introduction of the spoken word into the motion picture not only made a new and most important form of dramatic literature, but insured a real drama of the people whose audience will be the whole world.

"If the first efforts to express drama in this new medium were crude and clumsy it was partly because science had presented to creative art a totally unexpected opportunity.

"Recording Sound for Motion Pictures," symposium edited by Lester Cowan, technical director, for the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, and published by McGraw-Hill Company, New York, presents for both technical and artistic branches of the film industry, as well as for the general information of all concerned with pictures, a complete and highly readable volume picturing the development and rapid growth of sound in motion pictures.

It is valuable as a text and as a means of fostering greater co-operation and understanding among the different phases of the business. Various recording systems in use today are explained by important figures, and sections are devoted to laboratory, projection, and a most complete glossary of terms, in itself of great value. Contributors, under the editorship of Cowan, include William C. DeMille, Carl Dreher, H. G. Knox, Col. Nugent H. Slaughter, Ralph H. Townsend, E. H. Hansen, L. E. Clark, Emery Huse, and many others.

Subway System for Sound

An unusual device is said to have solved vexing problems at M-G-M studios in Culver City.

So delicate and complex are sound instruments that to do the actual recording they must be mounted firmly, and with these requirements a central recording building is much to be desired. When recording units are scattered over the lot, expense is great.

M-G-M, therefore, has installed a subway system for the traveling sound waves said to be the only one of its type in the world. Each one of its 22 stages is connected by tunnel with the central recording building, which is, in some cases, nearly a quarter of a mile distant.

The spoken lines are picked up on the stage by the "mike." From there it goes to the monitor room, set half way up in the wall of the stage. Here the "mixer" regulates and controls the volume.

Showdown Due in Kansas Blue Law War This Summer

A blue law war is looming in Kansas, with the greater part of the population in favor of Sunday shows and the county attorneys determined to enforce the laws. A showdown on the issue is expected before the summer is over. County attorneys attending a convention of the Kansas bar association in Wichita Saturday were told by Roland Boynston, attorney general, that since both the supreme court and his own office upheld the statute prohibiting Sunday shows, there was no alternative but to enforce it.

It was argued that action should be taken only when a signed complaint had been presented, but others declared that in the absence of a complaint, the county attorney should sign one and proceed against the theatre owner upon his own signature. This procedure, according to several attorneys, would then make it mandatory for them to instigate proceedings against other blue law violators.

George Adams, county attorney in Wichita, has announced that Sunday shows cannot operate in Wichita after July 4. The Wichita retail merchants' association has protested the order and is backing the theatre men in their fight, the merchants' association voting to gather evidence against all other violators of the blue laws if Adams carries out his threat. Adams declares that complaints against other violators of the Sunday labor law will receive the same attention.

houses disposed of. In addition, the independents are reimbursing Fox for all expenditures made on alterations and new equipment since they were purchased two years ago in the move to build up the New York Fox holdings to 200.

The reported antagonistic attitude of many local independents to the New York Fox film exchange since the theatre division invaded the local field is understood to have developed into a situation whereby Fox product was turned out of many important booking situations. This, it is said, is one of the influencing factors for their re-sale to former owners.

The original plan to invade the New York independent field was authored by the old regime at Fox and when the new management, headed by Harley Clarke, took over the reins one year ago, it found itself saddled with a difficult proposition, it is understood, which it since has straightened out to a considerable extent.

Gleason Elected President Of Catholic M. P. Guild

James Gleason, actor, who has been actively identified with the Catholic Motion Picture Guild of America for the past two years, was unanimously elected president when the members held the election of officers for the new year which begins June 1.

Father Mullins, chaplain and founder of the Guild, following Gleason's acceptance, welcomed him to his new office.

The chaplain also expressed appreciation of the work accomplished by the retiring president, James Ryan, during his two years in office. The new vice-presidents elected are: Johnny Hines, Neil Hamilton, C. E. Sullivan and Winfield R. Sheehan. May McAvoy was retained as treasurer.

27 Adverse Bills Killed

During this year's session of the California legislature, 27 bills adverse to the industry, of which seven were termed "most menacing," were either defeated, nullified by amendments, or killed in committee.

Thomas D. Van Osten, secretary of Allied Amusements of California, headquarters in San Francisco, led the opposition.

Radio Units Lose $500,000 for WB

amortization and depreciation, totaled $3,655,659, equal to more than 2.24 times the consolidated interest charges.

Amortization and depreciation of fixed assets showed a sharp drop from the preceding quarter, amounting to $2,524,328, compared with $9,731,217 in the quarter ended November 29, 1930. During the quarter ended February 28, a net charge of $2,898,000 was made direct to surplus, representing charges of Brunswick Radio applied to prior periods and loss on capital assets.

Consolidated net earnings of Warners for six months ended February 28 were $3,083,397, exclusive of losses sustained by radio operations. Earned surplus was $9,007,220, against $12,504,559 in preceding quarter and $16,976,576 in corresponding quarter of 1930.

Commenting on the report, Harry M. Warner pointed out that the company had decided to set up reserves on the books of Brunswick for accounts receivable and all possible losses which might arise owing to depreciation of inventories.

In view of losses recorded by Brunswick and National Radio, reported difficulties of the company to arrange new financing with commercial banks and the exit from the scene of Goldman, Sachs and Hayden, Stone, sale of the company's radio interests was pointed out in many quarters as the solution of the company's difficulties—difficulties which are said to have caused Warner common to drop to 4¾ from a high for this year of 20¾, and forced preferred shares down to 15 from a high of 40½, and also causing depreciation of from 74½ to about 30 in the 6 per cent convertible debentures.

Comparison of the balance sheet as of February 28, 1931, with that of November 29, 1930, reveals a gain of $5,124,920 in net working capital, showing a current ratio of assets to liabilities of more than 2.07 to 1. Total current assets were $33,962,909, compared with current liabilities of $16,330,359. On November 29, 1930, current assets of $35,680,869 compared with current liabilities of $23,173,239. Net working capital on February 28, 1931, was $17,632,550, against $12,507,630 on November 29, 1930. Cash on hand totaled $4,939,405 on February 28, compared with $6,169,982 at the end of the preceding quarter.

Warners expect West Coast studio merging to result in a saving of approximately $1,000,000 per year.

A vital reason advanced, aside from the economic, for the consolidation, was the feeling that cooperation was not all that it might be in two studios under a joint control, and the dividing line was too strict.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

SOUND TALKS

Testing Sound Distribution

By F. H. RICHARDSON

How long has it been since you thoroughly tested the sound distribution in your theatre?

Do you visit all parts of your auditorium once each week, listening carefully to make sure the sound is the same everywhere?

Are you very, very certain there are no "dead" spots—spots or areas in which the sound is low?

If you have a wide auditorium are you certain that there is not a spot on either side, about half way from center to side, where the sound is low?

If you have a wide auditorium and it is impossible to have thorough evenness of distribution with the horn equipment you have, do you locate the relatively dead area to each extreme side front, that being the seats usually last occupied, and the seats that usually remain empty if any do?

How about the sound in your balcony, if you have one? Does it compare favorably with the sound on the main floor? If not, have you made every possible effort to have it as good as it possibly can be without too much injury to the main floor effect?

Have you a maple or other hardwood stage floor, with screen located at rear of stage? If so, you may cure tendency to echo or rebound by covering the said floor with wool floor cloth, and that with painted cloth, both of which may be quickly removed when necessary.

And you, Mr. Small Theatre Exhibitor: Did you depend upon your own knowledge and "home talent" when fitting up your auditorium for sound, or did you secure the advice of a competent sound engineer? Unless you are yourself expert in acoustics the first named plan leads to poor to bad results, which leads in turn to decreased box office income.

Having the advice of a real sound engineer costs real money, true; but if you spend $250 and expenses, say a total of $350, for such advice, with result that you have perfect sound in your theatre, it won't take long to get the $350 back at the box office, or very long, even though the cost be double that.

However, remember this: The thing must be done right, which means that you must have a real engineer. Better seek advice as to whom to employ, and require a guarantee from him as to excellence of results if his advice is faithfully followed. Of course, if you install the sound equipment of a company which supplies this advice, well and good.

Another thing: If your sound is imperfect because of reverberation or other auditorium faults which might be cured, and you permit the imperfection to be foisted upon your audiences merely because of the fact that it would cost money to remedy them, has it not occurred to you that it also costs your box office money to have them remain? Better think that matter over good and plenty.

If a sound fault which might be remedied at a cost of say $500 is costing you an average of, say, $2 a day in lost business (which is well within the possible facts) it would only require 250 days to get your $500 back, and thereafter you would be ahead of the game two perfectly good dollars so long as you operate that theatre.

Don't imagine the foregoing is mere vaporings of imagination. People go to theatres to be entertained and amused. If the sound be poor it is more or less annoying, according to the amount of fault present. True, the patron may not know what is wrong, or even that anything is wrong. He or she may only know that it "didn't sound so good," but next time he or she feels the urge of the theatre, the urge is not nearly so keen as it would be had the sound been perfect, and just that lack of keenness may cost the exhibitor one, two or maybe more admissions from that one family. That's the way it actually works, Mr. Exhibitor, as a moment of consideration should and doubtless will convince you.

Therefore, it is up to the exhibitor, the manager and the projectionist to see to it that the sound is just as nearly perfect as it is possible to have it. Less than that means financial loss, which may be large or small, viewed as a daily loss, but is steady. And it is the steady loss that, small though it may be per day, not infrequently changes the figures in the books to the dreaded red.

Note

Because of the fact that the Bluebook School questions were inadvertantly omitted for two consecutive weeks, the answers will now, in order to effect a balance, be also omitted for two weeks.

JUST WHY IS THIS SO!

I note in the Annual Report of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences the following divisions of membership: Actors' Branch, Directors' Branch, Producers' Branch, Technicians' Branch, Writers' Branch, Special Membership and Honorary Membership.

I cannot but wonder as to why the ultimate of everything in the motion picture industry, the theatre, has been apparently ignored.

Theatre people are not technicians, you reply? Well, that may or may not be true, but it does seem to me they are just as much technicians as are some of the members of the branches listed. Moreover, unless the theatre manager and the projectionist work with a very high degree of skill and exhibit at least a considerable amount of technique what is going to happen to the results of the work of all those listed in the Academy membership rolls?

Please understand this is not intended as carping criticism. It is only a good natured pointing out of the cold fact that whereas Hollywood is itself quite an item in the industry, still it is far, far from being the whole works.

Possibly I am wrong in assuming that theatre managers and projectionists have just as much right to membership in such a body as have, for example, actors. If so, let the Academy set forth just reasons why that is so, and thereafter accept my most 'umble apology.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 84.—What must be understood before the action of the disc record pickup system can itself be understood? Describe the fundamental law upon which the disc record pickup sound system is based. In just what manner is or may magnetism be altered in its action? Tell us just in what way sound waves are recorded in disc record grooves. What two things make the Western Electric disc record pickup possible?

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

A remarkable situation has come about in St. Louis—a state of affairs that promises to become an influencing factor in every community in this country. A few months ago in a survey made to determine how many theatres were booking selective programs for children's matinees or family Friday nights it was found that Missouri ranked at the very bottom of the list. In MOTION PICTURE HERALD of March 7 we quoted the statistics. New York ranked first with 43 theatres offering regular programs of endorsed pictures; Pennsylvania was second in the schedule, with Georgia and Florida next. Missouri had one co-operating theatre.

In the meanwhile the kettle boiled over in St. Louis. The highly organized women's groups of the city were determined that this state of affairs should stop. They decided to organize a Better Films Council and called upon the presidents, and in some cases the motion picture chairmen, of over 30 clubs and organizations.

These included the Parent Teachers' Congress, the Child Conservation Conference, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, the Jewish Council, the Board of Religious Organizations, the College Club, the Wednesday Club, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the War Mothers and a number of other smaller units. The Council came into being last November. Previous to its organization each club or unit had its own motion picture committee and it was to avoid duplication of effort that the Council was formed—a central organization through which all the groups could reach the city's motion picture interests through a concentration of activity. Theatre managers, Film Boards of Trade, and motion picture men generally accorded the Better Films Council a cordial reception.

In the months that have intervened theatre men and club women have met at luncheon meetings, each contributing constructively to the plans of procedure. The exhibitors agreed to use the lists of endorsed pictures sent out by the reviewing committees of the Catholic Alumnae and the General Federation of Women's Clubs. The Council arranged for a committee of two women each, one of whom was to be a member of the Parent Teachers' Congress to call regularly on the exhibitor, learn what his Friday program was to be and work for its support through the Council. This was planned with the definite objective of building up family trade in the theatres, a boon to the theatre man and a satisfaction to the thoughtful citizens of the community.

Theatre Men's Reaction

The influence of the whole movement was immediately apparent. New audiences poured into the theatres. Theatre owners became enthusiastic. Many of them changed their programs so that Friday night would be a night by itself, rather than one night on a three-day showing of a picture. The new schedule permitted more freedom in selecting pictures. In one section of the city where the Parent Teachers and other clubs had little representation, the Council asked for support from the churches and Americanization clubs in the neighborhood. This happened in a neighborhood where the theatre patronage was mostly foreign.

Newspaper Announcements

At the request of the Council the theatres published their complete programs in the newspapers. The advertisements for Friday of last week showed the following results: 51 theatres showed 86 features. Out of 50 features shown in unaffiliated theatres, there were four that were questionable, but these only from the family-night standpoint. In the affiliated theatres (the St. Louis Amusement Company, owned by Warner Brothers), 6 second-run theatres running the same program 7 days showed double feature programs of recommended pictures, and the entire circuit showed only 2 pictures out of 36 on which there was any question. This is a remarkable showing when protection, availability, etc., are taken into consideration. Of course, all of the pictures announced were not recommended for children or for family, but they had received endorsement from one or more of the national reviewing committees.

During last week, for instance, Paramount-Publix screened "Tom Sawyer" with a special program of short subjects and reported a juvenile attendance never equalled in any first-run theatre in St. Louis. "Tom Sawyer" was supported on its way through the subsequent runs by the combined groups in the Council. Paramount then screened "Skippy" and invited the Council to attend a private showing to criticize the stageshow that was to accompany it. The show was reported excellent, and the attendance was so large the entire program was held over a second week. The same procedure was followed with "The Millionaire," members of the Council attending the preview and the first showing, to check up on the stageshow. This program was reported excellent and recommended enthusiastically down the line through all the organizations.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, accepting its part in this fine civic undertaking, invited Council members to see "Trader Horn," which won, as a result, the finest quality of volunteer exploitation, which will be continued while the picture plays through the neighborhood theatres.

"Cimarron" was not screened but was given splendid support by the Council whose members had already received full reports from the national preview groups rating it with the highest marks of endorsement. In one instance the St. Louis Amusement Company booked Clara Bow in "No Limit" with "Cimarron" on a family Friday night. Here were two pictures that threw an endorsed program out of balance. It pointed a lesson to the other theatre managers of the city who decided to play "Cimarron" on a single feature program.

"Abraham Lincoln" was screened for the Council and their advice was asked on the selection of short subjects to accompany the picture when it played first run. This superb epic of the screen had faltered at the box-office but the support given by the combined groups was unmistakably apparent. As a result, the Council had requested the picture for neighborhood theatres and the St. Louis Amusement Company will book it over their circuit with suitable supporting program. "Rango" will follow "Lincoln," and "The Millionaire" will go over the circuit with Chaplin's "City Lights."

Advertising Changes

With the increased number of higher class pictures finding their way into the city's amusement houses it was natural for advertising to jump to an immediate higher level. Advertising men realizing that they had a definite responsibility to measure up to this whole campaign changed the tenor of their announcements.

The result in total is a finer grade of showmanship in St. Louis!

A Successful Experiment

A six-months' period has elapsed since the undertaking of this experiment, a long enough time for astute business men and club women to know whether or not the plan is soundly practical and socially successful. Both factions are enthusiastically agreed that the reversal of policy has worked a happy miracle in St. Louis. The theatre managers are filling their houses with a new, higher type audience. The organized public is delighted with the industry's courteous and tireless cooperation. The newspapers, radio stations and club papers are praising this intelligent demonstration of effective public relations, and are giving more space and time to film reviews.

St. Louis, from the last place on the list has sprung forward to the first and most honored position. Her 60 cooperating theatres outnumber those in the state of New York . . . an enviable and noteworthy achievement!

Fightin' Brothers

The new Coogan boy doesn't want any advice, thank you, from that famous movie actor elder brother of his.

Jackie tried to give counsel, Photoplay reports, when young Bobbie was making "Skippy." And it didn't set well at all.

"Say," said Bobbie to his big brother, "I wish you weren't even here."

After that set-to, Jackie was kept off the lot and Bobbie was allowed to develop his own talents.

Much difficulty was encountered in making one scene. It was a fight between Bobbie and Jackie Searle, the boy who had the "sissy" part. Bobbie had played with Searle (no "sissy" in real life) for several months, and liked him. So he wouldn't fight—at least, not realistically enough for screen purposes.

"I can't hit him. I like him," Bobbie said when he was admonished.

American Films with French Dialogue Ruled Out by Actors

French Actors' Union, of Paris, has voted a boycott on American films dubbed with French dialogue. U. S. pictures in which French artists are used have also been accorded a thumbs-down policy by the Union des Artistes. French players appearing in American pictures in which French versions are made will be expelled from the union.

Action of the union is to discourage the use in France of voices of French players in connection with the making of French versions of American talkers. "Fraudulent artistic compromise and degrading to the French actor," is the manner in which the Actors' Union describes the practice.

Affairs of Annabelle

(Fox)

Breezy Farce Comedy

This is the picture which as a stage musical, was known as "Good Gracious, Annabelle," for some reason not deemed a good screen title. Successive changes made it "All Women Are Hungry" then "All Women Are Naughty" later "Miss Behaving" and finally it was filmed as "Two May Play." The first preview, however, found still another and somewhat unexpected change, this time to "She Wears the Pants." It is understood Jeanette MacDonald, among others, protested this "Pants" label and the latest, and it is hoped, last title reads "Affairs of Annabelle."

Whatever difficulty has been encountered in renaming "Good Gracious, Annabelle," may likely be the only trouble Fox will have with this breezy farce-comedy. It is a delightful bit of nonsense ably written and directed, with a top-notch cast. Dialogue by Leon Gordon sparkles and the laughs are fast and furious.

The story itself might be called lightweight. It revolves around the attempts to recover a few shares of stock upon which the control of a rich mining enterprize rests. Jeanette MacDonald was given the stock by her husband of 11 hours who cautioned her never to part with it. Her extravagance necessitates her pledging the shares for a loan of $700, and the stock falls into the hands of her husband's miliionaire rival. News of the husband's contemplated return cause Jeanette to exert every effort toward the stock's recovery. To this end she poses as a cook and obtains employment in the millionaire's home.

Meanwhile the husband returns and, when shaven of his beard, turns out to be Victor McLaglen. He follows Jeanette into his rival's employ as a yacht captain. Without his hirsute adornment, he escapes recognition. Jeanette, however, could not be expected to know him. She only saw him for a few hours when she married him several years before. Their wedding was dictated by his desire to avoid compromising her after they had been storm-bound alone in his mountain cabin.

The wealthy household in which they both work is highly farcical. The servants have servants and no one is allowed to work over three hours a day. How Jeanette gets the stock and falls in love with her own husband leads to an amusing ending.

Jeanette MacDonald's performance is thoroughly delightful. Her sense of comedy is fine and her place among the screen's leading comedians seems assured. She has only one song, the rendition of which is nicely spotted in the action.

Roland Young takes second honors with his portrayal of the perpetually drunken millionaire. Here is something new in drunks, a humorous, semi-villainous character played with distinction and finesse.

Victor McLaglen makes his routine assignment outstanding and Sam Hardy and Ruth Warren shine in minor roles.

The screen could do with a lot more farces of the generally high calibre of "Affairs of Annabelle."

Avoid comedy shorts in supporting program.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Alfred Werker. From Clare Kummer's stage play "Good Gracious Annabelle." Adaptation and dialogue by Leon Gordon. Photographed by Charles Clarke. Associate Producer, William Goetz. Release date, June 21, 1931. Footage, 7110. Running time, 79 minutes.

Amusing

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

A really amusing film is the logical outcome of a story which contains the entertaining qualities of "The Bridegroom's Widow," the stage play from which it was adapted. Richard Eichberg, who directed, has often proved his worth with the farcical comedy type and this must certainly be reckoned as his brightest effort to date, his one fault being that of excessive length. He has permitted it rather to run to seed with the result that the end hangs fire and is inclined to be tedious. Interpolated songs tend to retard the story.

The locale is New York and a concession to the American public lies in the fact that dollars and cents are often quoted rather than their British equivalents.

The story revolves around a wealthy young New Yorker, George Brown, who, faced with a marriage distasteful to him, spends the eve of his wedding on the rampage, only to discover in the morning that during his orgy he has made an alliance with a little night club dancer. Following upon an unholy mix-up with two girls, George fights his wife's pugilistic fiance, the two disappear into a nearby stream and a detective arrives to inquire into their disappearance. The man is interested in spiritualism and it is the ensuing seance, when the two "victims" reappear very much alive, which provides the film's real high light.

The film is notable for the very auspicious debut on the British screen of Gene Gerrard, well known in England on the musical comedy stage. He puts plenty of pep and personality into his performance. Muriel Angelus is good as the wife, though she is not photographed too well and her singing voice is not good. The others give excellent support with George Gee as a delightfully funny detective.

Suitably cut, this film should rank with some of the best of British light entertainment.

Produced by British International. Distributed by Wardour Films. Directed by Richard Eichberg. Adaptation by Walter Mycroft and Frederick Jackson. Footage, 7,560. Running time, 84 minutes.

Strong Detective Thriller

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

This adaptation of the well known Agatha Christie novel is one of the slickest pieces of work turned out of the Hagen studios at Twickenham. It has all the good points of Hagen's "House of the Arrow" and "The Silent Cardinal" horses of the same color from the same stable, but few of their bad ones. Leslie Hiscott, who directed, has contrived to get this story moving. This is fortunate for the whole of its development is confined to two or three interior sets.

A French detective, and a Scotland Yard sleuth walk into the story; the former is in search of romance, the latter detailed to investigate rumors concerning the tragic death of a local citizen. Poirot, the Frenchman, played with amazing skill by Austin Trevor, has the brains; the Scotland Yard man is a pig-headed dude. When the complications, including the mysterious death of the dead man's widow and the simultaneous disappearance of the reckless and impoverished son of the local squire, begin to make matters hum, Poirot decides to take a close interest in affairs. It transpires that the dead woman had confessed before her death to having murdered her husband. Since that time she has been paying blackmail to a knowedgeable party. Before dying, as it transpires by her own hand, she had posted a letter to the local squire naming the blackmailer. The squire is found later the same day dead in his study grasping a fragment of the envelope which has contained this letter. Poirot detects that the local doctor, named in the letter, murdered the squire and retrieved the letter, and that, to prove an alibi, he set a dictaphone going with a voice record of the squire's after having committed the crime, so that, while he (the doctor) mixed with other members of the squire's house party, the murdered squire was, according to eavesdropping servants, holding "a heated conversation with some one inside the locked study." Poirot works out the whole crime, and being in love with the doctor's sister, promises to hold his silence if the doctor will "not wake up in the morning."

To the very last hundred feet, the mystery is preserved, almost every member of the house party being alternately under suspicion. It is an ingenious story treated with much imagination, and there is little doubt that it will prove a sound booking proposition in its class. Well dressed and photographed, it reveals Twickenham on the up grade. Effective love and comedy stuff is made relevant.

Fox

For City Audiences

Whatever popularity this picture achieves will be due almost entirely to the success of "What Price Glory" and "The Cock-Eyed World," also Captain Flagg and Sergeant Quirt pictures.

The story, if it may be called that, is extremely episodic. The locale ranges from Sweden to the Mediterranean, via Brooklyn, New York and Nicaragua. The picture opens with shots of Quirt (Edmund Lowe) and Flagg (Victor McLagden) fighting in the World War, then in Panama. These are emblematic of their first two pictures. After this they are seen in Brooklyn, where MacLaglen is a recruiting officer in the Marines and Lowe runs a Turkish bath parlor for women. When Lowe gets in a jam, MacLaglen helps him out by having him join the Marines again.

From here the boys go to Sweden, where in a land of snow and ice they find the warm and alluring Greta Nissen, a cafe entertainer. Here they celebrate Christmas by trying to win the affections of Miss Nissen. It is in this sequence that El Brendel steals the show by dividing comedy honors with a live monkey that he keeps hidden in his trousers. When Miss Nissen's giant sweetheart returns home unexpectedly the lads are thrown out of the place.

Next we find the arch-rivals in Nicaragua, where they aid the natives in reconstructing their homes, etc. Just why this sequence was injected into the story will no doubt puzzle many. Perhaps it was to sooth the ire of the Marine Corps over the many liberties taken in portraying the various characters who ostensibly were members of that group.

On the shores of the Mediterranean the lads again find Miss Nissen. She is now the wife of Prince Hassan (Bela Lugosi), who has a large harem. The lads finally get into the place, even El Brendel, who finds the many wives anxious to hear his stories. Lowe and MacLaglen both make a play for Miss Nissen and are interrupted in their amours when Lugosi shows up unexpectedly. As a result they flee from the palace for a final fadeout.

The comedy honors in the picture fall to El Brendel. Lowe and MacLaglen handle difficult roles capably, but they have little to work with. Many gag situations have been injected into the story and they are for the most part laughable. Miss Nissen, as the blonde charmer, is most adequate in her role. Fifi Dorsay, Jesse DeVorska and Marjorie White are also in the cast, but they have little to do.

The dialogue is extremely broad at times and various subterfuges have been used to keep it from being to ribald. For instance, Quirt and Flagg call each other "custards" or "quinces," instead of using words which might lean toward the profane. The dialogue in the love scenes consists of both Miss Nissen and the boys "meowing" to each other. The effect is unusual, to say the least.

City audiences may get a kick out of this talker, but the rural audiences will possibly find it too rough. Intensive remakes and cutting are perhaps responsible for its present condition.

Use comedy shorts with strong name casts for best results.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Production manager, Archibald Buchanan. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Story and dialogue by Barry Conners. Photography by Lucien Andriot. Sound engineer, George H. Leverett. Settings by David Hall. Release date, May 31, 1931. Footage, 6,441. Running time, 72 minutes.

Farina 's Gone

A star known the country over at the age of three, and now, eleven years old, flung on the discard. An old story again takes life with "Farina," otherwise Allen Clayton Hoskins, the negro boy who suffered outrages in "Our Gang" comedies, not the least of those outrages being the necessity of dressing up as a girl, even to kinky pigtails.

"Nine years ago there was practically nothing to this tot but huge, rolling eyes and a mass of kinky woolen hair," says Jimmy Quirk's Photoplay. "It was christened Farina, dressed in rags and immediately hit in the face with a custard pie. Today, a spindly colored boy of eleven, Master Hoskins is graduated from the gang because he is no longer little and cute.

"Few actors can say that at three they were knocking 'em dead all over the United States—that people by the thousands went to picture theatres to see them instead of the feature. Farina can.

"Farina fascinated us because he was the perfect incarnation of poor, witless man's struggles against inscrutable, and very rough and dirty, fate. What a sucker Farina's pictures made of the silly movie 'plots.'

White Shoulders

(Radio)

Interesting Domestic Drama

A novel twist in the husband's desire for revenge makes "White Shoulders" better than average screen entertainment.

Mary Astor is introduced as an actress in financial straits, a condition for which the term "at leisure" was coined. Attracted by the prospect of a square meal, she joins her friend, Kitty Kelly, in crashing a party given by Jack Holt.

Holt has but recently returned to New York, a multi-millionaire. His lonely years as a mining engineer have created a desire for the companionship of "white shoulders." As a result he keeps open house and all are welcome at his lavish parties.

One sight of Mary Astor's lovely shoulders and Holt proposes. Mary protests that she doesn't love him but is overruled. It is to the credit of all concerned that this hasty marriage is made believable.

Mary and Holt leave on their European honeymoon. Though he has showered her with expensive gifts and she lives in luxury, Mary has still to fall in love with her husband. She merely feels gratitude and respect for him. Then she meets Ricardo Cortez, who persuades her to leave Holt and come with him to Paris.

Enraged at his wife's desertion, Holt launches an investigation which reveals that Mary's former husband did not divorce her as he had been informed. Cortez, it is discovered, has a long criminal record. Armed with this information, Holt calls on Mary and Cortez in Paris, and condemns them to live with each other twenty-four hours of every day. Mary refuses to believe Holt's charges against Cortez until she finds he has stolen the jewels her husband gave her, which revelation changes her love to hatred.

Holt's revenge works even better than planned. Back in New York, Mary returns to the stage to support Cortez, now a drunkard. Then she encounters the actor who is still her legal husband, and fearing he will blackmail Holt, begs the millionaire to call off his men. Mary plans a return to her first husband and at a sacrifice of her happiness, further trouble will be averted.

While she is in Holt's apartment, her actor-husband goes to her rooms. There he finds the drunken Cortez and together they plan to steal Mary's jewels. But Cortez doublecrosses the actor, killing him after he opens the wall safe. Mary comes home to find Cortez being taken to prison. Meanwhile Holt learns he still loves Mary and figures she must love him or she wouldn't have offered such a sacrifice for his sake. A satisfactory ending is thereby achieved.

The theme is delicate and so handled by Melville Brown, the director, and J. Walter Ruben, responsible for the adaptation of the Rex Beach original. It is regrettable, however, that what might have been the most powerful scenes in the picture were omitted. Much could have been realized by enacting, rather than talking about, the degeneration of Cortez and Miss Astor under the surveillance of Holt's detectives. It should have been a genuinely interesting study in psychological reactions, not just an incident in the plot. Glossing over it leaves one with the sense of something lacking.

Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez are both splendid in their roles. Jack Holt slightly overplays the melodramatics of the husband. Sidney Toler has little to do as the chief of detectives. Into the capable hands of Kitty Kelly falls all of the comedy relief.

This is adult and thought-provoking drama. It should do much in establishing the talents of the charming Mary Astor as a stellar personality.

Comedy De Luxe

[Reviewed in London by HERALD Representative]

Here is a fine conglomeration of comedy, burlesque, slapstick, song and dance, with Lupino Lane back again as a first-rate entertainer. Lane directs and plays the role of a henpecked husband of a former widow with five children. They take a holiday at Blackpool, England's most popular working-class resort, and what a holiday!

The poor little mut gets mixed up with dames and conspirators; complication follows complication until at last the whole family get themselves accidentally received by the Mayor and Corporation, who present them with a fat check and a silver cup. Presumably they make a getaway before the "Civic Bugs" discover their error.

From bathing in the kitchen sink at home to landing faultlessly in an aerial glider, Lane runs the whole gamut of acrobatics, and how. The London presentation drew one long laugh all through. Most of the action is in the open, and though the value of the picture here is trebled by local backgrounds, the fun of the thing should put it right over everywhere. The Gaumont output of late has been on the raw side, and this one makes a very welcome break.

Produced by Gaumont British. Distributed by the Gaumont Co. Directed by Lupino Lane. Music by Herman Darewski's Band. Footage, 6,500. Running time, 72 minutes.

Never the Twain Shall Meet

(MGM)

Intelligent Adult Production

Chalk up another hit for Metro and W. S. Van Dyke. They have taken an old property from which all novelty has long since vanished and breathed new life on it. Intelligence is manifested in every department and, despite its many imitators, "Never the Twain Shall Meet" is still a leading drama of the boy-gone-native school.

The story, as you remember, deals with the adoption of a wild island girl upon the suicide of her father. She becomes the ward of a young member of civilized society who, for love of her, returns to her island home and attempts to live as a native. It is the ancient struggle of a white man in the tropics and his fight against deterioration, a battle he is on the point of losing when a girl from home intervenes.

In investing such now trite story material with new interest, Van Dyke's always capable direction is aided substantially by a good script and believable dialogue. The photography is likewise excellent.

Unusually fine performances come from every member of the large cast, with the work of the three principals something to write home about. Leslie Howard plays the man who attempts to defy the tradition of East and West. It is a role which offers the actor a wide scope and Howard takes full advantage of his opportunities. He is particularly good in the final scenes where man and gentleman come to conflict with the relentless tropics. Howard's work in this rivals his authoritative portrayal in "Outward Bound."

Considering that Conchita Montenegro essays her first major role as the island girl, her portrayal is exceptionally well done. She is not a beauty in the strictest sense of the word, but she is exotic and provocative, yet appealing. Unquestionably she will be difficult to cast in subsequent appearances, but with suitable vehicles should prove a popular player.

In Karen Morley, Metro has an actress of tremendous potentialities. She is a sensation in the sympathetic part of the English sweetheart who brings about Howard's regeneration. She reads her lines with rare understanding and the play of emotions are beautifully enacted. No frozen faced actress this Karen Morley. She deserves close attention.

Others of import, though in smaller assignments, include C. Aubrey Smith, Mitchell Lewis, Hale Hamilton and Clyde Cook, whose beachcomber is particularly outstanding.

Almost any good comedy or novelty shorts to fill. But no travelogues.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. A Cosmopolitan production. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke. From the story by Peter B. Kyne. Dialogue and continuity by Edwin Justus Mayer. Additional dialogue by Ruth Cummings and John Lynch. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Wardrobe by Rene Hubert. Photographed by Merritt B. Gerstad. SHORTS

Stout Hearts and Willing Hands

(RKO Pathe)

Fine

If the rest on the list hold to this standard, there is something for the rooster to crow about. The Masquer comedies, and this one is a great play on the old-time heavy melo of little Nell and all the etceteras. The cast: Frank Fay, Lew Cody, Laura La Plante, Mary Carr, Alec B. Francis. That's only the leading player list. The original Keystone Kops are in it, and more. Bryan Foy gets credit for the direction and he dserves plenty of it. This is great stuff. —Running time, 20 minutes.

Kings or Better

(Columbia)

A Real Laugh

This is perhaps the most amusing of Eddie Buzzell's Bedtime Stories for Grownups. The king does a little private abdication act and his royal family follows him later into exile. The smart Buzzell remarks are really funny, running through the burlesque story. Decidedly worth while for a laugh spot on any bill. —Running time, 8 minutes.

The Moose Hunt

(Columbia-Disney)

Great

Here is a great little cartoon comedy number, with Mickey Mouse himself featured in the stellar role of moose hunter. Only the moose turns around and proceeds to hunt Mickey and his hound. The lines are sure-fire and the synchronization touches the Disney par, which is sufficient. Birds, fleas and a skunk for good measure supply the atmosphere. A fine laugh number. Play it, of course.

That's News To Me

(RKO Pathe)

Quite Good

Another of the new series featuring Frank McHugh, and as a play on the usual newspaper story, should get over very well. Helen Jerome Eddy, Walter Percival and James Donlan do excellently in support of McHugh. The reporter promises to quit the newspaper business but that something or other seems to hold him despite his vows to his wife. A good number.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Monkey Whoopee

(Talking Picture Epics)

Fine

Dr. Ditmars, famed animal man, gives a little discourse on the great ancestor, monkey, assisted by his daughter. At least two dozen different varieties of the tricky little animals are seen and their habits described by the doctor. He makes it interesting, and very much alive. A good short on any bill.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Streets of Cairo

(Columbia-Bray)

Interesting

This number of the "Rambling Reporter" series of travelogues becomes more interesting than most by reason of concentration on the habits of the people who throng the Cairo streets, rather than on scenery alone. A pleasant scenic with the live interest of a people strange to Western eyes.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Play Ball

(RKO Pathe)

Great

Here is a cartoon comedy number of the Van Beuren Aesop Fable series which is a real laugh getter. All the animals have a great time playing ball, and the audience should extract a number of laughs and good fun from the short. Clever ideas and good lines do their share, in addition to fast music.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Ragtime

(MGM)

Fair

A "Flip the Frog" number which can rate only as another cartoon. Mr. Frog arrives at the home of his sweetheart with many musical instruments. The animals dance on the lawn and the whole house is wakened. Old Mrs. Cow "moos" for the police and Flip is carted off to learn better manners. A fair cartoon.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Fight to Live

(Talking Picture Epics)

Fascinating

A startlingly thrilling picture of the theme of life, only the strong survive, as practiced in the depths of the sea. Dr. Ditmars, the animal authority, presents an exciting film, which is perhaps one of the most unusual ever shown, of the strange lives of fish. A really splendid number.—Running time, 8 minutes.

MUSIC AND TALENT

ACTS TO BOOK INDIVIDUAL HOUSES

STAGE SHOWS

Chicago Oriental

Week ending May 22

Duke Ellington came back to the Oriental this week. By a strange coincidence the public did, too.

Ellington's program is identical to the winter routine he offered when last here, except for the substitution of a tune or two for whatever may have been eliminated. The crowds that are packing the theatre appear to be well entertained, and Mr. Ellington and his boys are hard put to it in giving them what they demand in the brief 45 minutes allotted him. Applause is insistent and unrelenting, and the result is that so many encores are drawn from the entertainers that on the program's third day in Chicago the Oriental was still running almost 30 minutes behind its normal schedule.

Except for the band and its appurtenances, which include one singer and a dance trio, no other act is offered with this stage show. Ellington's troupe is the show. What the boys do with music is the entertainment and the payoff. The crowds neither ask nor expect more than that; but it was obvious that they did want more of what they had had. They were delighted to see music made a plaything—rather than a task—of musicians. They were delighted to see familiar, vivacious tunes made fantistic and barbarous; to see slow-moving, old tunes take on life and meaning and new, amazing rhythms under the fingers and lips of these young masters from Harlem. They were delighted to see Music subdued and bent to the wills of a bunch of peppy colored boys who know how. That's why business at the Oriental is good this week—for a change.

Ellington opens his show with "Liza," an old favorite with his audiences; swings quickly into his own amazing interpretation of "The Peanut Vender," and then slows down to that melancholy "Mood Indigo," while the blue and purple lights come on and flood the stage.

Miss Ivy Anderson breaks in at this point and has a most difficult time getting off that stage, once she has been on. Her opening number, "You're Lucky to Me," won her five encores, and when, finally, she did manage to escape, it was only against the will of a completely won-over audience.

"Echo from the Jungle" was the next orchestra contribution, and it afforded an opportunity for the Duke to show off some of his inimitable soloists. "The Three Brown Spots" followed and, singly and together, contributed some of the fastest and cleverest tap dancing the Oriental stage has supported. The audience demanded—and received—an encore from the Spots.

"Dinah" was intended to conclude the Duke's program, but his own orchestration of "St. Louis Blues" was the tune that actually did conclude it. It was offered to a music-hungry audience to stop their clamoring, but even it left the Duke with an audience behind him reluctant to see him go.

Baby Rose Marie

Baby, who has endeared herself in the hearts of millions of people throughout the United States with her sensational delivery of singing songs is known as the highest paid juvenile songstress n the country. She has played and been featured in theatres in all principal cities and is now being featured in Warner-Stanley theatres. She is only six years old and has been an NBC radio star for the past year.

Can you imagine a little girl of six receiving, during a period of six weeks, 20,000 letters from fans? Well she has and is still receiving plenty each week.

Baby will be featured at the Alamac Hotel, Lake Hopatcong, N. J., for the summer months and NBC is putting in a special wire so that fans can continue hearing her sweet voice over the air.

Marlo Music Corporation Opens New Offices in N. Y.

George M. Marlo, former professional manager of DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, has formed a music publishing firm, to be known as Marlo Music Corp., with offices at 745 7th Ave., New York.

Authors and composers who have placed songs with him are Gus Kahn, Richard A. Whiting and Harry Akst, who wrote Marlo's first number, "It's a Long Time Between Kisses," and Max Rich, Kate Smith and Al Hoffman, who collaborated on "Makin' Faces at the Man in the Moon."

Plan Now to Travel as Units This Summer

Artists, Headed by Advance Man, Will Play Independents On Percentage

By ED DAWSON

Feature vaudevillians, with the summer season ahead and consequently a paucity of bookings, have worked out a plan for playing independent theatres of the country during the warm period.

It is understood that under this arrangement the acts, traveling as units, will play on percentage. They feel, it is said, that it is wiser to take the gamble than to spend the summer in inactivity.

The plan, if it functions, is considered favorable to the independent houses which in many instances have been unable to get supplementary entertainment on terms considered within their budgets.

In certain localities, it is said that the plan has been tested, although no results have been made public.

Three, four or five acts will comprise a unit, with an advance man in charge of bookings. Overhead is being held to a minimum, it is said. This is being done, according to this department's informants, so that an equitable agreement may be reached with exhibitors.

Artists have expressed the hope that the plan will prove successful, feeling that it will keep a few hundred of their brotherhood in employment this summer.

Music From Broadway Hits Featured on Paramount's Hour

Musical selections from "The Little Show" and "The New Moon" were featured on this week's program at the Paramount Publix "Radio Playhouse," broadcast over the Columbia chain on Tuesday. Helen Nugent, soprano, was the soloist on the hour.

The complete program:

"It Looks Like Love," orchestra; "Now You're in My Arms," Helen Nugent and Orchestra; organ solo, Jesse Crawford; "King's Horses," orchestra and voices; selections from "The Little Show," Domenico Savino's special arrangement for orchestra; "One Love," Helen Nugent and orchestra; gossip of the stage and screen, Jerry ("Closeup") Madison; "Stout Hearted Men," from "The New Moon" orchestra and chorus.

UNIFORMS FOR HOUSE ATTACHES COSTUMES FOR STAGE PRESENTATIONS BROOKS 1437 B'way N. Y. City

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending May 20

Rube Wolf and his Joyous Jesters take "Old Black Joe" from the plantation and give him a taste of the world. First the melody is played in true Southern style and then the scene shifts to Chicago, where the traveler is met with a fusilade of machine gun fire. Then music of the sea is presented, with Rube hastily donning the garb of a jolly tar. In "Spain," Rube wears an enormous hat, and this is changed for the headgear of a sultan in Turkey. A stop at Ireland is made in the musical journey, which ends at New York with a fanfare on the air "How Dry I Am."

The Fanchon & Marco offering is The Great Raymond, with a company which includes the "Sunkist Beauties." This magician, previously seen at the old Cort theatre 18 years ago, and who performed here as long ago as 31 years, puts on an act packed with amazing tricks, with sidelights of real comedy.

A Chinese setting is used for the offering of magic and the act is prefaced with the introduction of eight girl trumpeters. A divorce machine which causes a young lady to disappear, apparently into thin air, is featured and the loan of this is offered to married men.

Raynor Lehr, introduced as New York's funniest comedian, offers some spicy songs and does dances suggested by the audience. These include the breakaway, snake, fairy and "St. Vitus" dances and annex a lot of applause. The "Golden Trumpeters" offers a number on Rube's favorite instrument and do some nifty drilling.

The act comes to an end with the presentation of the Great Raymond's famous trunk trick, which he has performed all over the world. The magician gets a committee of six on the stage and has a lot of fun with this aggregation while preparations for the illusion are made. A girl in handcuffs, wearing the coat of one of the committeemen, is placed in a bag and finally in the trunk, which is roped and locked. The trunk is rolled into a tent, the magician steps inside and the girl steps out. When the trunk is opened The Great Raymond is found inside the bag, wearing both the coat and the handcuffs.

The act fills almost an hour, but seems much shorter, so absorbing is it.

The screen attraction is the comedy, "Stepping Out."

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending May 15

The show, "Winging Home," was characterized by an air of informality and intimacy when Jay Mills, visiting M. C., bade farewell to Mastbaum audiences.

The orchestra, David Ross conducting, gave a delightful presentation of "Sari." The orchestra also accompanied Chief Caupolican, of the Philadelphia Grand Opera, as he sang various selections in his powerful baritone.

The show takes its name from an act of trained doves and the white birds accomplish remarkable feats.

Thanks to the "Mary Reade Girls" and the "Mastbaum Dance Ensemble," the program had several periods of colorful and graceful entertainment. They first appeared in a "Spring Flower Number," in which the costumes represented flowers of gay colors. Later they appeared as birds with beautiful plumage.

Sylvia Froos, "blues" singer, gave a clever interpretation of the song "I'm up on a Mountain," as heard over various radio stations, including a Jewish version, a colored interpretation and the song as Rudy Vallee might sing it. She returned in a military costume and sang "King's Horses and the King's Men." The "Dance Ensemble" assisted by marching in in uniform and performing a military drill.

Jim Toney, old time comedian, returned with his usual line of conversation bordering on the vulgar.

The three 'Allison Sisters,' in spite of a few extra pounds of avoirdupois, were so light and nimble that the audience soon forgot to remark on their needed diet and heartily applauded their cartwheels and dexterous tumbling.

As a farewell, Jay Mills gave three of his most popular song hits, "Sunny Side of the Street," "Song of the Fool," and "Dancing With Tears in My Eyes," which he sang most dramatically.

"Harry Conrad's Pals" proved to be trained white doves which performed remarkably. They flew to the backs of toy animals forming a merry-go-round and sat on revolving perches, keeping their balance regardless of the speed. A flock was released from the balcony and flew down to the stage, some perching on Conrad's outstretched hand, forming an attractive finale to a very delightful show.

Milton Charles, singing organist, sang "Church in the Valley," a stage tableau showed a young mother and her son going to the little country church, with a beautiful drop representing a stained glass window forming a background for the quaint old minister and the congregation.

Milwaukee-Wisconsin

Week ending May 20

The big attraction is the personal appearance of Paul Ash in Fanchon & Marco's "Talent" Idea. It is Ash's first appearance in Milwaukee and he gets a big hand when introduced by Don Wilkins. Ash first guides the theatre orchestra through "The Russian Fancy." "Walking My Baby Back Home" is next, with Don Wilkins singing and accompanying himself on his guitar.

Gaynor and Byron perform on roller skates atop an eight-foot platform in an exceedingly agile manner. Their daring stunts are good for considerable applause.

A black-out featuring Don and Iris Wilkins, Paul Ash, George P. Wilson and Harry Savoy, whose smart humor is interjected at various times throughout the program, precedes a comedy number by Wilson, during the course of which he demonstrates his ability as a pianist.

Harry Savoy is clever and carries on a continued comic patter with the assistance of Paul Ash and Maebehan. This episode is followed by the Six Marinelli Girls, very capable gymnasts.

Savoy again takes the spot with nonsensical singing and finally a burlesque of John Barrymore, depicting Richard in the "Show of Shows."

Jeanne Carr, clever tap dancer, is followed by her mother and dad, both of whom demonstrate their ability to dust the boards in a surprisingly agile manner. For conclusion, the three go through their steps in unison and get a big hand.

Providence Fays

Week ending May 15

The "Daffydill Debutantes," Marie and Ann Clarke, with their "Life Savers," head the vaudeville at Fays this week and a snappy, colorful revue it is, calculated to spot well any place. They style themselves the "Jazzmonic Rhythm Queens" and the act proves their veracity. They are instrumentalists of unusual ability and during the routine bring out several unique features and lively effects.

A comedy from the prolific pen of "Dr. Rockwell," styled, "She's Crazy About Me," introduces Harry J. Conley, a smart comedian, and his company of four. As Rockwell is a Rhode Island boy the act pulled well. J. Francis Dooley, with Emily Fredericks and Jack Adams, offer "Just Nonsense," a combination of songs, dance and fun. The Three Page Boys, high steppers who dance as one, and the Bento Brothers and Rita, gymnasts, are others in the limelight.

"Hot Heiress," with Ben Lyon and Ona Munson, is the screen attraction.

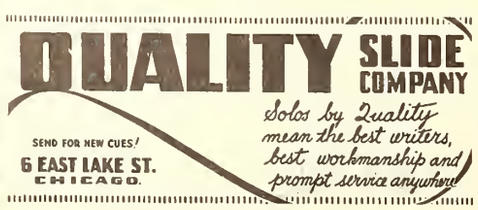
NEW YORK CITY

ORGAN SOLOS

FLOYD HOFMANN (Menominee, Mich., Lloyd's) who has been at this theatre for some time and who has made himself very popular with his presentations of novelty and singing solos, continues to get new friends this week, with another entertaining novelty, which is a singing contest between the young folk and the old-timers. By means of the mike, Hofmann informed the audience of this contest and started it off by having the old-timers sing, "Just a Song at Twilight." Then the young folks did their turn by singing "When Your Hair has turned to Silver," singing this with great volume. The balance of the program, or contest consisted of the singing, both as separate units and together, the following songs: "Shade of the old Apple Tree," "Baby Just Cares," "One I Care For," 'Around the Corner" and "Sweet Adeline." This audience apparently, gets quite a thrill from singing to Hofmann's novelties and he, nearly always, is forced to encore with an additional song. This show caught was no exception and Hofmann played 'Yours and Mine." This young fellow has proved himself a box-office attraction at this house.

STANLEY PINHERO (Newark, N. J., Proctors) had the audience singing lustily during the presentation of "All About a Bout," which is a comedy solo injecting comedy lyrics and cartoons between the singing of each song. The numbers for the audience to sing (and they were the most important part of this solo) were: "Smile Darn Ya Smile," comedy lyrics on "Tie a String Around Your Finger," "When Your Lover Has Gone," "Whistling In the Dark," and a final chorus of "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver." Pinhero's playing of the last named number was augmented by the orchestra assisting; this seems to build up the finale very well, and apparently makes the audience sing that much stronger. Pinhero is very popular at this house and has built up quite a following in the two years he has been featured here.



BETTY HAMMOND (Publix Strand, New Orleans) offers an untitled solo which combines popular melodies of the better type and which meets with decided success. Miss Hammond, announcing her own numbers, opens with "Nola" giving a fast, lively interpretation, goes into the dreamy "An Old Refrain" and closes with the quartet finale from "Rigoletto." The Strand is the only theatre here where the organist is willing to "gamble" upon the public's taste in music and so far Miss Hammond's experiments in the better composers have met with even more success than her organ slides.

"HAL" FRIEDMAN (Dorchester, Mass., Publix Morton) introduced a novelty solo called, "A Classical Fantasy," using as a back-ground, a popular overture for the presentation of two standard favorites. The overture was "Orpheus" and the standard numbers: "Humoresque" and "Was It a Dream." Hal, orally, told the audience that "Swanee River" makes an ideal countermelody to "Humoresque," and proved his versatility by playing both numbers together. Hal closed his solo with the last movement of "Orpheus" and received a fine reception, proving that classics can go over with a "jazz-mad" audience if they are presented in a showmanlike manner.

FRED KINSLEY (New York Loew's State), who is well-known throughout this territory, is the new organist at this house. Kinsley found no difficulty in making this audience sing, as it is a transient house and the orgainst before him always had them singing, so it is more a matter of a new personality giving them songs to sing, as usual. Kinsley called his first solo, "Rackets," making use of prop hats each time he made an oral announcement and introduction to a new song. The songs presented were: "I'm Happy When You're Happy," a special version to "Take a Walk," "Were You Sincere?" "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" and a final chorus of "Smile Darn Ya Smile." Each of the numbers played were introduced previously to their playing with some cleverly worded reference to a racket, i. e.: "Gangster Rackets," "Love Rackets," "Political Rackets" and "The Depression Racket." Smart chatter incorporated in these as they were introduced brought many good laughs and also some applause. The entire solo was entertaining and warranted the good applause it received.

BERNIE COWHAM (Flushing, Long Island RKO) had all of his audience singing, at the first note of this week's entertaining community-sing. There was no title to this, other than a slide bearing the word, "Bernie" in huge letters. Of course, Bernie's theme song, "Voice of the RKO" was played first, then he turned toward the audience and after his inimitable manner of greetings were extended to the audience, he orally made reference to the songs he would play and then went into a special version of "Whistling In the Dark," with words written by him, expressly to the audience. After a few clever gags, Bernie played and the audience sang an old-timer, "Somebody Stole My Gal," which has recently been revived. Following this with, "Were You Sincere?", "For You," then a second chorus specially written about animals as a duet between boys and girls, he closed with "Moonlight Saving Time." The solo, this week lacked the usual novelties Bernie injects into his solos, but the fine applause at the finish proved that the audience enjoyed it, nevertheless.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

I know that many of the music publishers are aware of the marvelous philanthropic work that Jerry Vogal, manager of the Plaza Music, has been doing for the past number of years, but I'm sure his many other friends throughout the country are not aware of it, and to them I want to say that if Jerry is one of your friends, you have one of the greatest possessions in the world . . . Jerry is one of the squarest shooters in the world . . . Jerry has been collecting money from all the music publishers in town for the past year (and when a guy can collect money, cheerfully, from his friends and business associates he must be regular) for the feeding of all the unfortunate down and outers who frequent the Municipal Lodging House on 25th street . . . and also for those in the state hospital at Central Islip . . . Jerry and His Gang, as he and his friends who help him entertain these people are known, have spent every Sunday morning for the past year doing this work . . . He is one great guy . . . simple words . . . but oh . . . how much they mean. . . .

M. Witmark & Sons, one of the oldest music publishing firms in the business, is hailing a brand new song called, "In a Pretty Little Hilly Billy Town" (written by Al Dubin and Joe Burke) as the logical successor to their biggest recent hit, "Tiptoe" . . . Buddy Morris, Witmark's general manager, predicts that this tune will do even better than its predecessor . . . Buddy ought to know; he's the Witmark-hit-picker . . . Louis Weippert, manager of Chappell-Harms is all enthused about the fine catalogue his firm has . . . It is justifiable, too . . . because they have a good one . . . "Eventide in Araby" and "The Moochi" are the best ones, and they are being heard plenty . . . Cliff Hess, special service manager of Remick's recently wrote a new organ novelty that has one spot in particular that is plenty clever . . . It is the introduction to "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" . . . and when Fred Kinsley, organist at the Loew's State used it, the audience gave it a great hand . . . It goes something like this, "The next number is dedicated to His Honor, James J. Walker, the Mayor of New York City . . . of course, with additional repartee. . . .

Just had to take time off to watch the Army Air Corps fly down the Hudson . . . That, in my humble opinion, is the greatest sight in the world . . . Just think, as they go over your heads as they have for the past week, the razzing they could give a city with just a few thousand pounds of bombs . . . It should kind of make us, the people of the United States, feel very proud of the air service and help the government in every way to make America have the best and largest air fleet in the world . . . (After reading this last paragraph I just realized how patriotic it has made me, waving the flag and everything . . . I'll bet it has done the same thing to many more than I) . . . Heard a great Irish song the other night that is bound to become very popular soon . . . Sort of a combination of "Ireland Must Be Heaven" and "M-O-T-H-E-R." The title is, "That's How I Spell Ireland." . . . The chorus begins "I is for the Irish in your tiny Heart" and so on through each letter of the word Ireland . . . It's a clever idea and it has a lovely Irish melody to it . . . and Feist's publish it. . . .

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Stop, Look and Listen!!!

WHEN a salesman starts out to sell his "line," his first job is to get himself before the prospect he is trying to sell. Then he can go into his "sales-talk" or whatever else you want to call it. But, mind you, his first task is to get that interview.

A theatre newspaper ad, show-card, announcement, or whatever type of advertising material you aim to use, must accomplish the same thing. It must attract the reader's roving eye before it can deliver the message you have weaved into it.

After the salesman has reached his prospect, he must prove he is capable of holding that prospect's attention through his sales-talk. That's point number two in his campaign to get business.

And the theatre's ad must likewise contain that certain something capable of holding the prospective patron's attention while it delivers that sales-talk. What that certain something must be, is what you have got to learn to inject into your advertising. The qualities, or features, that will sustain the reader's interest until he has absorbed the message and given it a thorough examination, constitute one of the chief ingredients of all good advertising, be it commercial or theatrical.

To those who have to work out advertising day after day, all of the above may sound kind of trite, or carry a suspicion of the classroom, but it is nevertheless a mighty important factor, especially in a business which depends to such an extent on advertising to keep it alive. And, it is of such terrific importance that anybody concerned with theatre advertising cannot give it too much study.

We will all agree that advertising must be SEEN and READ before it can ever hope to achieve the desired effect, namely, to CREATE DESIRE. Therefore, how to attract and hold attention, is the problem all smart advertising men and managers are eager to solve. Not that it is a difficult problem where big space is used. But as long as budgets, economy drives and slashing of overhead is the present order of the industry, it becomes a mighty huge problem for the small space users. They are the ones who must cultivate an entirely new perspective in their views of advertising and how to make it accomplish the most difficult task of attracting the potential patrons and make them STOP, LOOK and LISTEN.

It is really unfortunate that so many of the showmen responsible for theatre advertising will not become more progressive. By this we do not mean that their advertising is poor. On the contrary, it is excellent. But they fail to realize how important it is to keep up to the minute in what other ad men are doing and thereby find new slants and angles that will constantly make their work productive of that "certain something" which carries the much needed magnetism to attract business.

The successful ad men in commercial fields are those who never let-up for a moment in working out their advertising and injecting those qualities which will produce the desired effects:—Attract attention. Hold the reader's eye. Create the desire to buy.

Now, more than ever before in the history of the industry, it is going to be the making and breaking of many men. Those who refuse to lift themselves out of that rut of sameness will die by the wayside and sink into oblivion. Those who keep the three dominating factors uppermost in their work will soon step out ahead of the parade and into the posts where men of such ability belong.

There is no discussion of greater importance to the industry than that of advertising. So much space is wasted foolishly because it lacks the three essentials, that education along these lines becomes more than a suggestion. It is an absolute necessity. Those who can throw additional light necessity. We are never too old to learn.

Montiel's Question Gag In Newspaper A Business Getter

A contest tie-up with a local newspaper created much interest for "Cimarron" when played by Ricardo Montiel at the Publix-Saenger Theatre, Mobile, Ala.

The contest was sponsored by one of the local newspapers, which set forth in large display ads a list of questions. And the answers to all these questions could be found scattered throughout the classified ad pages.

The idea of the contest was to list the questions followed in order by the answers. Neatness, originality and correctness were the necessary requirements on which the judges chose the winners.

Many of the answers submitted were fixed up in elegant form showing that a lot of painstaking effort had been used.

It is too bad that Montiel's entire list of questions and answers cannot be reproduced here. However, they deal with the story characters, stars, plot, where picture is shown, etc. Co-operation with your local newspaper is an invaluable publicity aid, as Montiel's campaign bears out.

Silverman Stages Kiddie Fashion Gag As Publicity Stunt

Where is the chap who made the statement that New York City theatre managers do not utilize their many opportunities to exploit a motion picture? Let him come to the front and read a few lines about the Mickey Mouse Club of David Silverman's, a manager who holds forth at the Fox-Belmont Theatre, Borough of Manhattan, New York, N. Y.

One Easter Sunday Silverman's Mouse Club trekked to the well known Union Square Park (a section made famous in bygone days by Tammany chieftains and lately by the Reds) and in conjunction with Uncle Robert of Radio fame held a Fashion Show for Little Girls. Twenty-five of New York's finest, under the supervision of a police captain, guarded all entrances to the park and permitted only participants to enter during the ceremonies.

Many well known Metropolitan department stores and business concerns contributed awards for the occasion, among these being Best & Co., I. Miller Shoe Co., Blessen & Co., and the Heide Candy Co. Passes to Fox theatres were given to all. Fox Movietone and Pathe sound trucks were on hand to record the event for the talking pictures.

City newspapers co-operated to the extent that all major publishers had representatives on hand to get the story and they made good next day by carrying notice of the event. To top the whole thing off, the Fashion Parade was led by the band of Public School No. 71, of the Bronx, an aggregation of 100 musicians, all in brilliant uniforms.

This is just a tip-off to the skeptical New York manager who is under the impression that it is only the chap in cities outside of the Big Town who can get away with these gags. These remarks are not addressed to the aggressive fellows in our community who are weekly putting their shows over the top, but to the man who says it just cannot be done. Take a leaf out of Dave Silverman's book and play it over on your piano for a live B. O. melody. Thanks, Dave, for remembering the Club. We know you are busy with lots of other live show stunts. Keep the Club posted as to your activities with Fox-Metropolitan.

Lighthouse Baby Contest Over Big; Second Time Held

As a contribution to the Anniversary number of the Club, L. V. Lighthouse, manager of the Kenmore Theatre, Kenmore, N. Y., sends us an account of a Baby Contest which he states is going over the top in bang-up style. As this year's contest is the second one put on by Lighthouse, the other having been run last year, we are certain that the gag has made a hit in his town.

To insure the gag's success Lighthouse made tie-ups with the local newspaper, a jeweler and a photographer. Application blanks entitling the bearer to a free sitting for one 4x6 portrait were printed and handed out to patrons of the Kenmore Theatre. An an additional plug for the contest the newspaper gave generous space, outlining rules of the gag, how to enter, etc., and the back of the Kenmore News, a newsy little house organ gotten out by Lighthouse, also was devoted to publicizing the event.

This Coupon Good For	Baby Popularity Contest
10 VOTES	Baby's Number Voter's Name Address

As soon as the photographs of the babies began to arrive at the theatre they were numbered and placed in a frame for display in the lobby. Each adult patron was given a coupon which entitled him or her to 10 votes; each children admission was good for five votes. The holder was instructed to look over the photo display, pick out his favorite baby, enter the number on the coupon and drop it in a box placed there for that purpose.

There were four classes of babies for the contest: Class A, for children up to one year old; Class B, from one to two years; Class C, from two to three years, and Class D, from three to four years. First, second, third and fourth awards in each class, a total of 16 in all, consisted of a piece of jewelry supplied by the jeweler, a tinted photograph of the winning baby, a two-year subscription to the Kenmore paper and passes to the Kenmore Theatre. It was also stated that other awards would probably be included before the contest closed.

to a free sitting including one 4 x 6 Portrait at the Studio of Fred J. Holmes, 2912 Delaware Avenue, Kenmore, opposite Village Hall, with the understanding the holder will abide by the rules of the contest.

Date of Sitting .....

Time .....

As the contest progressed bulletins of its progress were flashed upon the screen from time to time and it was also arranged to have pictures of the winners shown on the screen at the close, and published in the local newspaper.

At this writing Lighthouse tells the Club that there are over 200 babies entered in the contest, mothers are calling their neighbors on the 'phone asking them to save votes for their respective babies when they attend the theatre, and that the show was caught on like a house on fire. As the applications for sittings and the voting blanks can only be procured at the Kenmore box office along with an admission, it will be seen that the house just has to cash in on the contest. Lighthouse tells us that the entire cost of this baby gag is but $9, so if any of you brother Club members feel like spending this large sum as a means of boosting summer trade we feel sure that you will receive the same amount of benefit, both at the B. O. and as a means of garnering a lot of publicity for your house.

By the time this is published the Lighthouse Baby Contest has probably come to an end and it is the Club's sincere hope that 200 more babies photos were added to the collection in his lobby. Good work, L. V. and thanks for sending in the gag. We are sure it will prove beneficial to other members of this fraternity. Keep the Club posted on your doings up in Kenmore.

Hamlin Gives Salt Lake City Citizens New Publicity Page

Fred Hamlin, division advertising manager for Publix in Salt Lake, Utah, is credited with instigating two very attractive pages in the Sunday Salt Lake Tribune.

These two pages are devoted to cuts and stories on music, drama and the screen. This type of page is an innovation for Salt Lake and is receiving its due share of interest from the public.

Hamlin is also receiving announcement boxes in the paper inviting the public to come down town to attend the theatres.

In addition to the above, he is plugging Blue Monday with a revival night for which he has secured free one-way transportation from the street car company.

We don't recall, at this particular moment, whether we ever published any of Fred Hamlin's stunts before; so if this is the initial story about him, let us hope that many others will follow in rapid succession. What do you say, Freddy? Why not join all those other peppy Publix showmen and keep us posted on what—and how—you are doing things for all those houses under your publicity and exploitation direction? We'll be expecting more.

Eshleman Campaign On Picture Clicked For Biz. & Publicity

More than one person knew that it paid to advertise in St. Cloud, Minn., when James (Jim) Eshelman, planned a campaign not so long ago for the selling of "It Pays to Advertise" during the time the laugh film played the Grand Theatre. That "it paid" was nicely reflected at the box office.

Through a tie-up with local newspaper, Jim arranged to plant a number of names about the classified page of the sheet. In the ads was spotted names of local residents. The newspaper plugged the stunt by means of a large, two-column ad which was spotted in an advantageous part of the paper.

The ad stated that thirty guest tickets would be given to those persons, who, upon suitable identification, proved that theirs were the names contained in the ads. In the ad the theatre and the paper were plugged to fine advantage. This stunt used by Eshelman, while not new, is nevertheless a good one, and always sure fire for the showman using it, as well as profitable for the newspaper. Good work, Jim. Keep it up and let's hear some more from you.

Jack Rosenberg Asks Club Opinion On His 'Outward Bound' Ads

What other Club members think about his advertising campaign on "Outward Bound," is the question contained in the most recent letter from Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif.

The point Jack raises in connection with this particular picture is this: "Is it a wise move or a mistake to advertise a picture of this kind by painting a somewhat dreary and frightful theme for the public's first glance."

Well, Jack, that's a debatable question. But we think the way you shaped your advertising should have built up plenty of interest in "Outward Bound." Some phases may have implied a theme of hopelessness, but, on the whole, the ads should have worked out to good results. One little thing you neglected to mention, Jack, is just what did happen to the box office during the run of this picture. Or, maybe, you are deliberately holding out on the Club in order to find out other members' reactions?

At any rate, we are reproducing a layout of Jack's ads on "Outward Bound" so that all the Club may see and voice their opinion. Whatever way the experiment turned out, it was an interesting one, and the Club wants to hear from members as to what they think about this method.

We know you are a smart showman, Jack, and that you are not passing anything along to the Club that's not good. Thanks for sending this in and maybe you will let the Club know just what success attended your ad campaign on this particular picture. Oke?

Jack also sends along a coupe of interesting post cards extensively mailed out on "My Past" and "The Devil to Pay." The card on the former was addressed and written in long hand and carried the following message:

Dear Miss (Blank): "Why is it when a man makes a mistake, it is forgotten; but when a girl makes a mistake the world remembers it forever? I have never dared to confess the story of my life until now. If you want to know My Past, I am telling the truth in the picture now showing at the Plaza theatre." (Signed) Dora Macy, The Ex-Mistress.

The card on "Devil to Pay" bore a cut of a man and girl on a merry-go-round on the left-hand half. At the top: She: "Isn't it fun? I adore merry-go-rounds." He: "So do I. I've been on one all my life." The foregoing was set in small italics. In larger type the rest of the message read: "Gay, carefree, audacious and charming, he did everything wrong: but was always right in a woman's eye! Then followed in heavy type the name of star, picture and date of showing.

Big Guns Of Navy, Fountain's Guests For "Seas Beneath"

For the benefit of seagoing members of this Club, Lester J. Fountain, once again back in Long Beach, Calif., as manager of the Fox-West Coast Theatre there, sends the Third Anniversary number a corking publicity tie-in on "Seas Beneath." Any one who knows anything at all about our Navy knows that presence of gold braid means plenty of authority—and we're not talking about enlisted men or c. p. o's, either. No, by Joe! We mean nothing less than Admirals, Captains, Commanders or what have you! Just take a look at the gilt braid in the photo which is reproduced on this page and you will agree with us that Lester managed to gather some very important Navy officials in the lobby of the Fox West Coast.

To secure additional publicity and yet not cut into regular space on current attractions, Lester decided to try for a civic tie-up for Welcome of the Pacific Fleet on its return from the Canal Zone. He sent Admiral Schofield (he's in the picture) a wire, contacted the Mayor, City Manager and the Chamber of Commerce. His wire, bearing the endorsement of city officials, extended an official invitation from the City and Fox West-Coast for himself, officers and ladies to attend a showing of "Seas Beneath" in the roles of honored guests. The Admiral's acceptance was received by wire next day.

For another publicity break invitations were extended to the six local members of the Legion of Valor, five Distinguished Service Cross men and one Congressional Medal of Honor man, all residents of Long Beach. Of the latter named organization there are but 32 members in the entire country and the story received a front-page break in the local daily. The city decorated the streets and electrolier poles with flags and Admiral Schofield sent men ashore to decorate the front of the theatre with ship's signal flags. Theatre stage olivettes and spots were used on marquee to illuminate the front of the building.

Glancing over tear sheets and clippings which Lester sends in connection with the event we'll go on record in stating that the newspapers certainly stood shoulder to shoulder with your brother member. Story after story, front page and otherwise, society columns, etc., all stand out as a testimonial to the work he put in on the affair.

Where a Club member has the opportunity to try a stunt of this nature it is recommended by Lester that they skip any attempt to get anywhere by contacting any man of less rank than a staff officer. He suggests going direct to the chaplain, he being an excellent means of effecting an introduction to the chief of command. Fountain made all contacts necessary to the success of his campaign himself, from the admiral down. That he was cordially received is seen in the fact that a boat and officer were assigned him for contacting a lieutenant-commander aboard one of the ships.

You certainly pulled this off in the grand manner, L. J., and you are to be congratulated for getting such fine returns for your effort. We call this getting away with something—no fooling! The Club knows that you are one of its most active members on the West Coast. Now don't keep all the good things to yourself.

Effective "Finn And Hattie" Ballyhoo Is Used By H. Stearn

An effective stunt in connection with the showing of "Finn and Hattie" marked Harry Stearn's recent transfer to the Publix-Orpheum, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

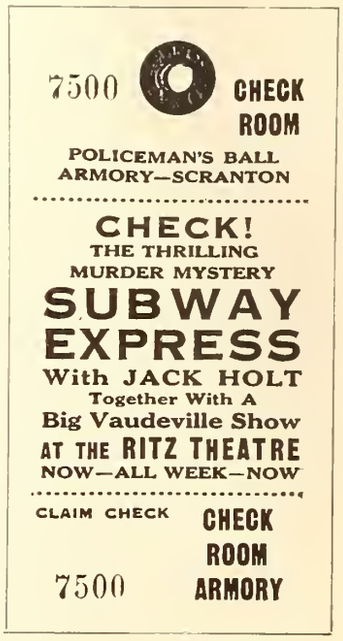
For three days, a man dressed as Leon Errol, a boy dressed as Jackie Searl, and a girl dressed as Mitzi Green, put on the ballyhoo. The man carried four bags under his arms and each of the kids carried one each.

Every so often, one of the kids who were on roller skates, would bump into the man and he would drop his bags, valises, etc. They were so arranged that whenever he dropped them, they would open and thus dislodge the things he was carrying in them. But at the same time, it would show printed signs on which was lettered copy about the picture, and playdates.

The stunt drew a lot of attention and naturally the curious crowds were cranning their necks to see what it was all about. After reading the copy, they would walk away with a chuckle.

Harry was formerly in Reading, Pa., and won lots of enviable recognition there with his novel publicity stunts. Some more of these, Harry—and remember us to Morris Rosenthal when you see him.

Jack Goodwin Ties Up With Police Ball On 'Subway Express'



The Club's anniversary is remembered by Jack C. Goodwin, of the Ritz Theatre, Scranton, Pa., through the contribution of a corking bit of show selling he recently put over in his town.

The Policemen's Annual Ball is quite an event in Scranton. It is held at the City Armory to the tune of about 25,000 attendance. The proceeds of the affair are used for the Police Emergency Fund, a worthy objective in all cities of this size and one that citizens cheerfully subscribe to.

Although approximately 25,000 tickets are sold, the event generally plays to about 10,000 to 12,000 people, so Jack tied up with the concession man who handles the refreshments and the check room to the extent of furnishing some 8,000 checks, a sample of which we are reproducing on this page. In this particular case he plugged "Subway Express" and the vaudeville. The cost of the entire effort was nominal and it worked out very effectively.

This is just an example of what can be done with civic events to sell current shows. Goodwin put it over. Why can't you? Thanks, Jack, for sending this along to your brother members. The Club hopes that you will continue to keep it informed on what is doing in Scranton.

Your city has been productive of many a good gag. Keep up the good work.

Manning's Rabbits Boost Easter Trade For Kiddie Matinee

Manager Jack Manning of the Paramount Theatre, Greenwood, Miss., gave away real and stuffed rabbits to stimulate Easter Week business.

Four large plush Easter rabbits, 21 inches high, and an equal number of live rabbits were given away. They were sure-fire interest for the kiddies.

Both the stuffed and real rabbits were on display in the lobby. A card in front of the plush rabbits stated, "These beautiful stuffed rabbits will be given away in the theatre to the children at the Saturday matinee holding the lucky numbers." A card in front of the real rabbits display was precisely the same with this difference—that the rabbits would be given away at the Thursday and Friday matinees.

Five 22 x 28 special made cards with a picture of rabbits on them announcing that the rabbits would be given away at the Paramount theatre were placed in the windows of a furniture, jewelry, and drug stores as well as in a cafe and bank.

Personal Letter Was Aid To Poag Selling Spanish Film Version

Only one medium was used by P. J. Poag, manager of the Princess and Casino Theatres in Del Rio, Texas, to put across the Spanish version of "Call of the Flesh." That one medium was good for an 83 per cent result.

The medium was a personal letter written in Spanish and sent to the Mexicans and Spaniards in the town. It went over very well; so well in fact that Poeg ran two shows—one for the better class of Spaniards and Mexicans (there being two classes in his town) at 10:30 in the morning. The other show was a grind, running all day Sunday from 1 P. M. The picture was shown in the Casino, the second-run house, catering only to Mexicans and Spaniards, and went over to tremendous success, considering the town.

We are showing a photo to give you a little idea of the way Poag sells his shows. In the Casino, the Mexican house, he tries hard to get the kid patronage, just as he does for the Princess. The photo shows kids awaiting to enter the theatre and witness the opening chapter of "Spell of the Circus." And judging from the crowd, Poag is succeeding in his intention to get as many kids as possible into the house, and keep them returning week after week. Oke, Paul. We are glad to see that you are still hitting them hard down in your section, and we want to hear from you again in the very near future.

Moore Enlists Aid Of Scouts And Fire Chief On Third Alarm

Not only did he secure co-operation from the local Fire Department in exploiting "Third Alarm" but Harry L. Moore, manager of the Fox-Judith Theatre, Lewistown, Montana, enlisted the aid of the city Boy Scout troop in putting this picture over the top at his house.

As Moore mentions. this particular picture is a "natural" when it comes to tying up with a Fire Department providing, of course, that the chief is willing. In his case this co-operation was easy to secure so Moore went a step further to insure complete success. The Boy Scouts of Lewistown have quite an organization and arrangements were made to have each troop select two of their best boys to serve as ushers during the showing of "Third Alarm." The idea of "Safety First" and "Fire Prevention" was incorporated into the campaign so as to interest other civic bodies.

The Fire Chief became so impressed with the amount of good being accomplished in expressing the idea of "Fire Prevention" that he loaned Moore a fire truck and driver to ballyhoo the picture. He loaded the truck with Boy Scouts, all in uniform as you will note by the accompanying photo, and with signs on either side advertising the showing paraded up and down the business district with bells and siren telling Lewistown where "Third Alarm" could be seen. This naturally created a great deal of excitement and interest in the show which was nicely reflected at the box-office.

For those Club members who may have trouble enlisting aid of their Fire Chiefs for pictures of this type we would suggest trying Moore's method of going at him from another angle before being flatly turned down. Using the safety first and fire prevention idea was a corking good move on his part and even though he had clear sailing with the Fire Department for a big ballyhoo it proved a means to further impress the city authorities. The combination of the Scouts and Department made the whole campaign a sure-fire one. Thanks, Harry, for sending this in for the Anniversary issue. It is clear evidence of your continued interest in your Club. We want to hear from you again just as soon as you can find time.

Located In a Windy City Suburb, Strauss Is Selling His Shows

Being located in a residential district of Chicago, Highland Park, where the social activities, for the most part, are governed to a very great extent by social clubs and organizations such as the D. A. R., the Women's Club, the American Legion, etc., makes it rather difficult for a showman to sell his shows unless he can contact the proper parties. This, Sol Straus, manager of the Alcyon Theatre, Highland Park, Chicago, Ill., is doing.

He has no daily newspaper with which to sell his shows. Instead there are a couple of weekly publications. These are used to great extent, and prove an excellent medium. Strauss has become acquainted with all of the organizations, and as a result he has been able to secure excellent reviews and approval of pictures from many of the powerful local factions. This helps immeasurably in the selling of shows.

Incidentally, one of the weekly sheets, a magazine, "Highland Park News," gave Strauss a great break on the theatre's fifth anniversary. A special section of the book was devoted exclusively to the theatre and news of its product. The front page of the magazine plugged the anniversary. The special section was later reprinted, ads and all, and used as an anniversary program distributed at the theatre. What a stunt! It went over like hot cakes in New England.

And so Strauss sells his shows. He makes a play for kiddie business, too., and this medium has proven a valuable one for him. Since it is such, we hope that we will hear some more from Strauss on this angle and his other show-selling features so that we can pass them along to the rest of the Managers' Round Table Club. What do you say, Sol?

Ballyhoos Used By Bevel, Like Displays, Click At The Princess

Still located at the Princess Theatre and selling shows in the ace style that is his custom, L. W. Bevel continues to be active as ever along these lines.

Just so that his friends and his fellow-members in the Round Table Club will know that he is active, he drops us a note to tell us that on "Sea Wolf," he sold the picture to desired results by securing a truck and affixing upon its sides giant banners plugging the film. In addition to the feature picture, the shorts were also plugged. Which shows us that Bevel knows that his shorts form an important part of his show and he is going to see that he gets the most possible value out of them.

On "Office Wife" he sold the picture by means of some special display cards which were planted in front of the theatre. Painted in red, orange, yellow, green and blue, and blended so as to catch the eye, the display achieved the objective which had been set. Stills were well spotted on the art pieces and they, too, were strategically arranged, being selected with an eye towards a selling effect.

Thanks, L. W., for passing these along to us and keeping us posted on your work. We look forward with interest for your next contribution because we know that it will contain some slants of value to the rest of the Club, and which some showmen may be able to use in their own towns.

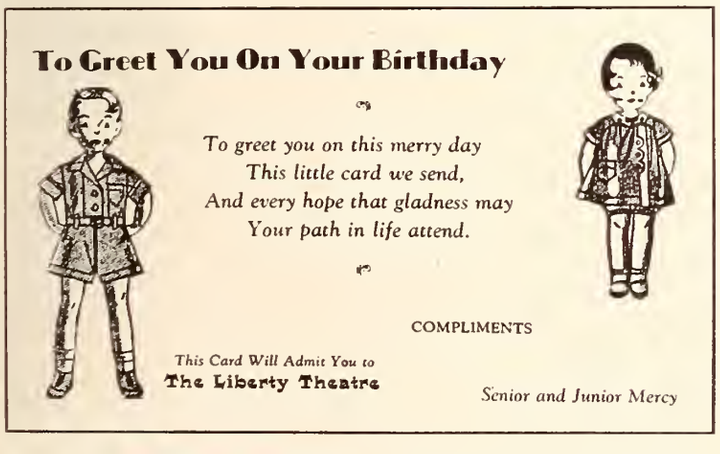
Keaton Expression Gives Harry Glazer An Idea For Ice Gag

The expressionless face of Buster Keaton furnished Harry Glazer and Fred Meyers of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, with a corking good gag in connection with "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Fred is manager of the Alhambra, and Harry, the exploiteer. The two make a team that produces B.O. results.

As you will see by the reproduced photograph of a portion of the Alhambra lobby, Mr. Keaton's face is enclosed in the center of a large cake of real ice and bears the title of "The Frozen Face Comedian." The cake measured 58 inches high, 12 inches thick and 20 inches wide. The face was traced on tin from a Keaton cut-out and oil paint used in order to hold the colors. The cakes were frozen daily by a local ice company, which also supplied the stand. It takes about 36 hours to freeze a single cake.

Harry and Fred inform the Club that this little stunt attracted more attention than any gag ever used before at their theatre, both young and old falling for it like a ton of brick. They are therefore passing it along for the benefit of their fellow Round Table members with the hope that they, too, will be able to cash in on the idea. There it is, boys, so go to it. Simple, effective and costs you nothing except a trip to your iceman. Don't stop with this one, Harry and Fred. The Club knows you've got some more tricks up your sleeve.

Hill Busy Selling Shows With Hughes-Franklin Circuit



Announcement of the Club's Third Anniversary number brings a cheerful letter from Frank B. Hill, who is in charge of the Liberty Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., a house in the Hughes-Franklin circuit. The last time Club members heard from Frank was in reference to his campaign on "Cimarron," for which we believe every one was grateful. This time he sends along a collection of gags he has put in effect since his new affiliation. We're sure you'll like them.

In the first place, we'd like to call attention to a letter which Frank is sending out to acquaint patrons with the recently formed Hughes-Franklin company. Four thousand of these have been mailed out and cover a radius of 20 miles. We think that this letter is a neat little piece of work and by reading the copy at top of the reproduced cut you will note that is primarily designed to promote good will for the new company. The rest of the copy is devoted to calling attention to a dozen outstanding attractions booked for his house.

Not long ago Walla Walla had quite a flood, so Frank thought the promotion of a "Joy Week" would help the good citizens of this town forget the large amount of trouble caused by the calamity. He has enclosed newspaper ads of this campaign and we'll say he used some space to tell the folk that they ought to laugh it all off. To give you an idea what it is all about we are publishing a reproduction of one of the heralds used in connection with his "Joy Week." As Frank states, "I don't suppose it made them forget the flood

"Crying Towels" Gag Helps Hall Sell "Finn And Hattie"

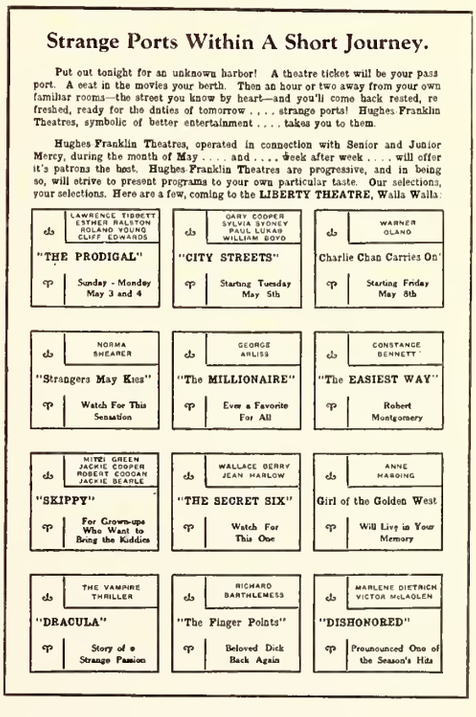
As a gag for exploiting "Finn and Hattie" W. G. Hall, manager of the Garden Theatre, Iowa City, Iowa, used "crying towels" to good effect in putting this picture over the top. The towel in question was of regulation size of the kind stripped from containers that vend the blotting type and carried the printed advertisement in green ink. It was folded evenly and at the top read: "Wipe Away the Tears of Laughter That Will Stream Down Your Cheeks When You See Those Hilarious Fun Makers (names stars follow)." A mat of "Hattie" and "Finn" was used for center copy, each one having a wise crack as caption. The words "Crying Towell" was cut off from the rest of the copy by a heavy green rule and ran full length of the ad. The names of theatre and playdates were inserted at the bottom.

The Value of a Dollar!

This is bringing up an old subject, but it's of greater importance than you may be willing, at this time, to admit.

Spending an evening or two last week going around to some of the theatres outside of the city gave me quite a surprise (and a shock as well) when several of the managers, in taking me through the different parts of their theatres, showed me a mass of stuff ordered, paid for and never used. This ran from advertising material to supplies and accessories of all kinds.

What a waste. And what a shame.



Surely there is no excuse for a thing like that happening if the man responsible for the purchasing of such stuff was on the job. It's a rotten waste of money and anybody guilty of such a thing ought to be made head usher instead of manager.

We've plugged the angle of "spending money as though it was your own," from a dozen different slants, but this idea of getting all "hot" about something, rushing out to order it and then, before it arrives, grow cold and let the stuff rot in the store-room or cellar, is all the bunk. If the idea can't keep you enthused until you see it through successfully and thoroughly, then it must be a pretty rotten creation from the start.

Stop wasting money. What difference does it make whose money it is? You're responsible for it. And it has been the cause of more dismissals than any other fault that we can think of at the moment.

conditions, but the box office was healthy. And that's what counts, doesn't it, boys?

Another little gag used by Hill which has been the means of promoting a large amount of good will among local families is the mailing of a birthday card to all grade school kiddies. It is so nicely gotten up that we present it here for the inspection of Frank's brother members. You will note that the inscription at bottom of card states that it will admit the holder to the Liberty Theatre. And Frank adds, "You can imagine their joy when presenting it to the cashier."

For a plug in connection with the showing of "Mr. Lemon of Orange" Hill used a small envelope, about 3 in. by 4 in., containing one lemon drop. The copy on front read: "Brendel, the fun of 'Just Imagine' in 'Mr. Lemon of Orange' with Fifi Dorsay. She is Sex—he is the peel, in this comedy for laughing out louder. Opens Saturday at ——Any seat—— Have a drop on Mr. Lemon." Frank tells us that they got a big kick out of opening the envelope and finding the lemon drop.

One other remark from Hill before closing. He calls attention to his method of stressing names in the cast of "East Lynne" when he advertised that picture, his contention being that pictures formerly made as silents had not gone over very well in his community. So, there's a tip for any member who may have difficulties along these lines. Try Hill's recipe by playing up in a big way the names of the featured players. He makes an exception to this means as far as "Connecticut Yankee" is concerned. This one went over on its own, he states. Once again, thanks, Frank, for remembering your Club on its birthday, and be sure to let us hear from you again in the near future.

Morris Outlines Big Campaign On "Fifty Million Frenchmen"

An exceptionally well rounded campaign on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" is sent to the Club by Walter Morris of the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md. A word or two about the system employed at this house before launching details of this result-getting effort may be interesting to some of our members. About a month ahead of playdates an original outline of campaign is laid out to insure proper coverage through all channels. Should a stunt be found impractical substitutions are made as the campaign advances. Now, to tell about the campaign:

Four days in advance of the showing 500 window cards were distributed in the downtown business section of the city and at street car transfer points. A tie-up was also arranged with a food products company for a radio broadcast as a direct-to-the-home medium; 250 door hangers, window card size, were placed on doors of stores closed Sundays with copy reading: "We are planning to attend en masse the Midnite Show at the Met." The title was given prominent mention.

Apple-vending carts were also used by way of making up special cards for venders situated at strategic points in the city, with copy which carried the following message: "Buy Apples Here. You'll laugh down to the core at Fifty Million Frenchmen."

Inasmuch as the N. V. A. Week was on, a truck ballyhoo was arranged for the Wednesday following the opening. The truck was bannered on both sides advertising the feature and carried ushers in uniforms giving out heralds on "Stolen Jools" to observers of the N. V. A. parade. A photo on this page shows a picture of the ballyhoo truck, Morris and ushers standing near by. Four thousand of the N. V. A. picture heralds were given out.

One week in advance and during the run 10,000 exchange heralds were distributed to cover the Easter shoppers and at several large gatherings at Easter shows in the downtown district; 250 brick bats, reading "'Fifty Million Frenchmen' Metropolitan Theatre Now" were used as paper weights by newsstands at various intersections and transfer points; 2,000 "New Traffic Rule" envelopes were distributed carrying the message, "Drive carefully on all roads leading to the Metropolitan Theatre as 'Fifty Million Frenchmen' are ready to make you forget the blues," etc., and a large shadow box was used at each main exit over this same period.

The gag of the men carrying a suit case, spilling things out of it, was also used to good advantage. In this case he was dressed in evening clothes and the case was filled with loud patterned shirts, pajamas, etc. At every street corner the case fell open displaying the message, "There are 49,999 other Frenchmen at the Met now."

Additional advertising included 500 feet of streamer pennants strung from flag pole to ends of marquee, lending a carnival atmosphere to entrance of the theatre; the special presentation of two trailers two weeks in advance, and the printing of programs for the American Legion Sunday night benefit show, the back page printed so that it could be cut off and used as a teaser program in the lobby two weeks in advance.

We also want to call attention to the photo showing the big banner strung across one of Baltimore's principal streets. Here is a piece of advertising that is not so easy to get away with. What a display! More power to you, Walter, for putting this over. A neat looking gold and black "counter card" was also given wide distribution on the counters of principal stores in the city. The Club appreciates the fact that you remembered it on the occasion of its Third Anniversary, Walter, and we believe that all your brother members will give you a rising vote of thanks for your contribution. We also know that you will continue the good work.

Three Stunts From Sid Holland That Made Register Sing

A breezy letter from S. Sidney Holland, manager of the New Paramount, Hammond, Ind., in which he sends the Club his biography and encloses three corking stunts on as many recently played pictures. Holland is an accomplished showman and his contributions are always vitally interesting to Round Table members.

Here's a lobby ballyhoo Holland used on "Scandal Sheet" and he tells us it proved one of the most effective in his entire career in show business. Public fancy for the "tab" newspaper and picture theme was Holland's inspiration in setting up a real printing press in the center of the lobby. An usher was trained to feed the press and during the run 5,000 of his own "scandal sheets" were turned out red hot to customers. The tab itself was regular accessory and of course the only imprint was in the space allotted for local theatre use. An outside printing job would have cost Holland at least $15. This he saved. His sign shop turned out the display used in front of the press. Additional publicity was achieved through stuffing 2,000 copies in the local paper. Also, several newsboys distributed the tab, shouting "extra." These operations were handled for seven days in advance of opening.

On "Inspiration" Holland also used a unique live display that attracted a great deal of attention. He secured a window in Woolworth's, directly across the street from his opposition, where he placed a young lady in artist's costume. Apparently she was at work at an easel moulding a human head. On completion the head was recognized as Greta Garbo. Cut out letters were then placed above the figure spelling out the name of the star. The head was then taken apart and the operation repeated over and over again. This display consisted of a beaver-board cut-out of the star, cut in some twenty pieces, and had the effect of creating a puzzle to onlookers.

It was a tough situation that Holland was up against when he opened with "Finn and Hattie." Good Friday and a community that was 40 per cent Catholic! What ho! sez Holland: isn't it fish day, and isn't finnan haddie a fish? To be sure: all good people will be eating some sort of finns, so why not distribute a napkin in all of the six town restaurants. The napkin carried this message: "Today—Good Friday! Finnan Haddie was a popular dish of years gone by. Today it is our aim to serve the finest sea food of all times! We feel certain that our food will find favor with you (just as certain are we that you will enjoy "Finn and Hattie," a Paramount all-talking comedy now playing at the New Paramount). The message further told the customers to present the napkin at the theatre and receive a 10c rebate on admission. The restaurant stood this loss, Holland states, so the only expense in connection with this stunt was the napkin and printing.

Why They Refer To Foster's Lobby As 'Baby Buggy Garage'

Like the well known cereal slogan, there's a reason why the good folk of Kenton, Ohio, refer to the lobby of the Warner Kenton Theatre as the "Baby Carriage Garage." G. H. Foster, manager of this theatre, throws light upon the subject:

It seems that Kenton Mamas, like most all other Mamas, like the movies. But what's a Mama to do when she can't afford a nurse to mind Baby while attending a matinee? Baby goes along, of course. Now, it happened that an enterprising young newspaper photographer, sleuthing about town on one of Foster's Thrift Days, 'spied what he thought would make an interesting yarn for his paper. There was the Kenton lobby crammed with baby buggies of all description! Result: The paper published a photograph and a corking story which referred to Warner's Kenton as "A Rendezvous for Tired Mothers on Thrift Day Matinees." The photo was captioned, "A Baby Carriage Garage."

Foster's Unique Lobby Display

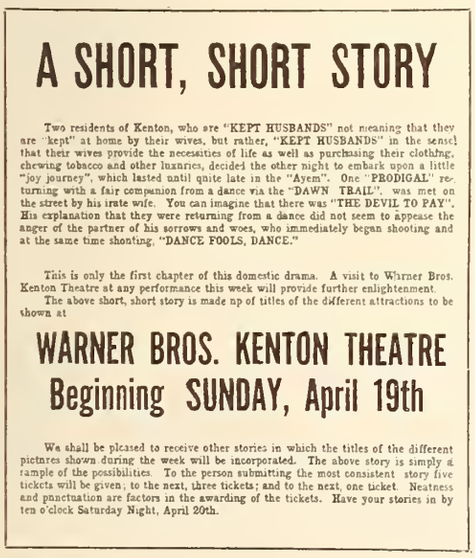
Well, G. H., that was the time you garnered some free publicity for your house when you didn't expect it. Oke? Which all goes to prove that there is a Santa Claus in show business.

Foster also sends along a little gag which is going over nicely in his town. The cut which we are reproducing here will tell the story. It is headed "A Short, Short Story," and you will note that the story is built around titles of coming attractions at the Kenton Theatre. Free tickets are given for the best constructed stories, first, second and third awards being made.

We can't let Foster's program copy on Easter doings go by without telling you something about it. To our way of thinking, it's rather good copy. On the third page, under a reproduced drawing of three little chicks emerging from shells, reads:

Eggs—Actly—No Eggs—Ageration.

We are desirous of acquiring an assortment of Eggs for an Easter Display in the lobby of Warner's Theatre. We want hen's eggs, duck eggs, goose eggs, pigeon eggs, turtle eggs; in fact, all kinds of eggs, and are particularly interested in receiving one or more rabbit eggs. All eggs brought to the theatre Saturday afternoon, April 4, will be credited as follows:



One hen's egg and 10c will admit two children under 12 years of age. All other eggs will be accepted as good for one admission.

$5.00 in gold will be paid for a Rabbit Egg. Get busy, boys and girls, and help us out.

Foster also put on an Easter display of baby chicks for which he tied up with a near-by poultry farm. A little note at the bottom of the page credited the farmer with the donation.

While lacking in detail as to precise handling of the scheme, we note from an enclosed card that Foster is tying up with local merchants on Thrift Day or Economy programs. The throw-a-way calls attention to the program being sponsored by Messrs. So-and-So, and that the next program of this kind will be sponsored by another merchant. The merchants tie-up with the idea by donating a window for advertising the theatre attraction, or employ other methods of co-operation with Foster to put over the show.

Thanks for sending in the above, G. H. We know that you are on the job out in Kenton and that you will continue to keep your brother Club members informed as to your activities.

A SHORT, SHORT STORY

Two residents of Kenton, who are "KEPT HUSBANDS" not meaning that they are "kept" at home by their wives, but rather, "KEPT HUSBANDS" in the sense that their wives provide the necessities of life as well as purchasing their clothing, chewing tobacco and other luxuries, decided the other night to embark upon a little "joy journey", which lasted until quite late in the "Ayem". One "PRODIGAL" returning with a fair companion from a dance via the "DAWN TRAIL", was met on the street by his irate wife. You can imagine that there was "THE DEVIL TO PAY". His explanation that they were returning from a dance did not seem to appease the anger of the partner of his sorrows and woes, who immediately began shooting and at the same time shouting, "DANCE FOOLS, DANCE."

This is only the first chapter of this domestic drama. A visit to Warner Bros. Kenton Theatre at any performance this week will provide further enlightenment.

The above short, short story is made up of titles of the different attractions to be shown at

WARNER BROS. KENTON THEATRE
Beginning SUNDAY, April 19th

We shall be pleased to receive other stories in which the titles of the different pictures shown during the week will be incorporated. The above story is simply a sample of the possibilities. To the person submitting the most consistent story five tickets will be given, to the next, three tickets; and to the next, one ticket. Neatness and punctuation are factors in the awarding of the tickets. Have your stories in by ten o'clock Saturday Night, April 20th.

Check These Off!

If you have started to prepare for the warmer weather, then take a pencil and mark off any item that you have taken care of. The others should then serve as a reminder that they are still to be done:

1—Check up on ventilating equipment.

2—Your heating plant to be put in shape for a summer of idleness.

3—Front and signs to be cleaned or relamped.

4—Arrange for greens and flowers for your lobbies and foyers.

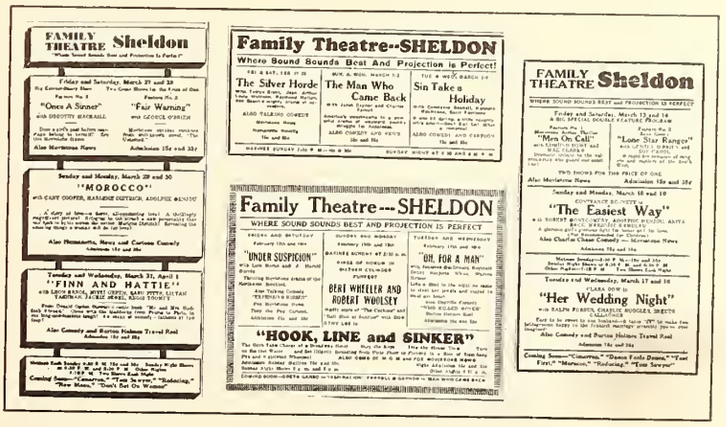
5—Interior lighting should be changed to cool green or other appropriate colors.

6—Get your doorman and ushers into summer-looking uniforms.

7—See that your house and other advertising features are "Cool and Comfortable."

8—Create some "Breezy" gags for your lobby and put some cheery pep into your staff.

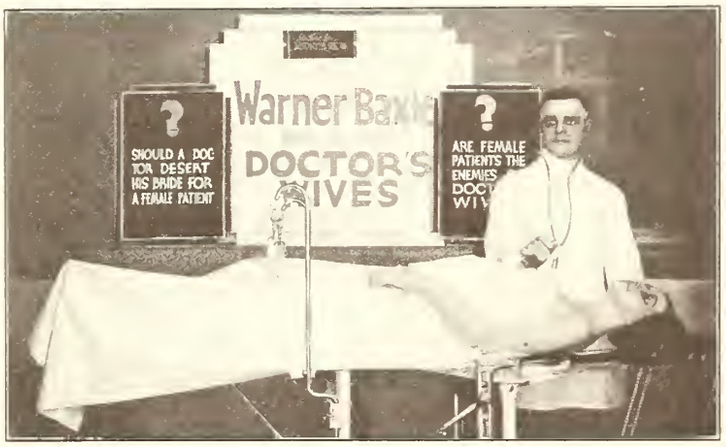
Don't wait until the customers favor the opposition before you get your house in summer regalia. Do it now and beat the opposish to it.



Jones Uses a Solid Type Ad And Finds It Goes Over Well

Solid type ads are most often used at the Jones and Lyons Family Theatre in Sheldon, Ill., by Clayton E. Jones. This method has been adopted by Jones because of the fact that he finds it hard to have the small papers cast the mats the way he wants.

But the solid type ads have proven a happy medium. The readers of the paper pay particular attention to them, and as a result they have proved a business-getting boon. Jones had quite a job when he and Mr. Lyons took the house over, but through a careful study of the public they have been enabled to so figure out the local theatregoers that they know to a "t" just what will click. We are showing some of the various types of ads that are used in the local paper, and in them can be seen one similar to a herald layout that we showed on the Club pages not so long ago. The first ad shows this. And also shows us that Jones is a live-wire and knows how to utilize his herald layouts in his ads, and vice versa.



The owners of the Family Theatre try hard to keep the house up to tap on all modern improvements, and thereby give the public the best that can be obtained. At this time, permit us to introduce Mr. Jones, one-half of Jones and Lyons, and manager of the Family. We are glad to extend him a welcome into the Club and we look forward to receiving from him some more of his work so that we can pass it along to his fellow Club members and let them see what is being done in Sheldon to keep the industry before the public.

Fink Makes Display On "Doctor's Wives" That Wins In Miami

The Club is in receipt of an interesting letter from Jack Fink, manager of the Wolfson-Meyer Capitol Theatre, Miami, Fla., which among a number of subjects treats of some work Jack did in connection with the showing of "Doctor's Wives."

We are reproducing a photograph of a lobby display made by Jack for the above picture which attracted more than an ordinary amount of attention. Both figures, that of the surgeon and the patient, were constructed from borrowed wax figures. Note the regular operating table, stethoscope, appropriate copy and the generally realistic effect produced by the doctor bending over his patient.

Good work, Jack! We are sure that your brother Club members can also effect a loan of the necessary wax figures and cash in the same way you did. We can agree with you when you state that it is one which will excite the curiosity of the average looker.

Jack also used the idea behind the letter in the "Dracula" press book to plug doctors in his zone. The former letter has been reproduced as press book material so we will confine our attention to the one mailed on "Doctor's Wives," which, as far as make-up and text is concerned, is Jack's own. Here tiz:

Dear Doctor:

Last week we wrote you a letter telling of a picture holding scientific interest to you and your profession. That was "Dracula."

Again we are taking the liberty of writing you, this time to call your attention to a social problem with which the doctor often has to contend.

Are doctors' wives jealous of their husbands' female patients? This question forms the basis of a talking picture production called "DOCTORS' WIVES," which will be shown at the Capitol Theatre for four days, starting Sunday, April 12.

Briefly, the story concerns the marriage of a doctor's daughter to a most prominent young surgeon. The marriage runs adrift on the waters of jealousy and suspicion when the idealistic wife falls prey to the familiar saying among doctors' wives that "the patient is the common enemy of every doctor's wife."

Warner Baxter plays the role of the young surgeon, while Joan Bennett is cast as the doctor's jealous wife.

There is much of scientific interest in the picture that you will be interested in, as it shows some of the latest mechanical marvels used by your profession, as well as every other conceivable device that a modern research scientist might have on hand.

We know "DOCTORS' WIVES" will interest and entertain you. We are looking forward to your attendance and are making preparations to handle any emergency calls that come for you while attending the performance.

Yours very truly,

JACK FINK,
Manager Capitol Theatre.

P. S.—We are holding a midnight performance on Saturday, April 11, starting at 11:45 P. M., at which time it may be most convenient for you to attend. J. F.

Thanks, Jack, for sending in the above, for we are certain that it will prove of interest to your brother Club members. Glad to hear that you are so het up over Miami and don't blame you one bit. It's a great place! What you say about business being good is gladsome news, but we wonder if your hard work isn't responsible for a percentage of this increase. There are some other subjects in your letter which we will touch upon later. Until then, so long. Keep the Club posted as to your activities.

Country Store Nite Goes Over Well For Ray M. Butterfield

Who says country store nights don't go over any more? All the disagreeing person needs to do is to drop into the Union Theatre in Attleboro, Mass., one of these days and see how Ray M. Butterfield, manager of the house, uses this gag and you'll agree it's still a good B.O. magnet.

Here's what Ray says regarding the stunt:

"The idea of the stunt is to go out and promote or get, at a small cost, 15 or 20 baskets of food; some with whole dinners, others with all the big articles that you can get, and have them on display in the lobby and then run the idea on Saturday night, giving coupons at the door and having some youngster in the audience do the drawing from a box on the stage.

"One of the reasons that the stunt goes over so well for me is because I make it a point not to have the lucky person walk to the stage. One of my ushers carries the gift to the seat. The stunt is a corker and has gone over wonderfully well.

"Here's another. Now that furniture is so low, we buy about 12 pieces of furniture weekly at cost from some local dealer, and give them away during the middle of the week. Like the country store night, the articles are brought direct to the patrons; while the larger furniture is sent to their homes—unless they prefer to carry it along in their own cars, as many of them do."

Butterfield goes on to suggest that the showman, by acting as master of ceremonies, and putting on a little comedy with the stunt can do a lot to put it across. Thanks, Ray, for your ideas on this gag. We are sure that the slants it contains will be found of value by many showmen who have been looking for just such an idea. Let's hear some more from you, Ray.

Creamer Saves B. O. On 'Rango' By Using Large Letter Stunt

A raging blizzard almost killed business for John Creamer, manager of the Fox-Palace Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, when he opened with "Rango," but the second day broke clearly and with the change in weather came a determination on the part of Creamer to regain some of the lost trade. A gag which he saw several weeks ago in this department on "Paid" furnished him inspiration for the opportunity.

The accompanying photo, taken in one of Muscatine's streets on the day following the big blizzard, shows how Creamer adapted the "Paid" letter gag to "Rango." The five huge letters spelling the name of the feature were paraded around the streets in the downtown section of the city by five boys and the tail end of the parade was brought up by another boy carrying a small banner. Creamer tells us that this was the first time a stunt of this kind was ever worked in his city and that it got him the desired publicity.

Thanks for your contribution to the Anniversary number, John W., and we are passing along your thanks to the brother member who supplied the idea. It is but another instance of the way this interchange of ideas works to the benefit of all concerned. Keep the Club posted on what else you are doing out in Muscatine.

Waugh Puts "Fifty Million Frenchmen" Over In A Big Way

From Howard Waugh of the RKO Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, comes an account of a corking campaign he waged in advance of "Fifty Million Frenchmen." As we glance over the successive steps in the following exploitation it is hard to believe that Howard overlooked many opportunities to impress his public.

Three weeks in advance of the showing this showman made a tie-up with a chain of 39 confectionery stores operating in and around Winnipeg to plug the "new Olsen & Johnson Nut Sundae." Window strips were used in all stores, strips were placed inside on mirrors and special mention made on the menus. He also furnished 25,000 folders advertising the drink and personal appearance of the team. These were distributed in packages of the chain bakery product.

For two weeks in advance Waugh billed the entire country within a radius of 20 miles with 24 eight and three-sheets, and special half sheets with copy reading: "WARNING!—Look out for Olsen & Johnson, who are coming the 18th with Fifty Million Frenchmen." For the same length of time 30 special hand-painted flags were used in both lobbies of the theatre reading: "Olsen & Johnson Are Coming With 50 Million Frenchmen."

All Paramount cabs were tied up for 10 days in advance with banners reading "Olsen & Johnson and Fifty Million Frenchmen Select Paramount Taxicabs. (The same fleet met train and paraded to theatre on day of arrival.) Packard and Cadillac were also tied up for use with banners during the engagement.

Another corking good stunt put over was tying in with a Winnipeg jeweler for a spectacular piece of advertising. The jeweler secured the services of a pilot and airplane for the dropping of a watch by Olsen & Johnson at noon time on opening day. This stunt made a decided hit with the public.

Additional effort included radio broadcasting over the city station by the team every day during the engagement; a tie-up with the Hudson Bay store, where boys made their appearance selling nuts (Hudson Bay called attention to this in their ads); a box draped for the French Consul on opening night, and last but not least the "Winnipeg Press" sold a full co-op page carrying dealers who were co-operating on the campaign.

Well, Howard, no wonder "50 Million" went over the top. We know all this took a lot of work, but it was worth it, wasn't it? Let those who may be able to look back and shake their heads over what they made on this picture dwell a few minutes on the amount of effort Waugh made. That results were more than gratifying need scarcely be mentioned. You can do the same. Thanks, Howard, for passing this along to the boys. We are going to keep right after you for further contributions.

SHOWMANSHIP— FIFTEEN YEARS AGO!

Well, after a layoff of one week caused by the Anniversary Number, we find ourselves faced with the task of picking up where we left off . . . and to start things going we are reminded that once again a "new" (meaning within the last five or six years) gag was old enough to be "not so new" 'way back in 1916 . . . said gag being the monthly program calendar now so popular especially in the smaller towns . . . Bill Smith of the Colonial Theatre in Clarion, Iowa, used one with good results and even had it reproduced in a trade paper that same year . . . Larry Stuart, of the Old Mill Theatre in Dallas, Texas, pulled a good gag when he wrote a letter to the mayor of Dallas asking that a holiday be declared in honor of the most popular comic in America . . . the records do not show whether "Hizzoner" granted the request . . . but they do show that several of the local dailies made a story up about it and thereby gave the picture and theatre a good publicity break . . . so that's that, that's that . . . and that's not all at that . . . because Lee Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson Theatre in Louisville, Ky., made his popular house still more popular when he took pictures of the local pageant and ran them in his theatre as well as in several other houses . . . Manager N. B. Maysmith of the Columbia Theatre in Victoria, B. C., attracted much attention when he used a full page ad in his local paper to announce the showing of Triangle Pictures in his house . . . full page ads are not so usual even in these more "advertisy" days, so we can well imagine the success of the stunt for him . . . And now we learn that Herman Fichtenberg of the Alamo Theatre in New Orleans gave the serial "Peg O' the Ring" some mighty novel publicity and exploitation by some "different" twists for this house and community . . . he built a regular sawdust ring on the street in front of the theatre and had a clown performing for the benefit of those crowds who stopped to view the free show . . . then he fixed up a real circus ticket wagon in place of the usual ticket booth, and billed the Alamo as presenting the "greatest show on earth" . . . W. O. Jensen, manager of the Lothrop Theatre in Omaha came to the rescue of the local school folks who were badly in need of money for their contingency fund to buy a photograph . . . so by tying up with the authorities he packed his theatre for two afternoons and split the receipts with the school . . . results . . . everybody happy . . . school got their money . . . theatre got as much, plus excellent good will propaganda and publicity . . . and harping back to monthly theatre program calendars, we don't want to miss telling you that the Pastime Theatre right here in Noo Yoruk used a pip, probably more like a regular calendar than any we've seen thus far . . . Louie Dittmar, of the Majestic Theatre in Louisville, Ky. (Louisville's getting a break this week) . . . tied up the Kentucky Derby with his theatre by getting the newsreel shots of the race onto his screen the same night the race was run . . . and there being plenty of race-fans in the house, it got him a big hand . . . hey . . . hey . . . get a load of this chestnut, boys . . . Ralph de Brular, of the Piedmont Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., in co-operation with a well-known daily, made a peach of a tie-up in which they dolled up a trolley car with signs, banners and what have you . . . then let it run all around the town and suburbs to plug Billie Burke's serial, "Gloria's Romance" . . . and strange as it may sound at this moment . . . it was one of the finest pieces of work from the standpoint of how that car was dressed and fixed up by the combined efforts of those responsible . . . Although we've mentioned Omaha once before in this week's column we can't pass up the fine ballyhoo engineered by H. V. Side of the Monroe Theatre in that city to sell "Secret Of the Submarine" . . . it was a lulu . . . and how . . . no wonder those babies were clicking at the box office fifteen years ago . . . Manager Stamper of the Tioga Theatre in Philadelphia created something close to a sensation with a most startling advertisement ever attempted for a theatre in the Evening Ledger . . . and it's music to our ears to quote him as saying . . . "I believe in advertising—I believe in refined advertising. I believe in telling my possible, as well as present, patrons why they should attend the Tioga Theatre. . . ." It's ah plashure . . . hontil naxt wik . . . 'slong. . . .

IT'S YOUR OWN FAULT IF YOU'RE LONESOME!

FRED HAMLIN is division advertising manager for Publix in Salt Lake City territory and is introduced to the Club through the medium of Lem Stuart's New York office. We take pleasure in including Hamlin among the members of this organization of showmen and will look forward to publishing some of the live-wire work he's doing out in Utah. Hamlin's work is well known to the Club although this is the first time we've had occasion to acknowledge him as a new member. Let's hear what you are doing out there, Hamlin, and when you write the Club why not include a photo so that we may properly introduce you.

ROGER SCHERER is the manager of the Rialto Theatre, Lima, Ohio, and right now becomes another Ohio representative of the Round Table Club. Roger, your state has long been famed for good work in show business and we have received many a live show tip from the many members the Club is honored to have in Ohio. How about living up to the reputation your brother members have achieved and keep the Club posted as to your activities in Lima. Righto? Send along a photo so that we can use it with our next story.

M. H. NICHOL is the manager of the Palace Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, a Publix house, and is another new member to receive Club welcome through the good offices of Lem Stuart of New York City. The Club is already in receipt of information on some of your work, M. H., and hopes that you will regularly keep it posted as to how you are putting shows over out in Waterloo. If you will send along one of your photos we will give you a proper introduction to your large army of brother members

J. A. GREER manages the Paramount Theatre, Concord, N. C., and has just recently obeyed that impulse to get himself enrolled among this great army of showmen. It won't be long, J. A., before the Carolinas will be 100 per cent Round Table and you've made the goal one point nearer. The Club extends its welcome and will look forward to publishing accounts of how you are selling shows in Concord. We have a lot of very live members in your state and hope to number you among them.

EARL BAUGHMAN is the manager of the Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City, and is still another new member to be introduced through Lem Stuart of the New York Publix office. Earl, an account of one of your pieces of work has already been set in type and will shortly make its appearance on Club pages. We hope that you will continue to let your brother members know what you are doing in the way of selling shows at the Victory. Next time you write you might include a photo for future use

F. R. PETERSON is in charge of the Palace Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa, a city in which the Club has a large quota of live wire members. We know that all Des Moines theatre managers are up and doing, F. R., and that is why we are going to count upon you to keep the Club posted as to what you are achieving in the face of strong competition. We are sure that you are going to have some interesting show tips for your brother members.

MILTON F. HONECK is the assistant manager of the Star Theatre, North Tonawanda, N. Y., and has requested both enrollment in the Club and the privilege of wearing one of the Club pins. Milton tells us that he has been in show business for several years and has worked his way to assistant manager from the bottom of the ranks. He enjoys his work and some day hopes to become a full-fledged manager. The Club commends your spirit Milton and we don't know of any better way to achieve your ambition than association with this large army of showmen. Let the Club know what you are doing in the way of putting the Star over the top.

F. M. FRYE is the advertising manager for Kayton Theatres, a chain company operating in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and whose headquarters are in Franklin, Pa. The Club extends its welcome, F. M., and although it knows that a circuit advertising manager is generally up to his neck with work, hopes that you will find time to let it know how shows are sold over the Kayton circuit. Next time you write, F. M., include a photo so that we can give you a proper introduction.

ELMER F. HOLMBERG is the owner and manager of the Pioneer Theatre, Amasa, Mich., the most recent showman from his section of the state to join this fast growing army. The Club welcomes you, Holmsberg, and judges by the samples of work which you enclose with your application that you are on your toes out in Amasa. Your contribution will appear in a forthcoming issue and we hope that you will continue to keep the Club posted as to your activities.

SIM E. HELLER is the owner and manager of the Grand Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., and is another Michigan representative of the Club, now that we have received his membership application. Sim, the Club is proud to acknowledge that it has a great many live-wire members out your way and hopes that you will fall in line with them in the matter of letting your brother members know what you are doing to sell shows in Grand Rapids. Why not include a photo next time you write?

GEORGE F. STRANDT is the owner and manager of the Arlington Theatre, Arlington Heights, Ill., and the Club takes this occasion to welcome him as a new member. Let's hear from you often, George F., as to how show business is going along out your way. You must have an interesting story up your sleeve so why not send it along so we can pass the tip to your brother members. We can use a photo of yourself if you have one to spare. Righto?

C. W. DOCTOR manages and owns the May Theatre in Mayville, Wisc., and informs the Club that he is an independent operator. Although his house seats but a few over three hundred we note that it is equipped with sound and therefore know that C. W. is giving his patrons up-to-the-minute entertainment. That he takes a keen interest in civic affairs we are aware of by the fact that a stamp boosting the Chamber of Commerce is attached to his application. Let us hear from you, C. W.

J. E. AUSTIN is the assistant manager of the Carolina Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., and is proposed for Club membership by U. K. Rice, manager of this house. J. E. recently left the automobile racket and has joined show business and that's where we believe he's going to stay, judging from a remark made by his superior. The Club will be interested in your success, Austin, so keep us posted on how you are getting along.

SAMUEL ALSTER is the assistant manager of the Fox-Fortway Theatre out in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, N. Y., where Harold Garfinkle holds forth as manager. The Club extends its welcome, Sam, and knows that with the kind of coaching you are getting from Garfinkle it won't be long before you'll be a full-fledged member. Go to it, and let's know what you are doing to help sell shows at the Fortway. And while we think of it, tell Harold the Club sends him kindest regards.

W. E. DRUMBAR is the manager of the Paramount Theatre, Abilene, Texas, and the Club takes this occasion to welcome him as a new member. The Club is glad to number you among its ranks, W. E., and will look forward to hearing from you again. Let us know what's doing down in your town so we can keep your brother members posted. There is many a live show tip coming into the Club from Texas. Do your duty!

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

Round Table Biographies!

Edgar B. Hands, Jr.

Instead of now being occupied with navigating one of Uncle Sam's ships, Edgar B. Hands is at the helm of the Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, Texas. Why the reference to the Navy? Well, after Ensign Hands completed his course at Sewanee University and the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, he just quit being a gob and decided that show business held his life's interest.

After finishing with Annapolis, Hands went to New Orleans and enrolled as usher at the Saenger Theatre. From the bottom of the ladder he was rapidly promoted through the different ranks of the service staff. After a period of two months he was transferred to the advertising department of the main office of the Saenger Amusement Co., under G. J. Meredith, Publicity Director. Following this post, he handled exploitation for the Saenger theatre, under M. F. Barr, manager. He then took charge of the Globe Theatre and subsequently became manager of the Saenger. After completing a course at the Publix Managers' School in New York he was assigned to manage the publicity office at Jackson, Tenn.

Ernest Williams

He walked right in show business, looked around a bit, walked right out and then walked right in again. That's what Ernest Williams did. Which goes to prove that once bitten by the show bug, believe it or not, they come back for more of it—and usually stay.

Williams was 16 years of age when ushering at the Perry Theatre, Erie, Pa., became a source of livelihood but, his course at the Erie Academy High School and a post graduate course in salesmanship left him in an undecided state of mind as to just what his ultimate goal would be. So, after spending two years at the Erie Theatre he left, thinking to capitalize on his sales training. He continued with sales work over a four-year period and by that time the show bug had him in the final stages of its grip, sending him hot-foot back to the State Theatre, Erie, as assistant manager. From the State he went to both Strand and Perry theatres as assistant manager. He was ultimately transferred to the Aris Theatre where he has been for the past nine months in the capacity of manager.

Paul W. Hiltner

To provide the necessary funds to continue his education was the motive which led Paul Hiltner around to a theatre one night in search of employment as an usher and after working in both this capacity and as doorman for a period of six years show business became a habit. He was 16 years of age when he started as an usher and in 1929 became a full-fledged theatre manager. Today he is in charge of the Fox-Palace, Wichita, Kansas. He also managed the Fox Uptown in Wichita until that house closed in April, 1930.

In the interim, between the closing of the Uptown and his affiliation with the Palace, Hiltner operated a neighborhood swimming pool, thus maintaining contact with the public. He is apparently settled in Wichita and if you ask him whether he is thinking of quitting the amusement field for another his answer will be a decidedly negative. Hiltner is married and takes an active part in civic affairs of his town, being a member of several local lodges and civic organizations.

W. A. Lee

From projectionist's helper to theatre manager reads the story of W. Aubrey Lee's rise in the amusement world, and while he's a comparative youngster in the business his several years of experience must necessarily class him among the veterans. Lee was born in Marshall, Texas, in the year 1907 and was educated in Pleasant Hill, La.

He entered show business at the age of 12, spending a year as projectionist's helper at the princely salary of $7 per week—which Lee tells us was a lot of money right at that time. He then graduated to the rank of a full-fledged motion picture theatre operator and held this position for a period of 5 years. For the past six years he has managed theatres and his present connection is with the Crystal Theatre, Many, La.

If he had to start all over again Lee tells the Club that show business would again be his choice of profession and that there isn't a thought in his mind that he will some day leave to enter another field.

Ben Rosenberg

The Bar Association may have lost a lawyer of prominence when Ben Rosenberg became innoculated with the show business germ but what the law lost the theatre gained—in the acquisition of a young manager who is undoubtedly destined to go far in his adopted profession.

At the age of 18 Rosenberg was attending a Boston law school. Money to continue his studies had to be earned and he secured a job as usher in the Metropolitan Theatre. And there you have it in a nutshell. Rosenberg became so fascinated with show business that law studies were forgotten and he's been in this game ever since.

Born in Boston in 1905, which makes him only 26 years of age, Rosenberg has had diversified experience in the theatre business from the ground up. From usher to chief usher in the Met; then to the Olympia, New Haven, to install service; then to the New York Paramount as treasurer and assistant manager; to the Brooklyn Paramount, as assistant manager, and next taken into personnel department of the home office. He is at present house manager of the Boston Metropolitan Theatre.

William Brown

In a frank, confiding, matter of fact manner William Brown informs the Round Tabie Club in so many words that the stars guided his destinv . . . in answer to a query as to why he ever entered show business. His naive reply is: "Just a calling of life," or, in other words of his, "It was just one of those things that couldn't be helped. It had to be!" Well, anyway, our records show that Brown is 39 years of age and started in this business at the age of 21. That makes a total of 18 years' service in this great and glorious profession. So, we must admit his liking for it.

Brown's career in show business ranges all the way from water boy in an old Providence, R. I., Melo house to manager of de luxe neighborhood theatres. His managerships include that of the Keith-Hamilton, New York City; the Fox-Jeffris and Rialto theatres, Janesville, Wis.; the Fox Walker, Brooklyn, and the Fox-Marlboro, Brooklyn. He is now located at the Fox-Lefferts, Queens, where, as he says, he's trying to enjoy some of the fruits of the past hard labors that carried with it the knocks which generally go with each promotion.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such infor-tion as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Kid Pictures

WE HAVE JUST PLAYED "TOM SAWyer," and the reaction that we had from the experience with it is that if you must cater to children you may not expect many adults. The kids would rather have a bang-up good Western than all the "Tom Sawyers" that were ever made. It was very much of a disappointment at the box office and, as usual with Paramount when they have something they think will hit, they sell it for guarantee and percentage with the result that when you check up at the end of the engagement you are in the hole, plenty.

Another thing, for all of President Hoover trying to keep wages up, they have been reduced in this town far more than the cost of living and the box office is being affected worse today than any time in 1930, and that was bad enough.

The small town is in a tough spot right now with wool selling at 16 and other farm products the same ratio. For comparison, a good fleece will weigh 10 to 12 pounds and the farmer gets for a 10-pound fleece $1.60.

Figure it out for yourself how he can get money at that price. Where is he going to get the money for shows at the prices he is being paid for his produce, and that is what we depend on in the small towns, the farmer trade.

If other small town exhibitors are in the same boat that this town is in, silent prices for film are going to be too much.

Business since 1931 set in is fully 40 per cent down from what it was in 1930, and my books will show it.

Fox's "Fair Warning" is a very good action Western, a good story, an intelligent dog and a horse that knows his stuff. How we small exhibitors long for Fred Thompson and his Silver King. He was the ace of the Westerns. Fred for me was a mortgage raiser, and I believe every exhibitor will agree with me. We have missed him more than any Western star that has reached the screen.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Wants Comedy in Comedies

JUST READ MR. HANCOCK'S REMARKS on the quality or lack of quality of the comedies released this year, and must say he has told the truth. I have run many of Paramount's two-reelers and one-reelers this year and have only got one laugh out of the whole bunch. That was when a little boy came out of the show after viewing a program with a one-reel and two-reel comedy in it. He came up to me and said "Haven't you got any comedy today?" They are putting big names in their comedies but what we need is big laughs.

Just a few remarks about the so-called "features" I have foisted on the unsuspecting public lately—

RANGO—Paramount—Did not draw—did not please. A good 2 reel novelty stretched to 59 minutes. Lions chasing monkeys—men chasing monkeys—monkeys chasing other monkeys, etc. Mr. Zukor came out with a statement in your magazines and sent us folders saying it would be the box office sensation of the year. They booked it at the Melba in Dallas for a week and after 2 days took it off, then they booked it in Corsicana, town of 15,000 at their class B 15 house for a big run of one consecutive day. What do you mean? "Sensation"? What I call an unpleasant sensation.

The SPY—Fox—No "draw" names in this. Story very good but cheaply produced. 61 minutes. Too short—needs some action in it, and there was lots of good chances for action in it.

STOLEN HEAVEN—Paramount—Great drama. Too hot for the children. One scene where Nancy Carroll in brief negligee crawls all over Phillip Holmes almost too hot. Did Brother Hays see this? Holmes great. Nancy Carroll a beautiful singing, dancing, musical comedy star is wasted in dramas. Anybody can be dramatical. Put her in more "Follow Thru" pictures.

PARAMOUNT ON PARADE—Paramount—Got them to give me this instead of "Follow The Leader" which I saw in another town and would not run. It's rotten. Paramount On Parade drew well and pleased very much. My folks ate up the colored song numbers. I believe song numbers in colors add 25 per cent to comedy or musical comedy productions, and we could use more of them. L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Tex.

A Refreshing Blast

IN THE MAY 9 ISSUE OF OUR "VOICE of the Industry" came a refreshing blast from one, Brown of Idaho; this broadside shook our old Rockies so hard that it has been snowing, hailing, blowing and raising h——l generally ever since, but I'll bet a bottle of prewar against a plugged nickel that Czar William of Hayesville never heard it, felt it, or saw it! Too bad! for Brother Brown, when he dwelt upon the ailments of Follywood's industry, hit the bull's eye every time he aimed his pen.

We independents ought to frame a copy of that letter and send it to producers, congressmen and to all the women's clubs of America, especially those who love to hear the czar tell them that the movies are now safe for democracy and the children.

Why, the titles alone of the last six months' pictures would tell the whole world that all America had gone gangster, bedroom and lingerie and that outside of bullets, bed linen and smut, we hadn't a single blessed thought.

Thank the Lord, Friend Brown decided to hold a spring house cleaning—for out here in Idaho, we kinda like things fresh, clean and decent! Too bad William and his crowd do not!—Philip Rand, Rex theatre, Salmon, Ida.

An Old Point, But Still Good

SOME OF US RECENTLY WERE DIScussing motion pictures over a wassail bowl, when out of the fumes was blown a thought which seemed then—and also the next day, meritorious.

"Why don't producers print the cast of a picture at the end as well as at the beginning?"

It makes sense. After the cares of a busy day, when I endeavor to sink into a concrete-like seat of the average neighborhood house, I'm in no condition to memorize in 15 seconds a list of trick names as long as your arm a la Addison Sims, of Seattle.

Then as my mind descends to the level of the plot, and the story unfolds or creaks and cracks open, I begin to get interested in the prowess or pulchritude of some member of the cast. The figure seems familiar but the fact escapes me. I should like to see more of her or her work, but unless I sit there until the next show, if there is one, she is "but a ship that passes in the night" to me.

I am told that the plot of the average picture is allegedly keyed to the public's mentality. Then we must be told at least twice who's in it. Look what radio broadcasters do!—L. X.

(NOTE—This suggestion comes from a bright young investment banker who has the honor of being a vice-president of a motion picture company, as well as a box office patron.)

"Colored" Theatre Ads

AFTER THE COLLECTION PLATE HAD passed in church, a little boy was heard to exclaim: "Papa, I got 50 cents. How much did you get?"

Mr. Will Hays, socalled "czar" of the moving picture industry, and also, I understand, an elder in the Presbyterian church, is doubtless a pretty busy man who does not get much time for meditation. But after he has passed the collection plate, and has seen that no coins are taken out, or buttons dropped in, he might sit in his corner and meditate upon the following advertisement of a moving picture that I read some time ago:

"The greatest character since Robin Hood. A borderland bandit . . . riotous . . . rakish . . . languorous lover . . . lady killer and man killer . . . one bad hombre . . . but a good one to know. If you're a woman, he'll love you. If you're a man, he'll murder off your enemies. Any little favor to oblige a friend!"

Mr. Hays may see, with a very slight effort of thought, that this advertisement of "a good man to know" is not quite in accord with the spirit or teachings of the church he attends. A little further meditation may show him that such a public glorification of a criminal may have some bearing upon the terrible spread of crime in this country.

"Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter."—Charles Hooper, Coeur d'alene, Idaho.

House Changes in Pitts. Region

The Granada, Bluefield, W. Va., is now being operated by the newly formed Commerce Theatre Corp., which succeeded Hokay Theatre Co. George Brown is manager.

Jack Maple of Barney's theatre, Pt. Marion, W. Va., has just taken the Arcade, Morgantown, W. Va.

David Miller, former owner of the Hiland, neighborhood Pittsburgh house, has taken over the Lincoln, Chester, W. Va.

The Greenbrier, a new house, is soon to be opened at Charleston, W. Va. The owners are J. C. Shanklin and D. S. MacQueens.

Radio on Stage Aids Feature

Manager Hugh Smart used a novel stunt to aid business at the Montgomery, Spartanburg, S. C., when he placed a radio set at one side of the screen on the stage, and just as the newsreel finished, flashed a spotlight on the radio and an usher began to turn the dial.

At the same time, a radio announcer told about "the good time in store for Montgomery theatre patrons" playing up the picture and added stage attractions.

H. L. Davidson Promoted

Hamilton, O.—H. L. Davidson, formerly manager of the Colfax, South Bend, Ind., has been appointed Paramount district manager covering southern Ohio, with headquarters at Hamilton, O.

DEAR HERALD:

We note by a dispatch this morning that Russia is soon to become Americanized. Moscow is to have a typical American restaurant with an elaborate bar, and she will import American bartenders with cocktail shakers 'n' everything, who can mix Martinis, Manhattans and Bacardis and other concoctions to make whoopee where vodka has failed.

She is also to import an American jazz orchestra to furnish the noise in perfect rhythm with the cocktail shakers. Won't that be lovely!

We have had some hopes for Russia, but now they have vanished. There are a lot of radio jazz orchestras over here that ought to have been in Russia all the while. Let the exodus continue. Hurrah for Russia. They sent us Lenine and Trotsky and now we are getting even.

Making Wisconsin Famous

Is prohibition a success? If you will travel Wisconsin and note the number of roadhouses scattered along the highways all over the state you will be able to arrive at a correct answer. A gasoline pump out front takes the place of that well-known advertisement "The Beer That Made Milwaukee Famous," and on the inside you can get home brew or "heedled beer" that is making Wisconsin famous and that will knock your hat off the first drink and make you wonder why Wisconsin has so many moons. It's nothing uncommon up here to see three or four moons at one time. That's why so many people travel by moonlight. The Badgers used to wear "Blue Ribbons" around their necks but now they carry a recipe for home brew.

Wisconsin has a problem on her hands. She used to have municipal control and regulation, but now she has rural speakeasies with no regulation at all. Up here if you want to satisfy your curiosity as well as your thirst, stop at almost any filling station along the highway. You can get gasoline or you can get something stronger. Is prohibition a success? We wonder.

Say, listen to this. A German has invented a rocket that propels itself through the air and can be directed by radio to land at any point desired.

It carries enough dynamite to blow any town off the map and the inventor calls it a "Hochleiatungsdaeurbrandpulverrakete." He would have given it a longer name but that was all the letters there are in the Dutch alphabet, and besides that, he ran out of breath. Boys, if they ever turn those durn things loose on us we're sunk. Our hides won't be worth a nickle.

Fourth for "Sit Tight"

While we were in Milwaukee last week we went to visit the new Warner theatre which is said to have cost $2,500,000. We didn't care so much about the theatre but we wanted to see Joe and Winnie again in "Sit Tight," which makes about the fourth time we have seen this picture. Winnie probably don't miss us but we are not going to miss Winnie.

Then we went to another theatre and saw a double bill for 15 cents and a chance in a drawing for a Pontiac sedan car, and if you call that good show business then codfish would taste as good to you as huckelberry pie.

The reason we went to that show was because Polly and Marie were playing in "REDUCING," and when we miss Polly and Marie you can call the doctor up to find out if there is any hope for us.

The Alhambra was playing Universal's "THE VIRTUOUS HUSBAND" with Jean Arthur, Betty Compson, Elliott Nugent, J. C. Nugent and Tully Marshall.

This one is a comedy drama of the better sort that is full of laughs and ridiculous situations, since the bridegroom didn't know just how he should act with a brand new bride, and he was therefore governed by a lot of instructions left him by his departed mother who evidently didn't know a great deal about it herself. If this guy would come out to our home town we could introduce him to some boys who could tell him just exactly what to do. We felt sorry for the bride, but couldn't help her any, for she was in Niagara Falls and we were in Milwaukee. It's a good show, you ought to see it, but probably it might have been better had it been Pasteurized in a few spots.

Al Capone's Double

Harry Melcher is an old friend of ours. Harry used to sell us service out at Omaha. He is now the branch manager for Fox in Milwaukee. Harry is a good boy and we like him, but if the officers ever come up to Milwaukee looking for Al Capone they will nail Harry as sure as blazes, for two peas never looked nearer alike.

While in Milwaukee we met Jack Osserman, branch manager for Columbia.

Jack rode with us for about four days once when he was selling film in Northwest Iowa out of Des Moines, and when it was so cold you couldn't scratch a match on a redhot stove. It gets just that cold in Northwest Iowa, sometimes, and that's why they put Nebraska so far away from Northwest Iowa. Jack has become such a full-fledged Badger that he won't come out on groundhog day no matter what the weather is.

Opposes Bunching 'Em

Why do they bunch 'em? They gave us "LITTLE CAESAR," "THE SECRET SIX," "THE LAST PARADE," "GUN SMOKE," "THE FINGER POINTS" and several other gangster pictures all in a bunch, and that's aplenty, if you interrogate us.

Why not give us a few pastoral scenes for a change. We'd like to see Uncle Josh sitting out on the front porch smoking his cob pipe and Aunt Lucy knitting the family socks while the hens and roosters were scratching for worms in the garden and Gertie and the neighbor's boy were marching down the shady lane, hand in hand, and dreaming of hollyhocks and honeysuckles blooming in the garden of love. We'd give 30 cents anytime to see a half dozen little pigs taking their lunch while the old mother sow was grunting contentedly in the shade of the old apple tree. Good gosh, let's have something REAL for a change.

A Debt to Fred Meyer

The theatremen of Wisconsin owe Fred S. Meyer of Milwaukee a debt of gratitude that they should acknowledge and attempt to repay for his untiring efforts in defeating a number of bills before the Wisconsin legislature that would have been disastrous had they become a law.

We speak with a knowledge of the facts, having been with him when these matters came up for discussion before the committee, and we know that through his able presentation of the matter on behalf of the theatremen, he succeeded in getting the committee to indefinitely postpone action on the bills. This is another case where they depended upon George to do it, and George didn't fail them. You can take it from us that "George" is a pretty good guy.

Wisconsin owes us a million dollars, but we doubt if they will pay us over half that amount. We have just brought 'em a million dollar rain, the first they have had all spring. It began raining as soon as we hit Milwaukee and kept it up all week and is still at it.

We have just had a delightful visit with Mr. L. F. Thurwachter, manager of the Park and Avon theatres here in Waukesha, and his assistant manager, Mr. B. P. Schock. Both of these gentlemen remembered us from a former visit, which pleased us greatly, since we are seldom remembered by anyone outside the police department. Waukesha is fortunate in having two beautiful theatres and two managers of the calibre of these two gentlemen.

Mr. Thurwachter was one of the committee who made an argument before the public welfare committee of the legislature at Madison recently, and was largely responsible for the defeat of a bill that would have been disastrous to the small exhibitors and the industry is deeply indebted to Mr. Thurwachter for the interest he took in the matter. Waukesha will always be more than a whistling post to us hereafter. It will be one of our regular stops.

HOLLYWOOD — A dramatic smash with an involved tale that receives simple and effective screen treatment. Von Sternberg's direction is sincere, never allowing the spectacular to intrude upon the keynote of simplicity. In all respects the production is in good taste. Phillips Holmes contributes a splendid performance as Clyde Griffith who, for the love of a new girl, murders the old. Study in repressed adolescence is neatly achieved. Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee reach new heights, and sterling characterizations are given by Irving Pichel and Charles Middleton as opposing attorneys. The audience evinced an enthusiastic reaction at the preview. Looks like a winner despite the tragic theme and death sentence ending, and is sure to receive high critical praise.

Success with Tragedy

SOMEWAY the word comes along the motion picture grapevine that Paramount's "An American Tragedy" is an exceptional picture. It has been seen only in the cutting room and a preview and its public test is before it. The career of the picture will be observed with an acute interest by many persons who are not ordinarily close students of the motion picture. One need not be an admirer of Mr. Theodore Dreiser to admit his place in American letters—to say nothing of his athletic standing in recent bouts. The transcription of Mr. Dreiser to the screen is an adventure both for literature and the art of the motion picture. If it is as decided a success as the forecasts promise, the industry will be happy and a number of professional objectors, including maybe even Mr. Dreiser, will be disappointed. In any event the screen will come in for attention from a usually apathetic sector.

Just a Smile

ONCE upon a time we called on the late Mr. Hy Winik, then an exporter of motion pictures whose business had been interrupted by the World war. "How's business?", we with our great originality asked Mr. Winik. He shifted his feet from the rim of his desk to the floor and remarked: "Well, it is remarkable in this business. It can go bad, bad, bad until you think there's no end to it—and then, all of a sudden, it will take a turn and bang, it goes a lot worse." That was his laugh for the day. After a week of hearing how things are not quite as merry as they might be one comes to the conclusion that the amusement business these days tends to forget that it, and it alone, carries the responsibility for supplying the nation's cheer. We must not let Will Rogers supply all the smiles.

Stratification

SLOWLY, tediously a process of stratification or classification is taking place in the motion picture industry. It extends, or tends to extend, through every functional subdivision of the business, from story to screen. It is a natural, wholesome and inevitable process, but it meets here and there some totally unnecessary resistances, largely because it is not clearly recognized. Some sharper insight in the beginning would have made this process a development, while now it seemingly has to be in the nature of a submerged revolution.

For nearly the whole of motion picture history every picture maker has been trying to make all of his pictures for everybody. All the creative and merchandising ability of the industry has been working as though there was only one public, one taste and one class in the United States, and perhaps it would not be too wide to say the whole world. It is, to be sure, true that there is one greater market offered by the grand average, but no other industry is content to address itself to but one class of customers.

It is all too painfully accurate to observe that destructive competition has always obtained in the picture business so simply and obviously because every maker and seller of films has had an eye to that greatest market and no other. It might now, after three and a half decades of experience, be admitted by some of our masters of the motion picture that no one can sell all the pictures to all of the people all of the time.

The publication business, with experiences of centuries for every decade of the motion picture, affords a clear demonstration of this stratification process. To name any great publishing house in America now immediately connotes, to anyone familiar with the printed word, a certain type or category of books. We know immediately when we see in the imprint of the House of Harper what the book is likely to be like, from physical makeup to content. Doubleday creates another picture, Putnam another. Each one has his special approach. Not even in the dark would one confuse a volume from Simon & Schuster with Houghton Mifflin & Company's product.

Again in the realm of the stage, before its days of decline as the major art began, this process of stratification was clearly in evidence, and it just so happened, the social and artistic aspects of the classification also followed a simple geographical pattern in the city of New York. It began down at the bottom of the burlesque line in the Bowery, ran up through the vaudeville of Fourteenth Street and achieved its zenith at the Century above Columbus Circle. Now every motion picture concern of note today is one which has once been, or has vigorously tried to be, "the biggest in the world." One may observe that Mr. Henry Ford became a very rich man, perhaps the richest in the world, with the least costly car addressed at the largest market. Every other motor maker in the industry did not, however, leap into competition with Mr. Ford. Several of them have done very well indeed making cars for other stratifications of the market.

Some years ago, before the coming of sound, which has for the time most considerably upset the classification process, there were at least the beginnings of a stratification pattern in the production and distribution arms of the industry. A very definite significance attached to corporate names then. "F. B. O. Melodrama" was a trademark of a very certain meaning. Pathe meant newsreel and serials. The words Paramount, Fox, Universal, Metro all had definite meanings of their own, with shades of special meaning and distinction each from the other. But the process had only begun then, and now in a production sense it is to start all over again.

Because of the sheer persistence of real estate and bricks and mortar, the classification process among theatres has developed and tends to develop much more rapidly than the pictures shown on their screens. Varying committees have by their selective patronage tended to create variant types of motion picture theatres, ranging from the slum houses of New York's lower East Side to the magnificences of Broadway, State street and Hollywood boulevard. And now again comes the Trans-Lux with experimental reversion to the nickelodeon on the traffic lanes.

There is not one public, not one standard of taste, not one market for motion pictures. There are many, many of them, and several besides the largest will ultimately be found profitable to serve. Only the force of experience, the weight of gravity, working through competition down the years will prove it.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

THERE is a lot of talk around Hollywood these days that a famous star, who recently completed one of the best of the recent pictures, is about to walk out of the studio which at present has his services. It is admitted that he has had several flattering offers, and it also is admitted that his present employers would like to keep him. He was supposed to be perfectly happy and satisfied and the news that he might quit came as a bombshell.

The reasons for his present attitude seem to be both personal and financial, with the former the stronger. As the story goes, the star, knowing that his contract would expire soon, one day sought the production head of the studio for a friendly talk about the matter. He was received by the secretary of the production head, who said, in a somewhat lordly manner.

"You may leave the matter in my hands. "I'll take it up with Mr. Blank and we will let you know about it."

Whereupon the star, remarking emphatically that he would do business with the boss and not understrappers, walked out and made his way to the offices of a firm of agents known for being hard boiled. Although he never had had an agent before, he signed up with this firm and instructed the head of it to do his business thereafter.

So the star is wrathful, the company is worried about the case and the secretary is in bad—again.

E. W. Hammons is known to feel just a wee bit unfriendly to Allied States Association because of that organization's entrance into the sponsored reel business, which lessens Education's short subjects sales possibilities at Allied theatres. As a matter of fact, Hammons dislikes any ad reel distributor.

But now, the Educational president must depend on Allied to a considerable extent in order to put over Tiffany Productions. Allied has a contract with Tiffany to play that product on a franchise basis, which deal was transferred to Educational when Hammons took over Tiffany operation. The number of Allied theatres which appear on the books of Tiffany as company accounts may not represent a majority of all theatres listed, but it does mean the difference between red and black, for the present, at least.

In other words, Allied is both competitor and customer of Educational-Tiffany.

What's in a Word!

RKO Pathe's home office publicity department concludes a current story to the press with this: "Well, the RKO Pathe lot is certainly a land of romance!"

Romance in Funk & Wagnalls' dictionary is described in this manner:

"To indulge in visionary fabrications; tell fanciful stories; any extravagant story; a falsehood; fabrication; fictitious and improbable."

While Funk & Wagnalls list these, among others, as synonymous:

"Airy, dreamy, extravagant, fanciful, fantastic, fictitious, imaginative, visionary, wild."

All of which places Charlie (Hollywood production chief) Rogers in the spot where he may have to rush to defend the Coast lot from the romance charges of the home office.

THE world's champion resister of temptation has been found. He lives in Hollywood and his name is George Daly. He was a U. S. Marine for fourteen years and now he is the man who operates the machine guns in gangster pictures when it is necessary to show bullets chipping plaster off a wall or plunking into a door. For—believe it or not—when you see machine gun bullets doing their work in a picture, it's the real thing.

Daly has done his work in more than fifty pictures and, no matter what his personal desires may be, he hasn't hit an actor yet. Of course, he doesn't shoot straight at them as it seems in the picture. His machine guns are placed at angles which safeguard the players while they seem to be firing directly at him.

Cameras and everything else give way to Daly when he walks on a set. His guns are placed first, anything else afterwards. For interior work he uses the Thompson gun—the "Tommy." For exteriors he uses the regular Government equipment. He knows the exact power of penetration of every type of bullet and he always carefully pads his targets so that the bullets won't go through or glance off and hurt somebody.

It has taken him some time to impress actors with his skill so that they don't get nervous when they are targets, but he's pretty well set with all of them now. He never permits his shots to get too close to any human mark, although on one occasion he did cut a big "S" on a door, the last bullets coming within a few inches of the star, lying on the floor. If you don't believe he's good, just remember that insurance companies don't kick when he works in pictures with some of their risks.

Of one thing you may be sure: every actor who works in a gangster picture makes himself a close friend of George Daly.

Ufa's entrance into the American theatre field last week and the simultaneous premiere of Jannings' new German talker is of more than passing interest to American electrics and our producer-distributors. The film was made with Klangfilm sound apparatus in Germany and shown over a Western Electric unit in the U. S. Klangfilm-Tobis has the market sewed up in Germany, where American sound films cannot be shown on German devices without paying a heavy royalty. Over here, the Germans show films on American machines and no questions are asked.

Brotherly Love To Music

The Rialto Theatre in Chicago is a two shift house employing two orchestras—one employed for 36 weeks—the other for 52.

The contract of the orchestra which is employed for 36 weeks terminated on May 14, leaving a balance of 16 weeks—from May 15 to Labor Day—to be played by the other orchestra, after which the second orchestra will return to work and the two-shift policy be resumed for another 36 weeks, commencing with Labor Day, 1931. But employment is scarce, and with this fact in mind, the orchestra engaged under the 52 weeks plan has, of its own volition, agreed to split the remaining 16 weeks, retaining but 8 weeks work for itself and transferring the remaining 8 weeks to the other orchestra, thus dividing the year's work equally between the two groups of players.

Last Columbia Meet Opens on Coast Saturday

Third and last divisional sales convention to be held by Columbia opens at the Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood on Saturday, continuing until Monday. Coast and all Western branch offices will be represented by managers and salesmen, who will hear Jack and Harry Cohn talk on new season's product and the recent decision of company executives to maintain present wage scales, with the possibility of increasing salaries in the not distant future.

Jack Cohn arrived in Hollywood on Friday from Chicago where he attended the Midwestern meet with President Joe Brandt, who returned to New York on Tuesday.

Paramount After Downey

Paramount is understood to be dickering with Morton Downey to appear in a series of musical shorts. The previous picture career of Downey, radio singer and night club crooner, was short lived, his "Mother's Boy" musical feature of two years ago failing to click.

Ad Reel, Lined Up by Oscar Hanson, Prompts Expansion Program—Twice-Weekly Issue Will Have 70 Per Cent News and 30 Per Cent Advertising

The proposed Kinograms newsreel which Oscar Hanson has tied up for Allied States as the medium of presenting screen appeals of national advertisers is the immediate cause of an expansion program, which MOTION PICTURE HERALD learns exclusively will give Allied representation in each and every territory in the United States. Allied now has state units in 23 out of 33 key city exchange spots and by August 1, when the Allied Kinograms contract becomes effective, the association will have established representatives, and possibly incorporated exhibitor bodies, in the remaining 10 territories. This will mark the first time in many years that any national exhibitor association will have countrywide representation.

Allied States, headed by Abram S. Myers and Al Steffes, will not follow the lead set by Paramount and Warner Brothers in terminating activities in the sponsored advertising reel field.

30 Per Cent Ad Appeal

The twice-weekly newsreel will run average length, approximating 700 feet, of which 70 per cent will be given over to news topics followed by 30 per cent in footage for the advertisers' pictorial message. Kinograms has contracted with Allied to sell the advertising space, produce the reel in its entirety and completely finance all production. It will have no contract with the exhibitor, turning over each release to Allied State units for distribution, although there is a possibility that a major distributor will take over physical handling. Allied State units would have supervision in the event that a deal is made with a distributor. Each Allied unit will continue with the present practice of selling and rental collection, with theatres paying between 25 cents and $10 each issue in rentals, dependent upon prices decided by vote of members of each state association. Part of this "rental" is turned over to the state association as membership dues and part goes to the national organization treasury, with the rest turned over to the Oscar Hanson Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the parent Allied body.

Hanson told MOTION PICTURE HERALD that, unlike the policy adopted by Paramount

Charles Rosenzweig

RKO salesmen have been warned against underselling. "It is very apparent that some of our men when told not to oversell a small situation, but to sell product on an equitable basis, consider that we mean to give pictures away, stated Charles Rosenzweig, RKO vice president and sales chief, in a home office order to the field staff.

"If this is your thought, drive it right out of your heads," Rosenzweig told the sales crew. "We have no desire to give our film away," he said.

"We want to, and must get prices in small situations in keeping with what the man can afford to pay, and by that we don't mean to get any lesser amount of money per picture than we got last year. . . . Any exhibitor that is getting a better quality product, no matter how small his situation might be, can afford to pay the average 'Titan' price that he paid last year, and only in such exceptions, where conditions warrant it, will we accept anything but the average 'Titan' price that we got last year," stated Rosenzweig.

Joe Is In the Black

Initial reports from England listed the name of Joseph Kennedy, Boston, as the winner of $250,000 in the English sweepstakes on Wednesday. And the New York film colony immediately assumed it was Joseph Kennedy, formerly of F.B.O., First National, Pathe and other companies and now retired from picture activities. Later dispatches, however, revealed that the lucky Kennedy is a negro, which, of course, eliminates the "Joseph P" of film fame.

REBELLING AGAINST PICTURES

Jeannette Stratton Porter, daughter of Gene Stratton Porter whose vast popularity as a novelist attests to her knowledge of what the public wants, has written for MOTION PICTURE HERALD the following discussion of a certain type of motion picture story which has largely characterized recent product.

Jeannette Stratton Porter's views reflect those of an important segment of shrewd and intelligent public opinion and are submitted to the industry as a contribution to the discussion of where production is drifting.—M.Q.

By JEANNETTE STRATTON PORTER

A LONG time ago I had a pet theory. Womanlike, I still cling to the remnants of it. I expounded this idea at every opportunity in a very ardent, but which later proved to be, a very ineffective manner. I talked at clubs, luncheons and parties; I even convinced my mother, which was something; but the only result was much applause and no action, and in the end it is action that counts.

Being the mother of two growing daughters, I was confronted with the problem of selecting suitable pictures for them to see, and the task soon became a large order. The answer seemed simple enough. Why not persuade each producer to include on his yearly program a few pictures particularly for children? There were books, music, radio hours, and other entertainment exclusively for youngsters. Surely, it was not necessary to tax a child's mind with the satires and subleties the adult demands and deserves; neither was it necessary to insult the intelligence of an adult with the vagaries and insipid brand of humor designed for the delight of children. Certainly a sharp line could be drawn; the problem would be solved; there would be pictures for children which the adults might see if they chose, while children could be kept away from adult pictures unsuitable for undeveloped mentality and morality. But the answer was not so simple as I had thought: the bubble burst almost before it was blown. Producers found it impractical to make pictures for Saturday matinees only; it involved too much expense.

With the talkies problems have increased —also the family. A youngster might have missed a printed title or a picturized inference, but the talkies leave little to the imagination. Now the old question of pictures for children is practically eliminated: we are forced to provide other diversion and amusement for them. I am now concerned with the much more important question of what pictures we adults may see which will not outrage our sense of decency and code of morals and insult our imagination, mentality and sense of humor. A few days ago I heard a very erudite gentleman say that we have no fundamental sense of sin. Why complicate it? Wrong is wrong; right is right; and "never the twain shall meet." Between right and wrong there is no compromise.

So had I no child at all, I should still have to rebel at such pictures as "My Past," "Illicit," "Strangers May Kiss," "Born to Love" and "A Free Soul." The sinister thing about these pictures is that they are dressed up to appeal to one's sense of beauty and artistry—acted by handsome men and gorgeously gowned women capably directed; attractive sets lavishly decorated, intriguingly lighted and marvelously photographed. But such stories! After uncontrolled living and loving, everything ends well and they live happily ever afterward; no apparent reason in the world to the flapper and her escort viewing it casually, why they should not go forth and do likewise!

I was interested in a remark made by one flapper of nineteen when I asked her how she liked "Strangers May Kiss," and she answered quickly, "A filthy story beautifully done—but very modern." The only mistake she made was the "modern." It is as old as the everlasting hills; it began with the beginning of man and it will last until the end of man. But why drag it out in the open? Personally, I hate to leave a picture with a bad taste in my mouth, and feeling as if I needed a mental catharsis.

The injury and evil influence is not confined to the young people. There are men and women who have tasted the bitterness of the dregs of life; they have repented, decided to forget it and live decently. Their emotions and reactions are alive and keen; all they need is an idea or an inspiration to send them up or down. Certainly such pictures as I have mentioned are an unmistakable shove in the wrong direction: the youngsters get a thrill out of a new idea, and the aged have desires awakened which must remain unfulfilled. All of which is unnecessary, unkind and a good deal of a crime. Perhaps I speak too plainly, but if we are to get anywhere we must speak the truth and face the facts.

Producers have a tremendous responsibility. In the final analysis they have much for which to answer. It is a dangerous thing to broadcast wrong ideas, because fortunately or unfortunately we are prone to take our ideas seriously. A gangster cannot be a hero, and it is wrong to picture him as such. A man or woman may not sin and go on living as if nothing had happened either in real life or on the screen: there must be not only repentance and forgiveness, but retribution and punishment. It is wrong to picture it otherwise. There can be no successful story, play or picture without a theme about which it revolves; therefore let us have a theme with decency to dignify it, and a backbone of morality to hold it up and make it strong. And by this I do not mean that we want to be "preached at," or have our moral lessons hurled at us as an anarchist hurls bombs. There is no reason why any sane mind should react to a false premise; but all sane minds are not strong minds, and therein lies the danger—the strong are safe; the weak will suffer.

In a way making pictures is like sowing seeds—one cannot be sure which will take root, nor what will grow. But producers can keep their consciences clear by giving us only invigorating respectable pictures. Sordid, foul stories should not be written or published, but the fact that they are does not constitute a logical or reasonable excuse for picturizing them. We do not want our pictures to achieve the state of degradation our stage did. Producers fight censorship, yet sexy, salacious pictures cry for it with open arms. It is significant or not that two years ago seven states were considering censorship, and this year twenty state legislatures are concerned with that vital problem?

Producers make a mistake if they decide what the public wants wholly by box-office receipts. Many people go to pictures not knowing what they are likely to see; some do not read much, and if they did most of the story titles have been changed. More often than not, patrons see a picture they do not approve, or want for entertainment; yet they have done their bit toward increasing the receipts. Recently I knew twenty people who left a picture furious and disgusted; but still they had contributed twenty admissions which no doubt helped the producer to decide what the "public wants."

I have heard producers sigh and complain because they "had to make pictures for morons"; it seems to be their favorite expression. To me it seems that they are trying to make morons out of those of us who have a spark of morality and a shred of intelligence left. I believe producers worry too much about what their public will "understand." I have always resented that; nothing makes me madder than to see a stunt in a picture, and then see it immediately repeated so that the "moronic minds" of the public will "get it." The first time it is good; the second time it is merely disgusting. We are a pretty keen public, and we "get" what is handed to us; we also "get" the way it is handed. If producers will concern themselves more about all phases pertaining to healthful, constructive pictures, and less about what audiences will understand, they will go farther and last longer.

I belong to the average picture public,

LABORATORIES' SETUP HINGES ON CONSOLIDATED'S SUIT vs. WARNER

Botsford Advises

With reports from the M.P.P.D.A. indicating that salacious and morally questionable advertising have not yet been completely eradicated (although nearly so), A. M. Botsford, Publix ad chief, urges his circuit managers to follow both the letter and the spirit of the advertising code in the preparation of all printed or drawn selling material.

Six Other Sued Concerns Wait Trial Results

Competitive Attack by Independents Expected If Consolidated Wins and Companies Accept

Upon the outcome of Consolidated Film Industries' forthcoming patent infringement suit against Warner Bros., which is scheduled for trial in U. S. District Court in Brooklyn on June 15, depends the entire future setup of the motion picture laboratory field. A decision favorable to Consolidated probably would completely revolutionize this branch of the industry.

Consolidated now has pending in U. S. District Court patent infringement actions against Warner Brothers, Paramount Publix, Fox Film, Columbia, DuArt Laboratory, Myer-Reiger Laboratory and Duplex Motion Picture Industries. The suits have been filed by H. J. Yates, Consolidated president, through the company's subsidiary, Cinema Patents Corporation, in which is vested control of all Consolidated laboratory patents. And if the Yates interests are victorious in the initial action against Warner Brothers, insiders in the laboratory field believe that the remaining six defendants, all named individually in suits, will accept the decision as applicable to their cases, without going to trial. They will then decide whether or not they will continue in the laboratory field by paying heavy royalties to Consolidated, or completely abandon developing work and turn it over to independents. In the event that Warner, Fox, Paramount and Columbia decide upon abandonment—if and when Consolidated wins the first of the series of threatening suits—there is expected to develop a bitter competitive battle between independent laboratories headed by Nat Saland's Craft Film, against Consolidated, to obtain the developing and printing business now done privately by the four major distributors mentioned in court actions.

One hundred per cent of all Warner Brothers laboratory work is done in the company's own plant at Brooklyn. Paramount does 95 per cent of its own release print work, while Fox handles the same amount. Columbia does 75 per cent of its own work.

West Coast laboratories, of which Howard Hughes' Multicolor and Yates' Consolidated plants are the largest, handle in Hollywood 90 per cent of all negative developing and first print work, while laboratories in New York, including those company-owned, concentrating chiefly on duplicate, or release prints, turn out 75 per cent of all work of that type.

In the suits filed by Consolidated-Cinema Patents, the company charges infringement of its Spoor-Thompson and Gaumont patents on developing and printing machinery.

Nat Saland, of Craft Film laboratories, has completed a deal with Gaumont, Paris, for 28 new developing and printing machines.

Debunking Openings

Filling the newspapers with photos and biographies of the big executives and the lesser officials on the occasion of a theatre opening is out, as far as Fox West Coast is concerned. Neither the photo nor the biography sells the show or the theatres, the managers have been told.

This policy was exemplified at the recent opening of the Fox Arlington in Santa Barbara, Cal.

Extended Runs in Chicago Average But Twelve Days

With the closing of the run of "Front Page," the United Artists theatre at Chicago completed playing of United Artists 1930-31 product. No more United Artists pictures will be available for the house until September, when the first of the company's new product will be released. From now until September the theatre will use other companies' pictures, with "Women of All Nations" (Fox), now current, the first to play the house on its "foreign" booking season.

Shorter duration of runs this year than last exhausted the United Artists product at this house at an earlier date than heretofore. The situation was not peculiar to the one theatre or the one company's product, but was generally noticeable at all Loop run houses during the year. The average run at extended engagement houses this year was 12 days, as compared with 18 days for the preceding year.

Another factor which contributed to the earlier completion this year of United Artists picture engagements at the theatre was the lack of Paramount product suitable for mid-season booking at the United Artists. In the preceding year several such productions, notably "The Vagabond King," were set in at the house in mid-season for good runs.

New Model of Televisor Introduced to Radio Trade

A console cabinet model of the Televisor is being introduced to the radio trade at the Chicago Trade Show this month by H. S. Baird. It will have an 8 x 10 picture for use in the home and before 20 or more individuals, the sponsors said.

Report Mix With Universal

Reports indicate that Tom Mix will star in a series of Universal Westerns, each to cost about $50,000. Mix, according to the report, is to put up part of the cost, and receive a percentage of the receipts.

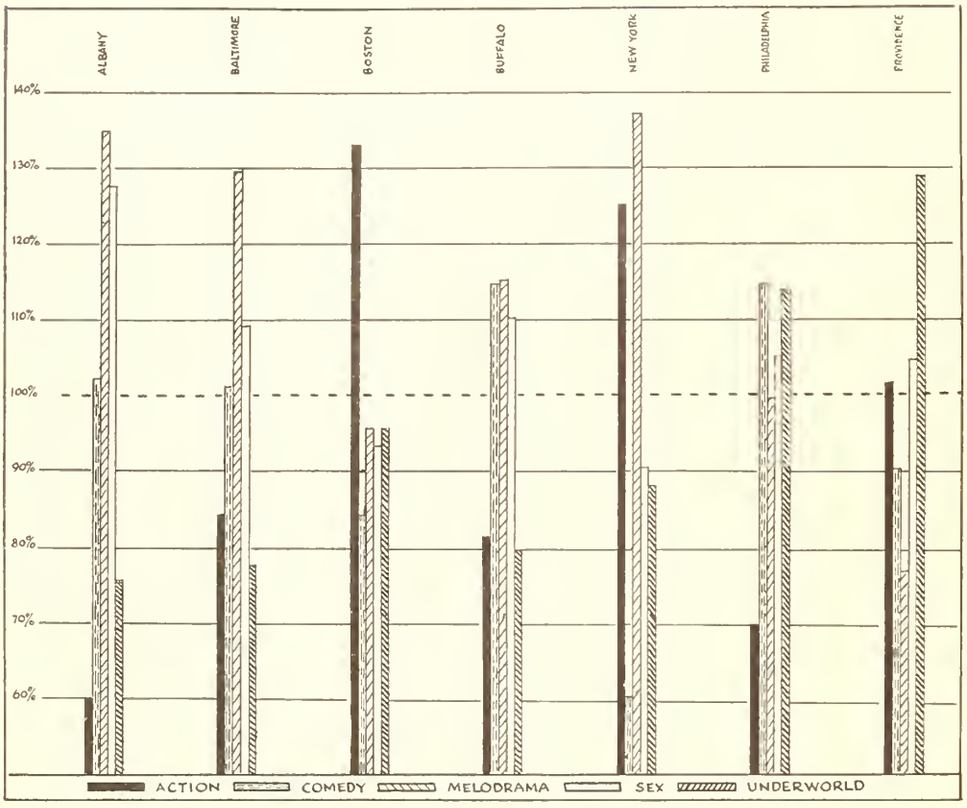
"Free Soul" Follows "Trader"

The Broadway run in New York of M-G-M's "Trader Horn" was followed this week by the company's "Free Soul," Norma Shearer's newest work.

Confiscation of Houses Seen in Momand's Suit

Indications that confiscation of property will be sought as the method of procedure in Oklahoma in the anti-trust suit filed by Clarence Tankersley, county attorney, at the request of Momand Theatres, Inc., of Shawnee, against a number of individuals and companies, are seen in the announced plan of Tankersley to confer with Leon Hirsch, attorney employed by Governor Murray to seek confiscation of properties of several large gas corporations on charges of violating the Oklahoma anti-trust laws.

A. B. Momand charged in the suit in superior court that a trust agreement to "freeze out" independent theatres had been entered into by L. C. Griffith, R. E. Heffner, John B. Terry, Universal Film Exchange, Paramount Publix, Regal Theatres, and Griffith Amusement Company.



Appointment of a receiver is asked for the Bison, Criterion and Ritz theatres in Shawnee and other theatre properties affected by the agreement.

British Plan No Change In Quota Despite Sound

No change in the quota law is contemplated by the British government at this time, according to William Graham, president of the Board of Trade, London, who told the House of Commons that although he understood there was discussion about the advisability of amendment as a result of new conditions arising from the coming of sound, no definite recommendations had been made.

Milligan with Keystone

James Milligan has joined Keystone Engravers in New York. Milligan has sold ad space in the trade paper field for the past 18 years, representing at various times Billboard, Associated Publications, Moving Picture World and New York Telegraph.

The East likes its melodrama in pictures, with this type of attraction holding the key spot in four of the seven cities included in Motion Picture Herald's survey of grosses and audience reaction in the Eastern section of the country. Staid Boston has a leaning toward action films, with this type of picture holding second position in New York. In no instance in these seven cities do sex pictures lead in point of popularity. One hundred per cent in the above chart represents the average gross for all types of pictures.

Lee Readies for Expansion with British Talkers

Percy Waters this week joined Arthur A. Lee in what is expected will develop into the most pronounced effort to give widespread distribution in the United States to English talkers. Waters was a General Film chief before that company quit many years ago.

Arthur A. Lee

Lee's organization, Ameranglo Corp., reenters the field of importing British product to the States after an absence of three years, during which he concentrated on exporting American films to England. Quality of London talkers during that time reached a low form, Lee said, but since American producers have invaded London studios for quota production purposes and for the making of multi-linguals, the standards of entertainment value have been raised considerably.

Lee will handle product of Gaumont, Gainsborough, British Lion and Welsh-Pearson, all of London, and which combination will make 30 feature talkers in 1931-32. Ameranglo will pick approximately 20 which are suitable for the American market.

"Possibilities of good British product looks better than at any time in industry history," Lee stated, and "if they continue at the same pace as at present, English talkers will make greater inroads in the American market than ever before."

"Hollywood has been brought closer to England by American companies," said Lee, "which brings England product closer to American distributors."

Lee believes that English films suffered seriously in this country in the past because major U. S. companies had plenty of product for their circuit theatres, and paid no attention to importations, except in rare instances. "Now, however," Lee said, "they are more concerned with the jeopardizing of theatre properties because of a dearth in good product and economic conditions, and if England sends over talkers which are sure-fire box-office, the fact that they are of foreign studios will make little or no difference."

Lee has received the initial 1931-32 release, Edgar Wallace's "The Ringers," declared by Lee to be the first London talker to arrive in New York for the American market which is suitable for immediate release "without the editing of one single foot." He now is negotiating with a major distributor for handling the picture in this country.

All product imported will go through various national distributors, stated Lee. He has disposed of a series of four Harry Lauder song shorts to M-G-M, made at London by Gainsborough and Welsh-Pearson.

Ameranglo will not handle other foreign language talkers in the U. S..

Move on to Pick "Cream" of U.K. Films for Canada

English-Canadian interests are desperate over the situation which keeps from Canadian screens practically all releases from the Mother country.

So desperate are these British factors that, working secretly, they have reached an agreement whereby attempts to build up prestige of English product in Canada will be made through a system of selecting only the best English-made films for showing in the Dominion.

A series of feature releases has been worked out, with Regal Films, having exchanges in Canadian keys, handling distribution. The group will be sold in block, with but a few deals consummated singly.

British International, British and Dominion Films, British Lion Studios and Gainsborough, all of London, sponsored the movement.

A trade ban on British productions in Canada is charged by the film committee of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, which says that British pictures are being purchased solely so that they will be shelved.

Double Features Suffer If Theatres Unventilated

With the advent of Chicago's first hot spell of the year cooling plants went into operation around the city and demonstrated the accuracy of predictions made here some weeks ago as to the effects of warm weather on the business of double featuring houses not equipped with the cooling systems.

Business was off appreciably in the latter type theatre, whereas the houses with cooling systems, although likewise using double features suffered appreciably less. The theory advanced is that the presumed "bargain" draw of double features ceases to exist when patrons are obliged to view them in the discomfort of an unventilated theatre during hot weather. A single feature program may be sufferable under these conditions, according to opinion here, whereas a double bill is regarded as a handicap under the same conditions.

Denies Stage Reports

Jean Harlow, in Detroit on her way to the Coast, denied reports that she would play in either Ziegfeld's Follies or Earl Carroll's Vanities, as was reported.

FOX'S GROSS OF $102,004,009 AND $10,251,827 NET BREAK ALL RECORDS

Assets Reach $201,354,574 Increase of 9 Millions

Non-recurring Expenses Lowers Net To $9,205,434, Equal to $3.64 a Share

Fox Film's 1930 gross of $102,004,009, and a net operating profit of $10,251,827, which appeared in the long-deferred annual company report this week, broke all previous records, the increase being attributed in part by "acquisition of additional properties, but much more to the fundamental stability and steady growth of the industry."

"Hardly another industry of this magitude could be mentioned in which growth has been so nearly uniform, or in which the ratio of gross income to costs has been so nearly constant," the report said. "The explanation of this experience undoubtedly lies in the fact that the industry satisfies universal human needs scarcely less essential than food and clothing. In fact, reports appear to indicate that the present depression has affected more seriously the demand for food and clothing than it has the demand for amusement, recreation and instruction."

The $102,004,009 gross for 52 weeks ended Dec. 27, 1930 compared with $83,184,112 for 1929 a net of $10,251,827 compares with $9,469,051, but an item of non-recurring expenses brought the net profit carried to surplus down to $9,205,434. This was equal to $3.64 a share on 2,525,660 shares of stock outstanding, compared with $10.78 a share on 920,660 shares at the end of 1929. Net 1930 operating profit before non-recurring expenses amounted to $4.06 per share.

The much discussed differences in methods of writing off of production costs between the method used by Touche, Niven, the corporation's accountants and that employed by Price, Waterhouse, who represented the bankers in the April refinancing program, were discussed by Harley L. Clarke, president of the corporation, who said:

"If the proposed new write-off table of Price, Waterhouse were used, the difference between amortization obtained and that set up by the company, as determined and certified by Touche, Niven, would be $894,261 for 1930, and the net would be reduced by this amount. It is to be noted, however, that the effect of the change would be simply to add to the write-off against the income during the past year and to decrease by the same amount the write-off to be deducted from the income of subsequent years."

This would reduce the net to $8,311,173. Amortization, as contained in the Touche, Niven report, amounted to $27,305,357, compared with $24,158,544 in 1929 and depreciation on plant and equipment, exclusive of studio property, was $3,875,560, against $2,678,761.

Other differences between the company's report and that prepared for the bankers were the methods of auditing depreciation and including subsidiaries. Regarding depreciation, the difference between the basis used by the company and that of the bankers amounted to $805,607 for 1930. The company's method of including assets and liabilities of subsidiaries in the balance sheet has been to carry its interest in all properties not 100% owned as investments. If properties more than 85% owned were included, as in the bankers' audit, the property account would be increased by $2,500,000 and the funded debt by $1,700,000.

How Income a/c Was Handled

In the income account the company includes all American subsidiaries controlled regardless of the percentage of ownership, while the bankers' audit includes the proportionate part of net profits of companies in which Fox's interest exceeded 50%. In the case of companies owned 50% or less the bankers' report included only actually received by Fox as dividends.

Readjusting the surplus and profit and loss statement to the accounting principles of the bankers' auditors, Touche, Niven reported a reduction in earned surplus of about $6,047,169, of which $2,688,974 is applicable to 1930 and $3,358,195 to prior years. After deduction of $2,688,974 from the 1930 profit, this would leave $6,516,461, or $2.58 a share on the stock.

Explaining the company's stand on the two methods of amortization controversy over which delayed the annual report almost two months, the report said the company continued to write off its inventory during 1930 in exact harmony with the method recommended and accepted by public accountants for the sound films released in 1929.

"In spite of the substantial values of many pictures long after the 52 weeks of 'life' accorded them," the report said, "it is now the practice of Fox Film to write off completely the cost of all feature pictures at the close of 52 weeks after their domestic and foreign release dates."

$382,622 Lost by "Dead" Theatres

The item "non-recurring expenses" in the income account also came in for an explanation in the report. This, the report said, includes a considerable number of expenses which the management has cleared up and disposed of, some of which could have been written off at the close of the preceding year. The largest item ($382,622), the report said, consists of abandoned unprofitable theatre leases, while the remainder is made up of organization expenses, salaries in discontinued departments, fire losses, legal fees, and royalty and contract settlements of prior years.

Assets for Three Years

A comparison of the company's balance sheet as of Dec. 27, 1930, with that of June 30, 1930 and that of Dec. 28, 1929, shows a steady increase in total assets, the latest figures for this item being $201,354,475.50, compared with $192,524,313 on June 30, and $124,243,716 on Dec. 28, 1929.

Remarkable improvement in the net working capital position was brought about in the year. At the end of 1929 Fox had an excess of more than $19,000,000 in current liabilities over current assets, while as of Dec. 27, 1930, there was a net working capital of $15,494,118. Cash on hand at the end of 1930 amounted to $5,308,942, which, while off slightly from the June 30, 1930, figure, showed a substantial increase over the $2,492,599 cash reported as of December 28, 1929.

During the year, the report states, the pro-

(In the foregoing table the column "Gross Rentals" includes all rentals from pictures released during the respective years, regardless of the fact that these rentals were received over a period of about two years. The table cannot include the pictures released in 1930 because they are still being exhibited. In fact, on the date of this report 20 pictures had not been released in foreign countries, from which 33 per cent total gross rentals are received.)

PICTURE STOCKS REFLECT RECOVERIES

Reduced Volume of Turnover Indicates Less Pressure Exerted Against Motion Picture Issues

By THE ANALYST

A run in of shorts late this week brought about recoveries in film issues after some of the leaders on the New York Stock Exchange had dipped to new record lows. Although losses were in the majority at the end of the week, film shares were well up from recent lows. Reduced volume of turnover in amusement stocks, compared with accelerated trading in other groups, indicated that considerably less pressure was being exerted against picture issues.

Response of film shares to the strongest general rally since 1929 indicated that any substantial recovery would be participated in by amusements if for no other reason than the technical recovery they are in line for as a result of thorough deflation of the last few weeks. However, other reasons may be included. As indicated by 1930 and first quarter 1931 earnings reports, the industry was among the last to feel effects of general depression, so it may reasonably be assumed that the business will be among the first to stage a comeback—a possibility enhanced by recent evidences of sounder business management in the industry.

Some picture stocks looked upon favorably in the financial community sold off to new lows in the past week, but, aside from Eastman Kodak, always a wide mover in both directions, recessions were confined to narrow proportions, compared with the bad breaks that took place in other groups of stocks.

Kodak encountered aggressive support and scored a sharp recovery from the earlier low. Decline to a new low was said to be due to heavy selling from Rochester, but it was learned that no important unloading had come from upstate and the rebound in the stock suggested an overcrowded bear interest scurrying to cover as a result of general market improvement and a statement by George Eastman saying no change in dividend policy would be made.

Loew's, which has stood market pressure longer than others, was forced to a new low for the year, but later recovered. The stock is looked upon as one of the best in the group. A statement by Standard Facts and Forecasts said, "We see no reason to revise our previous estimate that as much as $7 a share may be earned in the full 12 months, 1931" by Loew's.

RKO was another strong spot which succumbed to bear pressure and touched a new low. Reaction was moderate. Paramount sold off to a new low at 19⅝, but came back to above 22. The company has received its first income from investment in Columbia Broadcasting, which declared a 15 per cent stock dividend, amounting to $825,000, payable in stock at 50.

Fox and Warners were steady features, former encountering strong support on the showing of the annual report. Interest now centers in the forthcoming directors' meeting and dividend action.

General Theatres was quiet, although its convertible 6 per cent bond sold off to a new low at 25, giving rise to reports of a possible readjustment in the company's capitalization after the Fox dividend meeting.

On the Curb Exchange, new lows were made by Columbia, Fox Theatres, National Screen, Technicolor and Trans-Lux, but all moved up from their lows late in the week.

Adversely Speaking

This has been a record year for adverse legislation. Speaking, of course, of the motion picture industry. More than 300 bills affecting the industry were introduced in the legislatures throughout the states during the 1931 sessions. This is approximately twice the number which generally finds its way into the hopper.

In an effort to put through reforms, sponsors of these measures went so far as to make them riders on game warden bills. "Bobtail" bills, you might call them.

Finale: A big majority were defeated.

The income account of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation for the 28 weeks ended March 13, 1931, shows a net profit, after taxes, of $3,535,439.

Broken down, the report indicates figures of $7,004,382 gross profit and operating cost of $3,441,581, leaving operating profit of $3,562,801. Miscellaneous income totals $454,743 for the period, and a net profit before taxes, of $4,017,544. Federal taxes totaled $482,105.

Paramount Shares in Big Columbia Radio Dividend

Columbia Broadcasting Company, 50 per cent owned by Paramount, has declared a stock dividend of 15 per cent, totaling $825,000 and in addition to an initial quarterly dividend of $1 a share in cash.

The King Is Dead—!

That mystery and romance have crept from the background of recent months, to the forefront of film production theme, superseding on that temporarily dominant but very shaky throne, the gang and underworld film of recent success, is indicated by the lately announced production schedules of the various companies. But immune from cycles, trends, and schemes of things, moves on unmolested the Western, unadulterated hero boy and heroine girl romance, where right triumphs, etc. And after the romance and mystery—what next!

Pathe News Drops Four from Staff

The operating staff of Pathe News was this week subjected to revision downward and in the Trans-Lux newsreel theatres allied with the Pathe reel a reversion to a policy of one change a week in program became effective. These theatres, two of which are now in operation, are served by Pathe News, and Universal and Paramount newsreels.

Four members of the staff of Pathe News received notice, stating that the discontinuance of their services was due to the "economic condition," according to a quotation of a note issued by Jack Connolly, general manager for Courtland Smith, the operating chief of Pathe News and the Trans-Lux theatres project. The four men involved are Major Ross Duff Whytock, first the contact man for Pathe News, joining the organization when it went into sound, Floyd Traynham, camera and contact man of long connection with Pathe, Yancey Cumings, a recordist formerly with Fox News and a more recent addition to the Pathe staff, and Tom Craven, a cameraman.

The Embassy Theatre, the Fox newsreel house, served by Fox Movietone News and the Fox-Hearst Metrotone News, continues a policy of continuous daily additions to the program, dependent on news developments.

Columbia, Educational Win Actions Against Exhibitor

Columbia and Educational were awarded $660 and $560 respectively in Manhattan municipal court by Judge Prince, on unplayed picture contract charges. The S. & E. Amusement Corporation, operating the Star in the Bronx, was defendant.

The court held that a theatre concern is liable for films, contracted for under one signature even though he serves notice on the distributor that two signatures are necessary, if he continues to play film bought under one signature.

Roy Scott Leaves Paramount

Further evidence that Paramount is through with sponsored reels is the resignation of Roy Scott, who has been in charge of sales.

HOLLYWOOD HERALD STARTS NEXT WEEK

New Publication Completes Coverage and Service of Quigley Papers Reaching Entire Industry

Next week sees the advent of The Hollywood Herald, third and newest of Quigley Publications in the service of the motion picture. The Hollywood Herald is launched as a daily attuned to the special interest of the current affairs of the producing community of the industry. The new publication is in completion of the coverage and service of the Quigley papers, with Motion Picture Daily in New York and Motion Picture Herald, the dominant national weekly periodical of the industry, reaching the whole of the industry from studio to exhibitor.

The launching of The Hollywood Herald is in consummation of plans formulated and announced by Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief of his publications, some months past upon the absorption of Motion Picture News by the Herald-World with their merging into Motion Picture Herald.

While The Hollywood Herald will cover world news as it may interest Hollywood, its special domain will be the presentation of the operations and interests of the motion picture makers in their own community, which regardless of geographical boundaries means wherever pictures are made.

The new West Coast Quigley daily is under the editorship of William A. Johnston, widely known writer on motion picture affairs and for many years editor of Motion Picture News. Leo Meehan, journalist, motion picture director and writer, is in charge of the general management. The staff include Frank Pope, formerly of New York, once an outstanding figure in the newspaper world of Park Row and later managing editor of Photoplay Magazine, and Lin Bonner, a newspaper and motion picture writer of wide experience east and west and more recently with the late New York World.

In format and style The Hollywood Herald will confirm with the best modern typographical practice, without indulgence in eccentricities of treatment for the sake of modernism.

"The Hollywood Herald," observes Martin Quigley, "is designed to be read by an intelligent following of busy people, intensely interested in the affairs of their industry and in each other, seeking information cheerily delivered and independently written."

Flinn to Appeal Dismissal Of Habeas Corpus Request

Appeal on behalf of John C. Flinn and H. F. Lally in the Pathe fire action will be taken to the appellate court of the State of New York from the dismissal of the request for a writ of habeas corpus by Justice Frankenthaler. The action cannot come to trial pending decision of the higher court.

A Retake's Fate!

At the MGM plant on the Coast, last year, 200,000 pounds, or 40,000,000 feet of film was burned to ashes, very valuable ashes, as it happens. It was all a lot of "retakes." MGM follows a practice of holding all retakes for three years, the normal life of a picture. Then it is burned, which is not at all wasteful, because something like 250 pounds of raw silver was extracted from the ashes of that 200,000 pounds of retakes. In case anything should go wrong with the negative, the retakes become valuable, which is a good reason for keeping them!

Weisfeldt Starts Picture Classics

Picture Classics, Inc. was organized this week to produce and distribute novelty features and short subjects. M. J. Weisfeldt, veteran producer, distributor and exhibitor, is president of the new company, which will make travel, science and song films, travesties, and novelties designed especially for juvenile patronage. No set number of releases has been determined, it being dependent upon the availability of suitable material, Weisfeldt stated.

Pictures will be recorded in several foreign languages in addition to English versions and color will be used in many.

Weisfeldt, who has been in the industry since its early days, is credited with conceiving the world tour of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, who brought back from Africa and other points feature travel material. He also supervised a number of other travel films and handled world distribution.

300 Chicago Theatres Vote Out Double Feature

More than 300 theatres of Chicago and vicinity are pledged to enforce a ban on double features as a result of a one-hour mass meeting following two months of negotiations. It was agreed to "end the practice at the earliest possible moment."

Committees were named to evolve a plan whereby pictures already contracted for can be played on deferred dates. Two hundred exhibitors joined in the decision.

Projectionists Walk Out

The Spokane Theatres, Inc., under the direction of Ray A. Grombacher, is operating with non-union projectionists, following a walk-out after wage reduction questions could not be settled.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

PARAMOUNT NEWS laboratory in New York is on the watch for a J. Grimm, who is supposed to be a member of the lab staff, and who is credited with having supervision over "every inch of film of a large newsreel" (supposedly Paramount)! . . . although no one at Paramount has ever hear dof the gent! . . .

A strange series of events began to unwind the other day when an anonymous contributor penned a missile to the New York Graphic in which the author explained at great length a strange "Svengali-like" chap named J. Grimm, who, among other things, including his newsreel activities, has great "powers and prowess over women," "conducts a bizarre cult," is a "globe-trotter" of no mean repute, "negotiated a 20-million-dollar loan between American bankers and the Polish government," negotiated a "systematic interchange of syndicated material between American and European periodicals," "speaks 20 languages," handles "many of the best stories and cartoons from abroad" for American publishers, "served in the German, Polish, Austrian, Czechoslovakian and Red armies and the French Foreign Legion," "works 20 hours a day and sleeps only every three or four nights," "conducts a translation and art service," etc., etc., and just about everything else that man or science can think of. . . .

Emanuel Cohen's office at Paramount knows nothing of the individual, nor has the news laboratory any record of a J. (Svengali-cultist, globe-trotter, banker, author, linguist) Grimm.

So, with curiosity aroused, Paramount sent a crew of "Sherlocks" to the lab to seek out this genius in their midst. . . . And though the "Sherrys" have searched and scoured every corner of the lab, to date they have discovered no trace of the strange Grimm. . .

Barrymore's "Svengali" is playing the Hollywood theatre in New York, not so many blocks away from the Paramount laboratory . . . which may or may not prove significant. . . .

AMONG BEST PICTURES OF YEAR

"Certain to be numbered among best pictures of year . . . Has unlimited appeal . . . Sure fire story, bounteous mixture of laughs, thrills, tears and beauty . . . Splendid entertainment for man, woman or child . . . Janet Gaynor does best work since '7th Heaven' . . . Smart modern treatment, excellent dialog . . . Good for high school trade, family trade, downtown trade, neigborhood trade.

"If you like your pictures smart there is plenty of smartness. If you like some tears prepare to shed them. If you prefer laughs, you'll get your money's worth." —Motion Picture Herald

WILL BE HOUSEHOLD WORD

"For months this reviewer has been hoping against hope that at least one studio would turn out a picture that could measure up to every standard of acting, photography and decency and have real appeal to human interest without pandering to the sordid.

"Fox has done 'Daddy Long Legs' along lines that will make it a household word. Fathers and mothers can take their children to see it without squirming in their seats . . .

"Picture is probably finest work done by either Gaynor or Baxter . . . Fox can sit back, hear the thunderous applause, and listen to the merry clink of the dollars." — Hollywood Daily Screen World

BEST SINCE "7TH HEAVEN"

"Janet's most satisfactory appearance since that memorable hit '7th Heaven' . . . Ought to have wide appeal and point the way back to the good graces of a considerable audience that has gotten out of the movie habit." — Los Angeles Evening Herald

FOX CAN BE PROUD OF IT

"A world of sweetness rolled like floating summer breezes across the silver sheet away from the general run of things cinema, such as sophisticated gangster and slapstick comedy stories. 'Daddy Long Legs' I predict will be received as welcome relief. Warner Baxter carries off title role in magnificent fashion. Personally I believe this to be Baxter's best screen work, certainly his most difficult role. Fox Film Co. and those who contributed to this production can be proud that their efforts will be appreciated. As sweet and refreshing as first breath of spring. You'll be the loser if you miss it." — Los Angeles Evening Express

Fox Orders All Ad Reels Out of Circuit Theatres

Fox's circuit of several hundred theatres has been thrown over to the anti-advertising film camp. Beginning immediately, houses operated by this organization will avoid booking sponsored reels, and those runs which have contracted for a series will abandon the practice upon expiration of existing contractural obligations. And with Fox's declaration to house managers, Paramount and Warners are joined in the list of major companies who have ordered sponsored reels tabooed on screens controlled by them.

"Screen advertising may be a source of revenue to the theatre—but it is a dangerous one," Fox tells its managers in the anti-ad reel order. "Even your best friends wouldn't tell you how unpopular and cheapening screen advertising is with theatre patrons," states the home office.

"Instead," executives point out, "they wisely choose to voice their disapproval of the practice by staying away from your theatre.

"People pay the price of admission with the main idea of receiving entertainment value. Screen advertising is not blessed with the least qualities of audience interest.

"Screen advertising is a bore to customers. It interrupts your entertainment. It has as much place on a theatre program as a boxing match in a grand opera concert recital.

"Screen advertising is taboo!

"Do away with whatever screen advertising you are now using, and turn down any that may be appear in the future. If you are under contract, eliminate this practice upon the contract's expiration.

"Every dollar that it yields is but an advance drain on future income of your house.

"If, and when, your theatre is not running screen ads, stress this fact to the public in your newspaper publicity. This information will be well received and well advertised by the newspapers—who have long felt the cutting in of screen advertising on their own revenues."

German Bill on Private Shows May Hit Foreigns

A bill has been passed in Germany classifying pictures as to those which may be shown in public and those for private presentation. The bill, which met sharp opposition, is seen as a particular threat against foreign pictures with German versions. Certain pictures, on which the censor previously had made only slight alterations, might automatically be placed under the second grouping.

In Belgium the experiment has been tried with certain films permitted only in theatres where minors are barred.

Katz Tells Managers to Leave Swivel-Chair and Work Out Front

"Economy does not mean inactivity," in the opinion of Sam Katz, Publix theatre chief, who, in a message to company operators, following recent salary slashes, states that "Merely because a necessary policy of economy has curtailed some of the media upon which you managers normally rely to put on a show and to sell it to your public, is no reason for inactivity. On the contrary, if ever there was a time when activity is acutely needed, it is now!

"In normal times," he said, "when a theatre can avail itself of its complete machinery for putting on and selling a show, the chances are that even without any activity on the part of the manager and his staff, a natural momentum would carry the gross to a more or less satisfactory level. But in times like these, when business is not only harder to get but the very machinery for getting it has become appreciably curtailed, the manager who resorts to inactivity is signing a death warrant for his theatre!

"That should be obvious to any thinking person," continues Katz. "Twice as much effort is required to support a heavy weight with ONE hand as with TWO. I should hate to think what would happen if BOTH hands were dropped.

"Of all possible activity around a theatre, there is one which, to my mind, takes precedence over all others. That is for the manager to be on the job every minute of the day, from opening to closing time. And when I say on the job, I mean that he should be where he can do his theatre the most good—on the floor."

If Americans Dominate British Picture Industry, What of It?

Needs More Foreign Influence, Not Less, Says Mooring—Gaumont-British Case Rouses Agitation

By W. H. MOORING, London

Further suggestions that Gaumont-British has come under American control through interlocking of financial holdings has been agitating the House of Commons. Parliament Member Remer asked the president of the Board of Trade whether he had discovered a remedy for the process by which Gaumont had passed into American hands by financial arrangements involving the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, the United American Investing Corporation and six other persons of whom some represented American interests. He pointed out that under the Articles of Association of Gaumont, there existed special provisions designed to prevent this—as he termed it—"disastrous state of affairs." Would the president of the Board of Trade consult the Wilfred Greene Committee (formed to study the national situation in relation to company law) with a view to receiving recommendations on the subject of amendments to the company law which would prevent companies controlled directly or indirectly by foreigners from calling themselves British in their trade name. Mr. Remer also asked whether a report presented to the Government by the London Trades Council, as to the control of the British film industry by American interests, would be published by the Board of Trade.

Cites Share Holdings

The Rt. Hon. William Graham, president of the Board of Trade, replied by repeating details he had laid before the House of Commons on April 21. These disclosed that the annual return of the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation dated October 30, 1930, showed that of the 5,000,000 ordinary shares of the corporation, 3,105,000 are held by the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, which is therefore in control. The annual return of the Metropolis concern, dated November 5, 1930, revealed that of the 10,000 "A" shares which alone carry voting rights, 4,950 are held by three persons of British nationality named Ostrer; 4,750 by American Investing Corporation, and 3,000 by three other individuals. According to a statement issued by Gaumont-British it appeared that 200 of these shares represented the American interest already mentioned, leaving 100 shares held by a British subject independently of the other interests.

Mr. Graham admitted that remedies if sought would involve the amending of the Companies Act: he was not willing to promise that he would lay the matter before the Wilfred Greene Committee without first inquiring further, but every consideration bearing on the amendments to the existing company law would be taken into account.

The report he had received from the London Trades Council was private and confidential, and its publication rested with the London Trades Council entirely, he said.

Politicians Don't Understand

By traditional rights the politicians of Great Britain have become immune to public inquisition. No one asks these M.P.'s what it means to the British public if Gaumont-British has come under the control of America. There are many in the industry itself who, assuming that active American influence had been brought to bear, and that some of the present British studio labor had either been displaced or put under Hollywood supervision, would feel that they could look forward to an improvement in the quality of the Gaumont output.

Politicians cannot be blamed: they do not understand, and with few exceptions there is little likelihood that they ever will. But if there are any doubts in trade circles as to the advantages or otherwise of a closer relationship between the film business of Great Britain, and that of the United States, it should be put on record that every progressive step made in the mechanics of British film production has been inspired by the United States. And in almost every case where the importation of American technicians has been tried out, the results have shown definitely to the advantage of the finished picture.

Quota pictures made here for American renting houses have certainly done more to discredit serious British film product than anything else could possibly have done. But nearly all these wretched trashy quota pictures have been made by British producers who are the prototypes of those politicians responsible for asking why any foreigner should be permitted to come here and do what a Britisher can do. They both make the same mistake: they assume that the Britisher can do that thing. But very largely experience has shown that he cannot. With regard to finance: American money seems to stink in the nostrils of the flag-waggers, yet money is wanted here—and sorely.

Within the past three weeks, two millionaires—British to the backbone, though their fortunes were made in foreign lands—have developed cold feet as a result of the disappointment experienced by a wealthy young friend of theirs in film deals. They would have been prepared to invest large sums in the British film industry, but withdrew when he told them of his losses. A year or so ago that young man backed one of the "all-British and proud of it" directors. He made a film which save for its dialogue and acting was 100% French. It was ridiculous and the French guillotine which figured largely in its inordinate length itself suggests public reaction to the film.

What the British film industry needs is not less foreign influence, but more.

Russia Planning Large Scale Picture Production, Report

Report has it that Russia is completing plans for motion picture production on a large scale, with $20,000,000 already appropriated by the government for film production within the next 18 months.

Three gigantic studios are now under construction, according to report, and agents are now viewing material in Hollywood and European film centers with a view to signing players and technical people.

Says RKO Is Not Seeking Theatres in Europe

General Manager of Circuit Calls Retrenchment Conference on Return from Vacation

"Stop crying!"

That is Joseph Plunkett's terse answer to the present economic situation.

"They're not crying abroad, and shouldn't here," said the vice president and general manager of RKO theatres, who has just returned with Mrs. Plunkett from a European trip.

In England, he pointed out, they accept the situation as one which is bound to occur from time to time and make the best of it. The same attitude, he said, should be taken in this country.

Plunkett put thumbs down on the persistent report that his mission abroad was for the purpose of acquiring theatres there. RKO, he contended, has plenty of work right here at home without looking to foreign fields.

The day the Ile de France docked Plunkett called a session of his department executives for the purpose of trimming summer operating expenses. This had been anticipated, and in several instances the executives were prepared to present new overhead schedules.

It is not expected, however, that the personnel of the departments will be hit by the retrenchment. The company is relying on the paring of other costs to meet reduced summer receipts. This policy, it is felt, will help to maintain a high morale among employes.

While you find the combination bill abroad, said Plunkett, it is not as general as in this country.

"Everyone in England," he said, "seems to be out for amusement today. As in America, they are shopping for their amusements and mediocrity is fatal, but the worthwhile things are being patronized in the legitimate, in the varieties and on the screen. In Germany, the slogan seems to be 'bread first, then the movies.'"

Salaries to Stay, Declare Columbia, Fox, RKO Chiefs

Salaries shall not be cut. That is the dictum from headquarters at Fox, Columbia and RKO. The statement of Joe Brandt of Columbia at the sales convention in Chicago that "economies other than that of cutting employees' salaries can and should be effected in this business" reflects the attitude of chief executives in the other companies.

At the same time, managers of Fox West Coast theatres have been ordered to reduce their overhead 10 per cent. Among suggested methods of paring expenses are elimination of unnecessary employees in the theatres, elimination of official titles that tend to limit the field in which an employee will work, revision of the type of program, use of only effective lobby cards and heralds, rearrangement of relief hours so that the number of individuals on the payroll can be held down to a minimum.

Managers are instructed to establish relations with union officials in the possibility of effecting relief in the number of union men required.

Other suggested economies call for the use of theatre employees instead of outside labor for minor repairs, limiting ballyhoo to that which proves effective, reducing printing and engraving bills, eliminating telegrams where letters will serve just as well, cutting down on phone bills, on overtime, concentrating newspaper advertising on openings and decreasing fixed charges.

Universal will remove the cuts in salaries of employees "when and if the time comes that we can restore the salaries to their former levels," Carl Laemmle declared.

NVA Fight Nears Climax in N. Y.

Trustees of the NVA Fund, headed by Sam Katz and Pat Casey, are expected on Friday to answer demands of an insurgent group in NVA who have asked that all books and funds, totaling $500,000, be turned over to members.

The trustees several days ago ordered the NVA clubhouse closed because, they stated, the association's fund could no longer be used to run the headquarters building, but should go to charitable and sanitarium enterprises of NVA.

The insurgents, in retaliation, demanded that books and funds be turned over to them and insisted upon a decision on Friday. If the trustees refuse, the insurgents are said to have threatened court action.

Business Great At "Poor Man's Family Theatre"

Patrons Help One Another, and Anyone Can Write Pass for Children of Unemployed

Business is great at the "Poor Man's Family Theatre," Quincy, Mass. The answer? William Preston, manager, is the answer.

William Preston

Good times are here right now, says Preston, and the experience of the Merchant theatre (that's the real name) is his evidence.

Any adult anywhere is authorized to write a pass for any child whose parents are unemployed, and these children are treated to a complete show on Saturday mornings. Not once, writes Preston to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has that privilege been abused.

Furthermore, when unemployment became a problem at Quincy, the Merchant Theatre management launched a Good Will Campaign, with patrons helping one another and the theatre acting as liason officer. More than one hundred families were fed and clothed. Best of all, no one knew who had helped him; no one was made to feel ashamed of his own misfortune. Merchants participated and everyone benefited.

Another thing. "Children are really taken care of by us," writes Preston, "and that means that we handle hundreds. They are not permitted to disturb adults with undue noises or running around. Parents have come to look upon us in such a light that it is quite an ordinary thing for a mother to stop in on an afternoon and check her several kiddies as you would your automobile, with the exception that the mother is permitted to place her children in their seats, then, when shopping is finished, to return for her children and take them home. There never has been a child misplaced and no one has been disappointed."

A further reason for calling the Merchant the "Poor Man's Family Theatre" might be found in this: "We charge 10 and 15 cents admission. That appeals to the usual 10 and 15 cent following. Then the next step is up to us. We give a real show, double features and excellent sound, all of which we advertise. We give courtesy to everyone, and that doesn't mean in a stilted manner a la some of the so-called picture palaces, but the kind of courtesy we would show toward any lady or gentleman visiting our own home.

"We try to radiate a contented personality, and avoid looking as if we were depressed. And by and by the public senses the fact that we are getting along tiptop, and they just can't resist climbing into the old flivver and coming for an evening's rest and enjoyment. We know every patron visiting our theatre, or at least he or she thinks we do even if they never came here before."

Dietrich Avenue!

In Cincinnati, Marlene Dietrich is very emphatically competing with herself. Her German language film, "Three Loves," is playing the Erlanger Grand Opera House and "Dishonored" Paramount picture, is at the RKO Family. As it happens, the two houses are almost directly across the street from each other. Presumably, that would be "sewing up" the market!"

Allied Backing Tax On Circuits

The Allied States organization is lobbying in the Ohio legislature for a tax on circuits based on the Indiana graduated chain store levy, recently declared valid by the United States Supreme Court. The Allied action is looked upon as a counter move against the 10 per cent admission tax being discussed in Washington.

The move is expected to sharpen fears among New York executives that the chain store tax will, in substance, be levied against the film industry.

Students of the Indiana tax see it as discriminatory in favor of independent operation at the expense of circuit operation.

I. H. Ruben of F. & R. Dies 4 Months After Partner

I. H. Ruben died this week at his home at Lake Minnetonka, near Minneapolis, after having survived by only four months M. L. Finkelstein, who was his partner in the development of the Finkelstein and Ruben circuit of 135 theatres. Funeral services were held Tuesday.

Ruben, who was 63, started as a newsboy in Syracuse, N. Y. He entered the show business with Finkelstein 23 years ago in Des Moines. The F & R houses are now a part of the Paramount Publix holdings.

Ontario Will Not Enforce British Quota Regulation

The British quota law will not be enforced in Ontario, in view of the insufficiency of British films to meet the requirements of five per cent of total pictures shown.

Manitoba also will not proceed with a proposed quota law because there are not enough available British films.

Publix will reopen the Rialto in New York shortly as soon as a new policy is worked out, according to Sam Dembow. The first announcement was that there would be an eight-weeks shutdown.

Operators Win Delay in Chicago Conspiracy Quiz

Attorneys for the Chicago operators' union have succeeded in sidetracking the inquiry launched a week ago by the state's attorney's office by raising a secondary issue after having defied a court order to surrender the records of the union. The records, taken by investigators for the racket bureau, have been returned to the union on a writ of replevin obtained before they could be examined by Charles E. Lounsbury, assistant state's attorney, conducting the investigation. He immediately obtained a subpena duces tecum ordering their surrender, but this was ignored by Michael Ahearn, of counsel for the union, even after a motion to quash the subpena had been turned down by Chief Justice McGoorty of the criminal court. Lounsbury then entered a contempt action against Tom Reynolds, president of the union. This was to be heard on Friday, but union attorneys stated that if Reynolds is found guilty they will go to the Supreme Court if necessary, as a test case.

Lounsbury had hoped through the union records to obtain indictments against union officials charging conspiracy to damage the business of 150 independent exhibitors who asked the state's attorney last week for relief from union demands, which they said would force them out of business for the summer or permanently.

SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS IN HOLLYWOOD

New Color Organ To Sway Emotion

Automatic conversion of music into changing colors to synchronize with the moods of the music is the objective of a new color organ described to the Institute of Radio Engineers in convention in Chicago June 4 by E. B. Patterson, research engineer of RCA Victor Company. The idea is to make a simultaneous appeal to both sight and sound for greater emotional effect.

The new instrument was made commercially possible by the use of thyratron tubes. By plugging in different switches on the color organ, the color combinations produced by the music may be varied according to individual taste.

Visualizing its applications to the concert stage, Patterson described a performance of the RCA Victor Color Organ with an orchestra. A microphone placed close to the solo instrument might be made to produce a single colored light of a given shade, while a second microphone brought different colors into play from the other instruments in the orchestra. The first light weaving a color pattern in rhythm with the solo part as the other colors formed the background in synchronization with the rest of the orchestra. Another application, he said, might be to water fountains.

Academy Speakers Discuss "Co-operation on the Set"

The Art and Technique Committee of the Academy of Arts and Sciences at the symposium in Hollywood held June 3, discussed "Co-operation on the Set."

Carey Wilson presided, with Adolph Menjou speaking for actors, B. P. Schulberg for producers, Douglas Shearer for sound engineers, Virgil Miller for photographers, Scott R. Beal for assistant directors.

Charles Goetz with Consolidated

Charles S. Goetz, independent producer-distributor, has joined American Recording, the disc-record subsidiary of H. J. Yates' Consolidated Film Industries in New York.

Improve Sound Reproduction, Or Lose Public, Says Crabtree

Producers Should Emphasize Projection Before Revival of Musicals, SMPE Is Told

Improvement of the quality of reproduced sound must be achieved if the public is to remain entertained, President J. I. Crabtree of the Society of Motion Pictures Engineers declared at the banquet of the Society, holding its Spring Meeting in Hollywood.

This requirement holds true particularly in reproduction of music, said Crabtree, who called the present standard of reproducing of speed "very satisfactory." Much is to be desired, he declared, in the presentation of music in pictures.

"If I were a producer," Crabtree declared, "before participating in the threatened revival of musicals, I should pay a great deal of attention to the subject of projection. Most producers are likewise exhibitors and realize that it is foolish to spend millions on a production and have the artistry of the picture destroyed by imperfect projection. The projectionist is one of the most important cogs in the complex motion picture mechanism, and he should be encouraged and educated."

Work for the Amplifiers

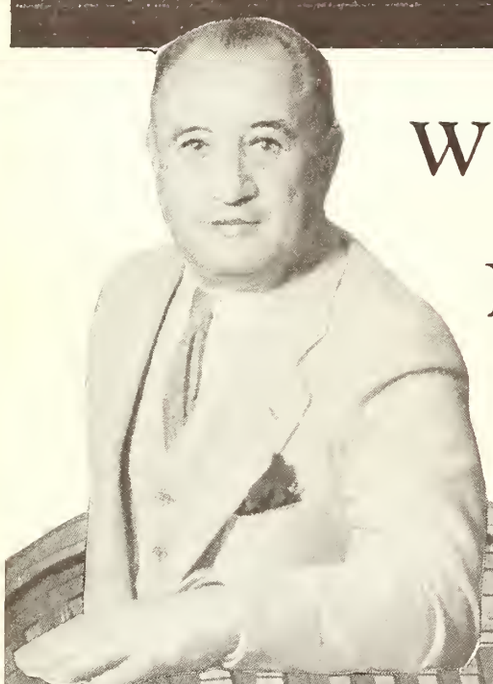
To attain greater realism, the said, "we engineers must extend the frequency and column-range of the reproduced sound, reduce ground noise still further, and add sound perspective." He pointed out that recent researches show the sound energy produced from a symphonic orchestra of moderate size may run as high as 50 watts in the louder passages, requiring 100 to 200 watts of undistorted power from the amplifiers. He added that many existing installations are capable of handling a maximum of only 10 watts.

Crabtree declared that larger projection rooms will be required for the increasing amount of apparatus that will be necessary. He explained that such equipment might include apparatus for reproducing sound "from a separate film record with multiple sound tracks to permit of sound perspective and special effects—with sound equipment having adequate reserve power to stimulate every type of natural sounds—and with projectors capable of giving depth to the picture."

"Color has not had a fair chance," the SMPE executive said. "I think that color inserts of pretty ladies are more fully appreciated, at least by the male public, than statistics would indicate. The sudden demand and the rush to obtain color prints without sufficient time for preparation make it difficult to get prints of satisfying quality."

Cooperation with Academy

Crabtree urged close co-operation, without rivalry, between the SMPE and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. "There is adequate room for all technical organizations in this great industry," he declared. "Each organization should draw attention to the publications of the other."



Sound Waves, Film Star!

Delegates and visitors to the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Hollywood were shown an unusual film picturing sound waves and air currents photographed at a speed of 40,000 pictures per second, which is 2,400,000 per minute. The film was taken at the laboratories of the Aeronautical Research Institute of Tokyo, Imperial University, Tokyo, Japan, under the direction of Baron Shiba, institute director. Showing the paths taken by the air when coming into contact with objects of various shapes, they are expected to be of value to airplane designers.

duction department of the business was put under budget control for the first time, and savings of at least $3,000,000 are expected to result therefrom in 1931.

During 1930, Fox Film declared dividends at the rate of $4 a year a share, totaling $10,102,240. This amount was barely covered by net operating profit before non-recurring charges, but is not covered by net after that charge. Further, it is $3,585,778 over the income if it had been calculated on the basis suggested by the bankers' accountants.

The company's annual meeting is scheduled for June 10, at which time banking interests who provided the recent financing for the company are scheduled to be named to the directorate.

Increase in Theatre Receipts

In recent years Fox has had an even more rapid increase in theatre receipts than it has had in film rentals. The following table gives an outline of the growth of this part of the Fox business so far as it relates to American theatres:

Year	No. Theatres	Gross Receipts
1927	2	$ 2,054,700
1928	249	33,923,783
1929	455	39,962,044
1930	532	51,414,002

This gives the number of theatres controlled by Fox Film but does not include theatres operated by Fox Theatres Corp., an affiliated company. The last column includes the receipts only from the dates of control of the various theatres and hence not necessarily the total receipts of the theatres during the year. The corporation owned or had an important interest in 1,013 theatres, of which 532 are in the U. S., 395 in Great Britain and 86 in Australia. (Fox Theatres properties are in addition.)

Revenues from Movietone News and the other Fox news services have increased 21% in 1930 over 1929, and 14% during the first three months of 1931, as compared with the corresponding period of 1930.

Investments in Movietone City, the Hollywood studio, laboratory, studios of the Movietone News, and the home office in New York exceed $14,750,000.

The total number of employees in all its departments is now 12,888.

The Budget System

The total cost of administration and the distribution of films has been a steadily declining percentage of film rentals, with the lowest relative costs last year in the history of your company. In 1930 the administration and distribution costs were more than 45% lower in comparison with film rentals than they were in 1925," Clarke stated.

Analysis of Profit and Loss

In this report there is a condensed consolidated statement of profit and loss. The first item of $96,446,346 includes $45,032,344 received from film sales and rentals, about two-thirds of which was from domestic sources and about one-third from foreign sources. It also includes $51,414,002 from theatre receipts, of which there were minority interests in the case of 141 theatres. It will be observed that a minority interest in profits of $790,057 is deducted near the center of the statement.

The other items of income are self-explanatory with the exception of "Other income." This item consists of income from a great variety of sources, the largest of which is interest on bank deposits and payment discounts of bills for purchases, these two together amounting to nearly $300,000.

In the first deduction under "Expenses" the largest item is $44,440,870, the cost of operating the theatres, office buildings, technical laboratories, etc., of your company. The next largest item is the expense of maintaining film exchanges throughout the world.

"There is one remaining material difference between the audit as of September 27, 1930, and the present report," Clarke said. "Subsidiaries of Fox having acquired isolated and small groups of theatres at various times, inherited special accounting practices pertaining to these properties, among which was the custom in some of them of setting up depreciation on theatre equipment (not buildings) of from 15% to 22.5 per cent per year. This is not only regarded as excessive for properties adequately maintained, as those operated by your company are maintained, but some of this property has already been fully depreciated, although it is yet in good condition and in use. Consequently, in its consolidated statement, your company sets up depreciation for these properties, until they are completely written off, at the rate of 10 per cent on their cost, or precisely the rate at which it sets up depreciation for other similar properties, and a rate that is common in the industry. The difference in depreciation between that on the basis used in the audit of September 27, 1930, and that in this report, as determined and certified to by Touche, Niven amounts to $805,607.

"There are no other differences of importance between the methods used in the audit as of September 27, 1930, and those used in the preparation of this report," he said. "It is the position of your company that its statement as here presented gives an accurate and true account of its operations during the period covered by this report and of its condition at its close. In any case, the difference taken from the profit of the past year would reduce by the same amount the deductions to be taken from the profit of subsequent years."

In connection with the annual statement, Touche, Niven, company auditors, stated that "Referring to the bankers' offering circular, dated April 10, 1931, relating to the issuance by Fox of five-year six per cent gold debentures in the principal amount of $30,000,000, we have made a supplementary examination of the books of the corporation with particular reference to the accounting principles adopted by the accountants, engaged on the special audit for the bankers, and find that the application of adjustments necessary to reflect the earnings on the basis adopted by the said accountants would involve a reduction in surplus, as at December 27, 1930, of approximately $6,047,169, of which $2,688,973.92 is applicable to the year (52 weeks) then ended, and $3,358,195.08 is applicable to surplus at the beginning of the year, comprising, respectively, the following items:

Analysis of Balance Sheet

In the assets side of the balance sheet, the items listed under "Current Assets" are self-explanatory with the exception of "Inventories" which has been discussed in earlier paragraphs.

The major item included under "Investments securing 6% gold notes" is the investment in Loew's were transferred to Film Securities April 15, 1931, and in connection with this financing the holdings of stock by Fox in Loew's, were transferred to Film Securities Corp., in consideration of which Fox received $28,800,000 in cash and 462,000 shares of the Class A stock of Film Securities, being all the outstanding shares of Class A Stock. Film Securities has outstanding senior to the Class A Stock $20,000,000 two-year 6% Secured gold notes and 100,000 shares of $7 Dividend Cumulative Preferred Stock. The only other item under this head is the investment in theatre properties in England, amounting to $19,030,929.

The item "Investments in respect of which proportionate shares of profits are included" consists of the investment in theatres in the United States. The item "Other Investments" consists largely of an investment in Fox Hearst Corp. and investments in foreign theatres. The item "Land, buildings, leaseholds, equipment, furniture and fixtures" includes over $14,750,000 invested in studios, home office and laboratories, and over $34,500,000 in theatre properties. All these values in fixed assets are after the deduction of reserves for depreciation of over $13,900,000. The item "Deferred charges" consists of bond discount and uncompleted projects.

All items listed under "Current liabilities" are self-explanatory. The secured 6% gold notes, referred to under liabilities to be refinanced, were retired on April 15, 1931, from the proceeds of the sale of $30,000,000 five-year 6% convertible gold debentures and from the funds secured as a partial consideration for the transfer of Fox's interest in Loew's, to Film Securities. The note payable of Wesco Corp. was paid from part of the proceeds of the sale of $15,000,000 two-year 6% gold notes of Wesco. The portion of the funded debt maturing in 1931 is also to be retired partially from the proceeds of the same financing. The item "Funded debt of subsidiary companies" consists of the funded debt maturing later than 1931.

The item "Appropriation from surplus" is a temporary reserve for realization of inventories, set aside from earned surplus on the advice of the auditors to reflect the possibility that unexpected economic conditions during the natural life of the films may result in their bringing in less than the normal rentals for such pictures. At the close of the period this appropriation will be returned to earned surplus, and it will in no way affect future earnings of the company.

Rebelling Against Pictures

and I would like to assure the gentlemen who are responsible for our pictures that we are a fairly shrewd audience; we do not miss much, and we see the point more often than not—only a negligible percent goes over our heads. We want honest and genuine entertainment—a good laugh or a good cry—something that will live in our hearts that we can think about on our way to work in the morning, or while we rock the baby to sleep in the evening. We like smart, sophisticated pictures too—something to make us think; and we do not object to learning things when they are presented to us in a brilliant entertaining manner.

Sadly enough there is only one end for all unclean things, whether it be stories, pictures, or people, and that is the gutter.

We know there are cess-pools. Why stir them?

Allied Will Push Kinograms Tieup

and Warner Brothers, who charge advertisers for prints and transportation to and from New York, Allied will bill its clients for only 30 per cent of these expenses, this figure representing the amount of footage given over in each reel to the advertiser's appeal. Advertisers will pay 2½ cents a foot for prints, as compared with 7½ cents a foot charged by Paramount and Warners.

Actual production costs for advertisers will run less than one-third of competitors' prices.

Twenty-five hundred theatres already have contracted for the newsreel. Allied expects to have 4,000 accounts on its books by August 1, when the reel starts to function.

There will be but one advertising message in each reel. Deals already have been signed with a national cigaret advertiser and with five merchandisers of well known product. Space in the initial 38 issues has been sold.

Gets Permanent Financing

Allied occasionally will handle miscellaneous sponsored reels as a separate factor, booking them into theatres on the same basis as it charges its newsreel advertisers, that is, a flat fee per seat. Paramount and Warners charge $5 per 1,000.

Despite reports to the contrary, Kinograms is not in a financial "jam" which is supposed to have placed in jeopardy its contract to make Allied's reel. An unnamed syndicate of financiers, who already have placed $50,000 at Kinograms' disposal, this week subscribed to an issue of $500,000 which gives permanent financing.

Capt. George McL. Baynes, Kinograms chief, stated that the reel will cost approximately $30,000 a week to produce. He said that the reel will function in the same manner as newsreels, with production of the advertising footage handled by a separate unit. "Production and laboratory-print charges are being kept at an absolute minimum," stated Baynes, "with little or no profit coming from this source. Our financial remuneration will develop from distribution." Allies pays to Kinograms a certain percentage of distribution grosses.

Five-Year Contract

The contract signed with exhibitors by Allied's Oscar Hanson Corporation is for a five-year period, three years of which is non-cancellable and the remaining two optional. However, at the end of two years, either Allied or the exhibitor may cancel upon 90 days' notice. The agreement is automatically suspended while a theatre is dark. Rules for protection and run and other exhibition factors are practically the same as those listed in contracts of major companies. The exhibitor may make cuts in the news section of any reel, but is not permitted to touch the advertising sequence.

The contract states that no "reel shall ever contain any political propaganda or national propaganda on such subjects as prohibition, religion, education, or any subject of national controversy for which payment is received, but shall be an independent newsreel as known to the trade." Quality of advertising appeals is to be determined by a national Allied committee.

UNIVERSAL

(No. 630 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

THE WHOLE TRADE KNOWS THAT UNIVERSAL TURNED ITS PRODUCTION POLICY upside down last year and made good at it!

IN THE HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS THERE NEVER HAS BEEN such a revolutionary effort which met with such suprising success.

EXHIBITORS ADMIT WITH THE UTMOST FRANKNESS THAT THEY MADE MORE money on Universal's 1930-1931 list of pictures than on those of any other producing company.

MANY OF THEM ARE SO DELIGHTED WITH THE PROFITABLE RESULTS THAT they are voluntarily offering testimonials of success with Universal product—even before they sign up again for the 1931-1932 list!

AND UNIVERSAL MARCHES ON!

OUR NEXT LIST SHOWS ON ITS VERY FACE THAT IT WILL SURPASS EVEN THE success of the current line-up.

THE BEST AND FINEST THEATRES IN THE WORLD HAVE FOUND IN COUNTLESS instances that their very biggest profits were made on Universal pictures. They are eager for more of the same kind.

BUT WE ARE GOING TO GIVE THEM SOMETHING EVEN BETTER!

THE SMARTEST, LIVEST AND MOST SHOWMANLIKE BRAINS IN THE PRODUCING business are concentrating on stories, directors and casts for the new Universals.

ON THE OPPOSITE PAGE YOU WILL SEE SOME OF THE FIRST FRUIT OF TH search for material.

I AM SATISFIED WITH THEM! BUT I AM STILL SCOURING THE MARKET F anything new that comes out, and if I substitute for any picture in this list it will be because I have found something better to deliver than I agree to deliver.

UNIVERSAL MARCHES ON—AND EVERY EXHIBITOR WHO SIGNS UP WITH new Universal marches on with us to the road back to prosperity!

An American Tragedy

(Paramount)

Drama

Conducting the case of Clyde Griffiths versus humanity, Paramount through Josef von Sternberg delineates in a few strokes the character which occupies two volumes of text in Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy."

The audience is introduced to Clyde (as portrayed by Phillips Holmes) at the point of his career when he is a foreman in the collar factory of his uncle. His adolescent reactions to the awakening of sex are revealed. He is merely a normal boy interested and attracted by feminine charms, but the rules of the factory prohibit "department chiefs" from associating with the girls employed in their offices. This ruling, coupled with Clyde's innate shyness and inexperience, leaves him without social contacts. His own relatives barely tolerate him.

The inarticulate longing of Clyde for feminine companionship is conveyed to the audience by his covert glances at the legs of the shop girls, his interest in lingerie and bathing suit displays in department store windows. He is passing through the stage preliminary to maturity when all that occupies his mind is girls and more girls.

Then he finds THE girl, Bert, an untutored miss direct from the country, who comes to work in the factory. They meet after hours, despite the rules, and throughout the summer engage in a harmless, joyous affair. But with the arrival of cold weather, they are forced indoors and seek a private meeting place in her room.

Their romance has not run its course when Clyde meets Sandra, daughter of wealth. He is dazzled and flattered by her interest in him, and Bert suffers the consequences of his infatuation for another. She might have taken his desertion of her like a good sport but for the fact that she is to have a child.

Clyde sends Bert away while he seeks a solution of their tangled affairs. The solution seems to present itself in a newspaper headline which tells of a young couple drowning in the lake. That's it; he will drown Bert and cover his tracks so that it will appear to have been an accident.

He plans the crime in every minute detail. Decoying Bert to a strange locality, he is about to execute the murder when he has a change of heart. But Bert in her alarm upsets the boat herself, and drowns.

Clyde's plans have gone awry. He is arrested and is tried for murder, a trial scene aimed to expose a farce in American "justice." At the same time, no attempt has been made to glorify the character of Clyde or his plot.

The spectacular never intrudes upon simplicity in the direction of this production.

Repression high-lighted by dramatic scenes characterizes the playing of Phillips Holmes as Clyde. Individual applause was won from the preview audience by Sylvia Sidney, Frances Dee, Irving Pichel as the district attorney and Charles Middleton as the defense counsel.

From all sides, among the non-professional members of the audience, came expressions of enjoyment of the picture, and not one dissenting voice was heard. And the theme of the picture is tragedy.

Running time at preview, 95 minutes. Release date, August 29, 1931.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Josef von Sternberg. Based on novel by Theodore Dreiser. Screen play by Samuel Hoffenstein. Photographed by Lee Garmes.

Newly Rich

(Paramount)

Comedy

Following the lines of "Skippy" in juvenile theme, but with gags and situations for adults, is "Newly Rich," seen in preview in Hollywood.

The original story was "Let's Play King," by Sinclair Lewis. It tells of the rivalry between the mothers of two child stars of the screen, Mitzi Green and Jackie Searl. The mothers, played by Edna May Oliver and Louise Fazenda, are formerly home town friends but now bitterly opposed in a battle for social and professional supremacy. This situation opens the way for much filmtown satire.

The rival mothers plan European trips so that Mitzi and Jackie may meet a child king and benefit by the publicity thus derived. Separately they seek a royal audience in the London hotel where the boy monarch is staying, but discover that their progeny, film stars or no film stars, mean nothing to royalty.

While the mothers are planning the next steps in their campaigns, Mitzi employs her own methods to meet the king. The children check stories and find that the restrictions placed upon young kings and young stars are much the same. They aren't permitted to play and have good times when they want them. So they decide to run away and Jackie, though not wanted, manages to join them. Dressed in old clothes, they set out for the big adventure.

Meeting a waterfront gang, they enroll after the king has pummeled the gang leader. With their new companions, they spend a happy, eventful day, but it ends with the kidnaping of Jackie by a pair of toughs. Then comes the rescue scene. The gang, led by Mitzi and the king, outwits the thugs and Jackie escapes.

Miss Fazenda plays a straighter role than usual.

Running time in preview, 85 minutes. Release date, June 20.

Produced and distributed by Paramount Publix. From the story "Let's Play King" by Sinclair Lewis. Adaptation by Edward Paramore, Jr. Continuity and dialogue by Norman McLeod and Joseph L. Mankiewicz. Directed by Norman Taurog. Photography by Charles Lang.

The Five Year Plan—Russia's Remaking

(Amkino)

Pictorial Record

Amkino, American distributor of Russian produced films, is showing at the Central Theatre in New York "The Five Year Plan—Russia's Remaking," a pictorial silent record of conditions in Russia today as the result of the Five Year Plan, now in its third year of operation.

In this country, dialogue, written by an American economist and rendered by Mark Hawley, was synchronized. The audience at the Central was noticeably composed of what might be termed the radical element of New York. They were unmistakably thrilled by the record of industrial progress shown them, and reacted with vigorous applause when Stalin and other well-known Soviet figures appeared on the screen.

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, composed, we are told, of 160,000,000 people of all races, is introduced with short sequences meant to be illustrative of the enormous size of the country, its highly varied geographical conditions, and its unusually diversified population, ranging from the Eskimo of Siberia to the peasant of the Tibetan steppes.

With the verbal description keeping rapid and uninterrupted pace with the moving cameras, the audience is presented with a picture of a vast industrial development, including in its scope the building of factories, for automobiles, tractors, farm implements, the production of steel, and so on down the line of the necessities of an industrial and agricultural economic effort.

Pictured also are the efforts being made in the direction of social betterment, including the building of schools and the attempts to bring the rudiments of education to the masses, the erection of workers' homes and apartment houses, the construction of sanitariums and workers' clubs, in the cities.

We are told by the economist, via the voice of the announcer, that Russia will reach its five-year objective before 1933, the time set. Dams are shown in the course of construction, and power plants are seen rising from the previously barren plains. American engineers are the backbone of the industrial development, we are informed, and American products, automobiles and tractors, farm machinery and similar commodities are shown being unloaded from ships, and in use on the so-called cooperative farms, of the Russian peasantry, which appears much the same to the American eye as it did before the revolution.

There is no attempt at drama, cohesion or the human struggle in the film, nor is there any semblance of continuity. Rather, it is a record, in newsreel style, of mechanical and industrial methods and the results of those methods up to the present.

The only credit lines appearing on the film are one noting the synchronization by Pathe News, Inc., and the other advising that the dialogue recording was done with RCA Photophone equipment.

Der Grosse Tenor

(Ufa)

Drama (German)

Ufa opened its recently leased New York Ufa Cosmopolitan theatre with the German language dramatic film, "Der Grosse Tenor," featuring Emil Jannings.

The premiere was something of an event, by reason of the presence in the audience of Mayor James J. Walker of New York and Dr. Kiep, German consul general in New York, both of whom made short addresses.

Jannings is seen as Albert Winkelman, featured and pampered kammer-sanger (singer to royalty).

The story is quite devoid of thrills, such as our American audiences are accustomed to and expect. There are only a few instances which stir the emotions of the audience to any appreciable degree. The very absence of such thrills calls for a truthful and vivid interpretation of Jannings' part.

He is supported by beautiful Renate Mueller as Agathe, his devoted wife, whom he terms his Muttchen (little Mother). The love of a devoted wife would not suffice to forgive Winkelmann, the light hearted artist, who is not at all conscious of wrongdoing in accepting the attentions of a host of adoring women. He looks upon these incidents as part of his profession and fame, not, however, without causing dismay to his devoted Muttchen. Only once does she show serious resentment, threatening to leave him to his adorers and to his life. She comes upon him in his studio during the presence of Olga von Dagomirska, a Russian countess, one of his most persistent adorers, who begs him to forsake Agathe and flee with her. This he promptly refuses to do, to the dismay of the beautiful woman.

Amusing are the nervous and solicitous antics of Winkelmann's valet, Kratochwil, in trying to hide one and then the other in adjoining rooms as Agathe appears upon the scene, only to be discovered by her. This and the ovations of his feminine adorers on the week of his departure for a South American tour, prompt his Agathe to say to Winkelmann, "What you want is not a wife but women, and all is over between us." This shocks Winkelmann, but it is soon forgotten in the turmoil and excitement to follow.

The heat of the tropics, his increasing indulgence of wine, women and song finally bring about his collapse, just as Agathe and her doctor uncle had feared and predicted. He collapses on the stage when his vocal chords refuse to function. He is carried from the stage and his career is ended. When he recovers sufficient strength he returns to his Muttchen, disheartened and defeated.

To his astonishment he finds the inhabitants of his home town in an uproar of excitement. He is greeted everywhere with great acclaim. They are ignorant of the true state of affairs, due to the cleverness of Colwyn, the impressario, who provides the newspapers with reports of new triumphs of their idol. Quite noteworthy of this celebration are the antics of a bevy of young girls of a boarding school, who line every window in their building, excitedly waving welcome. Amusing also is a chorus of these girls, who sing Winkelmann's favorite song "I am so happy, am so gay," from a balcony in his honor.

He is greeted by his forgiving wife, her voice and actions showing deep emotion and infinite joy. She induces him to retire with her to their beautiful estate at St. Wolfgame where she experiences the happiest days of her life. She is happy in the belief that he has given up his career to enjoy the life of a country gentleman, not knowing the true cause of the change in him. Winkelmann's robust constitution soon asserts itself. Free from excitement he regains his former health. One day, his former valet Kratochwil appears under orders from the opera director to induce him to come back to the stage. He refuses.

In the enjoyment of this new happiness, he hums his old favorite, when he discovers to his consternation that his voice has come back to him stronger than ever. His old love for the stage reasserts itself, and he returns to the stage, this time with the consent of Muttchen, who realizes she must share him with the world.

Produced and distributed by Ufa. Eric Pommer production. Directed by Hanns Schwarz. Screen story by Hans Mueller, Robert Liebmann. Photography, Guenther Rittau, Konstantin Tschet. Musical director, Willy-Schmidt-Gentner.

Laughing Sinners

(MGM)

Drama

The religious angle has been soft-pedaled in MGM'S picturization of "Torch Song," Kenyon Nicholson's stage play. Filmed under its original title, the feature was ordered back for retakes when, after its first preview, it was deemed too strong fare for screen audiences and likely to arouse unwelcome controversy.

The audience received "Laughing Sinners" as acceptable entertainment, though in the nature of preachment. Comment was made that the second title, "Complete Surrender," would have fitted the subject matter more aptly. Joan Crawford was applauded for her work as the entertainer in a cheap cabaret.

The entertainer for two years has been carrying on an affair with a traveling salesman, Neil Hamilton. Though there is no talk of marriage, they love one another devotedly, the devotion on Joan's side approaching worship.

Then Hamilton decides to break up. Partly for business reasons he is marrying the daughter of his boss. He wishes to be gentle in telling Joan but lacks the courage to face her. He scribbles a note on the back of a menu card and leaves while Joan is singing a "torch song" about "what I wouldn't do for my man."

Joan's grief leads her to attempt suicide but a Salvation Army man (played by Clark Gable) intervenes. At a children's picnic he reawakens her interest in living and she joins the Army.

A year later Hamilton, still on the road, finds himself for the week-end in a town in which Joan and other Salvation Army workers are conducting services. Hamilton learns that he and Joan are occupying adjoining rooms in the hotel. Refusing to believe that she is in earnest regarding her new beliefs and work, he coaxes her into his room and, playing the cad, makes love to her. As the second title phrased it, she completely surrenders.

Joan decides in the morning to go back to her old kind of living. Taking her first drink in a year, she derides her attempts at reformation and dances to a jazzed version of "Brighten the Corner Where You Are."

Then Gable intervenes again. He floors Hamilton and orders the other revelers to leave. To Joan's intimation that she is unfit to continue in the service of the Army, Gable replies that anyone is likely to slip once. His ability to forgive causes her to see Hamilton in an entirely different light. She chooses Gable and returns to the service of the Army.

The difficulty of casting the Salvation Army man is attested by the fact that Gable was the second player chosen for the role. Johnny Mack Brown played it in the first version.

Guy Kibbee's role as the salesman of undertaker's supplies—"underground novelties," he calls them—has less prominence than in the stage play, as is also the case with Roscoe Karns' part.

Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, May 30. Seen in Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Adapted from the play "Torch Song." Continuity by Bess Meredyth. Additional dialogue by Edith Fitzgerald. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Art director, Cedric Gibbons. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Film editor, George Hively. Gowns by Adrian.

SHORTS

Animals of the Amazon

(Vitaphone)

Travelogue

Another travelogue in the series of "E. M. Newman Traveltalks," which Warners has added to the new season's list. The interest is high in this pictorial record of typical river life along the Amazon, coupled with shots of some of the strange animal species which make the river banks their home. Newman's own rendition of the accompanying dialogue brought comment as being effective.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Rough Seas

(M-G-M)

Comedy

A Charley Chase comedy short in which the comedian, returning from France with the A. E. F., smuggles Thelma Todd, as a French girl, and a monkey aboard ship with him. The story is based on this situation, with the monkey taking a rather prominent part.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Lemon Meringue

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy

Edgar Kennedy is the comedian star in this effort, with Florence Lake playing his talkative wife. Assisting as mother-in-law and brother-in-law respectively, are Dot Farley and William Eugene. The whole group undertake the restaurant business, and finish it with an unlimited pie-throwing contest in which no one in particular is declared winner.—Running time, 20 minutes.

That's My Line

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy

The first number of a new series, the Traveling Salesmen comedies. Louis John Bartels plays the salesman, while Paul Hurst enacts a Mexican bandit in love with Doris McMahon, and threatening with death anyone seen with her. Bartels manages to escape the Mexican wrath and leaves in a hurry. There are few lines in the comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

For Two Cents

(Vitaphone)

Comedy

This comedy number concerns two offers made to the star, De Wolf Hopper, by a morning and an evening paper to die in time for one or the other edition to get a "scoop" story, after his physician allows him 10 hours to live. Hopper finally decides to favor the morning journal with his death story.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Into the Unknown

(Vitaphone)

Travelogue

The first number of the new series, "Adventures in Africa," produced under Wynant D. Hubbard's supervision, and photographed by W. Earle Frank. Synchronized dialogue and dubbed sound effects have been added. Most of the short is taken up with preparations for the jungle trip. One scene shows a fierce battle between a lioness and hyena over an animal carcass.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Strangler

William Burns

One of the William J. Burns Detective Mystery series, in which the well known detective recounts the story of the apprehension of a murderer, who had killed a woman when her husband left her alone for a few minutes. Actors silently enact the events described by Burns.—Running time, 12 minutes.

A College Racket

Comedy

Glenn Tryon plays the college leader who gets into difficulty with the dean when the latter attempts to close the Pirates' Den Club. Betty Lorraine and Vernon Dent support Tryon. Several musical numbers are spotted through the short.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Fly Guy

(RKO Pathe)

Cartoon

An Aesop Fable animated cartoon, with the insects as principal players. Jazz tunes run through the short, accompanying the antics of the fly and its mate. One sequence pictures a cabaret in full swing in a bottle.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Foolish Forties

Comedy

A pair of blackmailers almost succeed in getting away with $10,000 from Ford Sterling, leading player in this comedy. But they are both adorned with police bracelets before they are able to make good a getaway.—Running time, 21 minutes.

2,000 B. C.

Cartoon

A number of the Terry Toon animated cartoon series, in which the animals enjoy themselves in a prehistoric setting, with their usual collection of antics. Frank Moser and Paul Terry are responsible for the drawings, and Phillip A. Scheib prepared the music.—Running time, 6 minutes.

General Talking Denied Review of Ries Patent Case

The United States Supreme Court has denied General Talking Pictures' petition for a writ of certiorari for a review of the decision favorable to Western Electric that was given by the Court of Appeals of the Third circuit.

The suit originated in an infringement action taken by General Talking Pictures in June, 1929, against Stanley Company of America because of its use of Western Electric sound equipment. Western Electric undertook defense of the suit. The infringement charge was upheld by Judge Morris in the U. S. district court at Wilmington, Del., but this decision was reversed by the court of appeals. A petition to this court for rehearing was denied in April.

Judge Morris held that there was no infringement in the case of three other patents on which infringement was claimed in district court.

Western Electric states it will continue with its suit for infringement against General Talking Pictures as filed some time ago in the U. S. district court for the southern district of New York.

Kendell-Dasseville Resume

After several months of inactivity, the acoustical engineering firm of Kendell and Dasseville, Inc., has again opened a midtown New York office at 6 East 46th street.

Its service involves the use of neither materials nor additional equipment in making acoustical corrections in sound-equipped houses.

Schools Keen on Educationals

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The theatres are feeling their first reaction of hot weather. Grosses again dropped .05% under a week ago. The same decrease in receipts also was noted last week. After the initial warm period, however, business is expected to remain steady through the summer.

There were 15 new low grosses during "Current Week" as against 13 during "Previous Week." Only one theatre registered a new high, this being the Golden Gate in San Francisco, with the Columbia picture, "Subway Express." The gross was $19,000.

ERPI Service

. . . not just a word but

Insurance against

program interruption

ERPI's nation-wide staff of engineers gives a new meaning to that much abused and mis-used word —"service". Ordinarily, it means rectifying trouble after something has gone wrong. ERPI SERVICE, however, means trouble prevention — a service of insurance. ERPI SERVICE actually has proven that it is more than 95% a preventive and less than 5% an emergency organization. ERPI SERVICE, therefore, is an absolute necessity to the theatre owner. Western Electric Sound Systems are designed and made with all the skill and care that goes into Bell System telephone apparatus. But no matter how well designed nor how well made delicate electrical or mechanical equipment may be, constant care is the price of continuously satisfactory performance. ERPI SERVICE is your insurance—a small price for big returns.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 79

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 85—Note: At the suggestion of several of our correspondents it has been decided to include a plain projection question occasionally. I believe one out of every four should be about right. Here is the first one: (A) Explain just how you determine when your intermittent movement is in need of adjustment. (B) Describe, in minute detail, just how you proceed to adjust the intermittent movement of your projection, telling us what make it is. (C) Just atwhat point do you ask for a renewal, or make a renewal of your intermittent sprockets, explaining, in detail, how you determine whether or not they need renewing.

The question was: (A) Under what condition is it desirable to have two sets of sound projectors—horns? (B) What should be done when the horns are flown to clear stage? (C) When sound projectors are mounted upon horn towers or dolly trucks, what should be done to secure correct re-location after they have been moved? (D) Why should the theatre manager make periodic inspection of horn location where they are subject to being moved about the stage?

These were all very good answers. I have selected the replies of Herman Billings, Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, L. MacArthur, Tom Turk, G. E. Doe and Bill Doe as of about equal excellence. Laid them together in a pile, shut my eyes and pulled out Brother Billings. Here it is:

"A. In theatres where a combination policy of vaudeville and pictures is in use it is often necessary to use a screen in one, while a set is being placed behind it. If it is necessary to run a whole feature on the screen in front it will be necessary to use a second set of horns. If, however, just a single reel or so is to be run, the horns on the rear screen can be used.

"B. When horns are flown to clear the stage, some way of marking its location is necessary. Such a way is to knot the ropes to show the height from the stage.

"C. Horns mounted on horn towers or dolly trucks should be marked so that their exact location can always be found. A method used most generally, I find, is to run a rod down opposite corners of the truck and into holes in the floor. This insures the horns being in the exact location each time they are moved.

"D. In the theatres where the horns are moved around the stage it is good policy for the manager to visit the stage and inspect the horn placement. The average stage crew does not realize the importance of replacing the horns in their exact locations."

ENGLAND INTRODUCES ONE

In the Bioscope, London, England, I just read an account of what seems to me to be a decidedly excellent stunt. It seems to be a British invention. At least, the makers are the Electro Products, Ltd., presumably of London. The thing consists of a low-priced device, by means of which, according to the Bioscope investigator, an excellent phonograph record may be made by the theatre manager himself. This record may then be used on the non-sync, and thus the manager is himself enabled to make personal announcements to his audiences.

The making of a record, which is permanent, is, according to the Bioscope investigator, accomplished with no difficulty and consumes only a few seconds of time. I would presume that, taken as a whole, that would probably mean a minute or two.

Bioscope says:

"There are several uses to which such home-made records may be put. In the motion picture theatre many exhibitors are still using silent trailers. An ingenious manager may often make use of the talkie record for announcements of forthcoming productions. It is of course possible to do that now by means of a microphone, assuming no objections would be made to the connection of a mike to the equipment. However, this obliges the manager to be present in person every time an announcement is to be made, or to delegate the duty to some substitute, and substitutes are not always dependable.

"In the same way records may be used in making announcements at regular intervals in the foyer, or even outside the theatre, as well as special announcements to be made from the stage.

"The record outfit can be used on any sort of gramaphone."

It seems to me that this device is most excellent. As I understand it, the thing may be attached to any gramaphone. The records are six inches in diameter. They will run for from 80 to 90 seconds. Eight-inch records may be procured if desired. They are of aluminum and double sided. The blank records retail at 6d, or 6 pence, which is, I believe, about equal to six of our own cents, though I am no expert in British coin values.

The record is placed on the machine, lightly covered with a special lubricant and the needle lowered into position. After the needle has made one revolution the recording may begin. No subsequent treatment of the disc is necessary. It may be instantly played back on any gramaphone, either with or without amplification, provided only that Electro-color needles be used. The record may be played a great many times. In fact, the Bioscope investigator declares that there is no wear whatsoever on the record. He also says that results of astonishing quality may be obtained after a little practice in modulating the voice.

A disc prepared in this way by a member of the Bioscope staff was tried out through the talking equipment. The manager made the statement that the amount of ground noise was no greater than that presented by the majority of talking discs he receives. He also declared that there is ample volume and that the sound is clear.

OPPOSE BURYING OF HEADLINE ACTS

Fox Managers Told to Keep Units Intact

Added Attractions Are to Be Given All Possible Support, Says Home Office

By ED DAWSON

The home office of Fox Theatres has issued a warning which might well apply generally. "Give your special bookings all the play possible," is a general conception of the edict.

The basis for this warning is that theatres, playing the Fanchon & Marco units, have buried added attractions where such acts were booked to bolster up trade.

Objection has been made to the splitting of a unit show so that the headliner might perform in the middle of the show, thus detracting from the show value of unit and the act.

It is the opinion of the Fox home office that when added attractions are booked they should be given all possible advertising and exploitation support, and in no way should they be grouped with the regular units.

In issuing its instructions to managers the company says:

"The important thing to remember is that, whether a unit or a vaudeville act, it should be presented by itself and be given all the support the house can possibly give; that it should be exploited and played as an individual act, and that units which are put together with a lot of thought on the Coast, and which are gone over carefully in Milwaukee, should be left intact, and played by themselves.

"It can be arranged in any theatre, which can have the local organist start a specially conceived program, followed by the local M. C. doing a fine overture in the pit, using as much time as the management wishes to allot to him, and giving him every opportunity to make good.

"This can be followed by an announcement by the local M. C. introducing and selling the additional feature act, using his ingenuity to make the most of this attraction; then any short subject on the screen such as newsreel, trailers, etc., followed by the F. and M. unit intact.

"In this way it will avoid all the stage presentation and feature acts being thrown into one and turned into a conglomeration instead of a clean-cut, well defined stage entertainment, and it is our opinion that until this is done as above, we are ruining each week any number of good acts who are in the habit of appearing by themselves and cannot be interpolated into a background in which they cannot and should not be shown at any time."

Publix Books F & M Unit

Fanchon & Marco stage units will play the Publix at Denver, marking the third Publix house to book Fanchon & Marco "Ideas."

Billye Deaton Lamb

The dust which had settled on the keys of the console at the Criterion theatre in Oklahoma City was dusted off recently by the charming little Mrs. Billye Deaton Lamb, who shortly will celebrate her 22nd birthday. Billye, as she is known to most her public, opened the first of a series of organ programs to an enthusiastic audience a few Saturdays ago, and since she is an old favorite (in point of service and not age) to the theatregoers in that city, her return to the organ was just about a gala event.

She has been playing organs at various theatres for the last five years. She received her instruction through private tutoring and did her first public work at the Criterion. She also has played in theatres in Tulsa and Enid, Okla. She is about five feet in height—and you would know she loves her work if you could see her reaching for the pedals.

Cliff Hess, of Remick's, Puts Over a News Beat

Here's a choice bit of gossip. Cliff Hess, special service manager of Remick Music Corporation, and well known throughout the country, slipped away last Wednesday without telling any of the boys his intentions and got himself married to the charming Miss Dorothy Travers of San Antonio, Texas. Cliff returned the other day all wreathed in smiles—in fact, none of us ever saw him so happy—and then he stunned us with the aforementioned confession.

Bigger Stage for "Women Of All Nations" Prologue

To provide a stage show commensurate with the amount of interest created by the new Flagg and Quirt adventures in "Women of All Nations," the Roxy theatre, New York, presented its stage show this week on what is said to be the largest stage on Broadway. This was achieved by elevating the orchestra pit to the level of the stage and combining the pit and stage into one huge arena. Another novelty presented for the first time was the inclusion of the orchestra as part of the entire stage performance. Special platforms and stages were built in the rear of the stage to accommodate the orchestra, which was banked up along the cyclorama as part of the spectacle. The unusual effect thus achieved was to bring the performers and performance forward into the auditorium and into closer proximity with the audience itself. The stage spectacle took the form of an atmospheric prologue to the picture, "Women of All Nations."

Music from "Smiling Lieut." Featured on Paramount Hour

Oscar Straus' music, written for "Smiling Lieutenant," was played by Domenico Savino's orchestra on this week's program on the Paramount hour, broadcast over Columbia's chain on Tuesday. Helen Nugent sang a number of songs, among them "When Your Lover Has Gone" and "Were you Sincere?"

The complete program: Overture, "One Night Alone With You," orchestra; "When Your Lover Has Gone," Helen Nugent and orchestra; organ solo, Jesse Crawford; march from "The Smiling Lieutenant," orchestra; "Same As We Used to Do," special arrangement by Savino orchestra; "Were You Sincere," Helen Nugent and orchestra; gossip of the stage and screen, Jerry ("Closeup") Madison; "Bon Soir," orchestra.

French Government Honors William Morris, Showman

William Morris, New York theatreman, has been honored by the French Government with an official decoration, "Officier de L'Instruction Publique," for services in the promotion of good will between the amusement fields of the two countries.

Presentation was made by the Minister of Education at a formal dinner in Paris.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending June 3

This week's stage act at the Fox marks the return of Fanchon & Marco entertainment, after an absence of several months. The elaborate offering, the "North, South, East and West Idea," seems made to order to fit in with the screen attraction, "Women of All Nations," displaying as it does the beauties of many lands.

The concert of Walt Roesner and the Fox Orchestra is a medley of Victor Herbert compositions and is dedicated to the memory of this composer who passed away seven years ago. Joaquin, tenor soloist, offers a delightfully confident number, "I'm Going to Get You."

The stage act, as its title suggests, is in four divisions, each with elaborate scenic effects, probably the finest yet seen in a Fanchon & Marco production.

North is a bit of romantic Canada, with stately firs and shimmering waterfalls, the latter patterned after those of the Yosemite, however. The Sunkist Beauties, with six stalwart boys, come on in their striking uniforms and do a song and drill, led by Glen Dale.

A bit of nonsense follows, with Jack Waldron and Miss Harriet getting a lot of laughs for their stunt of telephoning from New York to San Francisco. The scene shifts to the Sunny South and the Sunkist Beauties, now ravishing blondes, dance on the lawn before a stately home and listen to the boys, who sing "Would You Like to Take a Walk?"

Helen O'Shea, formerly of the Ziegfeld Follies, offers a delightful toe dance and the scene shifts to the Far East. Elvira Tanzi, star of the "Desert Song," sings "Love for Sale" and slave girls dance before a potentate at the bidding of the slave dealer.

A broadcasting stunt by Jack Waldron and Miss Harriet supplies comedy relief, and after the uncorking of a lot of snappy stories the scene representing the West comes on. A pair sing before an old Spanish Mission and this gives way to a California orange orchard laden with luscious fruit. The opening song of the Sunkist Beauties and the ensemble is "Orange Blossom Time," but as the curtain goes down this changes to "I Love You, California."

Edmund Lowe makes a personal appearance at the opening performances and gets a great reception as the visit is in the nature of a home coming.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending May 27

The Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Don Wilkins, offering "If You Can't Sing, Whistle," opens Fanchon and Marco's "Submarine" Idea. The opening episode presents the chorus of 12 in Spanish costumes performing before a submarine base. They are augmented by a male dancer who steps to the tune of "The Peanut Vender" and a tango by male and feminine dancers.

Ward & Pinkie offer a bit of snappy comedy accompanied by some snappy dancing. They give way to the chorus attired in spangled costumes with a setting representing the bottom of the sea. Claire Lea & Richard Stuart augment this episode with some excellent dancing.

Radcliffe & Bob engage in a line of comedy patter and wind up with singing "Give Me Something to Remember You By," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "Cherie" and "You're Driving Me Crazy." The one member of the troupe plays the piano.

For the next number the chorus is attired in pirate costumes of black and red. The finale features the Aerial Bartletts who perform from a submarine which is suspended above the floor of the ocean.

New York Paradise

Week ending June 5

The presentation this week opens to one of the most novel and entertaining overtures this reviewer has heard. The title of it is "Melodies on Parade," with Al Evans and his Melody Boys doing the presenting. Evans conducts his orchestra of 20 musicians in a number of melodic and novel arrangements of popular tunes and then surprises the audiences by singing, in a most pleasing voice, "Yours Is My Heart Alone," first in English and then in German. The way this audience reacted is conclusive proof that this means of presentation is a good bet for nearly all theatres.

The title of the stageshow this week is "Crazy Rhythms" and the show is aptly named because Teddy Joyce and his stageband play nothing but "crazy" tunes throughout the show. Bellett and Lamb, comedienne and comedian, respectively, present a laugh-provoking type of eccentric and acrobatic dancing and other comedy antics. Glenn and Jenkins, blackface comedy singers and dancers, do well with their well known "floor-sweeping" dance. Barto and Ardell offer a well-routined ballroom waltz and Teddy Joyce and the Chester Hale Girls do a few good dance routines. Joyce worked hard throughout the show and it was he who was mainly responsible for the success of it. For the finale, the band played "Soldier on the Shelf" as Joyce, in toy soldier suit, led the Chester Hale Girls, also in soldier uniforms, through an entertaining drill.

Boston Metropolitan

Week ending May 27

This week brought the sparkling personality of the stage and screen star, Gilda Grey, to entertain in person in a presentation entitled "Shakin' the Blues," together with Harrison and Elmo, the Three Blue Blazes, and the Bobby Sanford Girls.

Arthur Martel started things off in the proper atmosphere by playing "Evolution of the Dance" on the organ. Then the curtain rose on a modernistic stage scene with the Bobby Sanford Girls doing some sort of rhythmic stepping on a flight of steps leading from the stage up to another entrance higher up and in the center of the stage. Here Gilda entered, came down the steps and sang "Low Down," dancing accompaniment by the Sanford Girls.

Next came a selection by the jazz band entitled "Now You're in My Arms," with a tenor chorus. Harrison and Elmo, two darkies with some good entertainment, amused by shooting dice and wisecracking. Harrison swore he never had shot dice before in his life, but as the game went on and he came out with some of the proverbial sayings of dice shooters and in the end cleaned out Elmo, somehow things were different. They got a good encore.

After this came the girls again, dressed as orchestra leaders, and carrying batons. They showed in a tap dance how simple it is to wave a stick around and direct an orchestra.

Then came another entrance by Gilda Grey, who wore a beautiful silver and blue costume that set off her blonde beauty to advantage. After another song and a little dance, the orchestra leader invited her to say a few words to the audience, so she made a little thank-you speech.

The Three Blazes next showed some snappy footwork. They did their tap steps in perfect unison, and very tricky steps at that. They got a great hand from the audience.

The finale showed all the girls in Hula Hula costumes and Gilda in a similar outfit doing some hot dancing. Then Gilda went up the steps again and gave a real example of her ability to do the shimmy.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Freddie Rose, popular piano playing and composing songster heard on KYW, was presented with a "bud" weighing seven pounds last Sunday morning. Wife and son are both doing well. Freddie claims to have worn out three carpets and two rugs "waiting." . . . Jew's harps made in Austria are the only harps that Dad Pickard, head of the famous hill-billy family, will use during a broadcast. Dad has found in his wide range of experience that the Austrian Jew's harp has a finer ring by far, when heard over the air, than any other made. The Pickard family are now broadcasting from the New York NBC studios instead of the Chicago studios. . . . East and Dumke, known to radio as the Sisters of the Skillett, are threatening to resign. They have received the last insult, the two jovial and corpulent comedians declare after reading the following inquiry received by NBC, "Please inform me what is meant by 'Eastern Donkey?'"

Marvin Lee, who is known as the "Globe Trotter" of the music business, is now connected with the Con Conrad Music Publishers Ltd. of California, in the capacity of General Eastern Sales Manager. . . . Don Marcotte and the missus, drove down to the Kentucky Derby. Don said that he returned a little "hoarse" from rooting for the horse he bet on that never came in. . . . George Devron, brings to the radio world through the medium of his renowned orchestra, music that mingles in a like degree the speed and flash of jazz and the depth and color of the modern classic. George's deep and ingratiating voice, singing the dance tunes played by his band, is now heard from the LaSalle Hotel, and over stations WJJD, WENR and the National Broadcasting System.

Wynken, Blynken and Nod, popular Columbia Broadcasting Chain artists, heard thrice weekly on coast-to-coast hookups, are rapidly winning nation-wide recognition among radio listeners for their dynamic personality and clever harmony arrangements. These beautiful girls sing many types of music, and do them well enough to please the most critical listeners. These girls also cook delicious meals; at least, that's what they tell me. (I hope that some day I may be tempted by a sample). . . . Russ and Van, of station KYW are now on NBC chain every Thursday over a twenty-two station hookup. These boys are very clever and should go a long way in making a great radio name for themselves.

Charlie Agnew, the conductor of the marvelous orchestra heard daily over station KYW from the Terrace Gardens, is rapidly winning nation-wide recognition among radio listeners for his winning personality and original entertainment specialties. Although Charlie is still a young man, his accomplishments are many. He plays many of various instruments in the band, including the trumpet, and can sing a song that would do credit to a seasoned trouper. Has also written a great song which he has titled "Slow But Sure" and slowly but surely this song is destined to be one of the biggest hits of the year. Charlie is a sure comer and should prove a great drawing card wherever he plays. . . . Jimmy Green, popular radio orchestra leader, has engaged Meryle Cullen, tenor, who can really sing a great song.

Benny Ross in Toledo

Benny Ross took over the m. c.'s post at the Toledo, Ohio, Paramount house when stage shows were resumed there.

ORGAN SOLOS

NELSON SELBY (Buffalo Shea's Bailey) offered an original presentation entitled "Flying High," the basic idea of which was a trip around the world, but this time in an airplane. A moving cloud effect and an airplane in the center of the screen and a motor sounding in the background gave the impression of a plane in flight. Specially written lyrics were used to popular songs to explain to the audience that they were to sing their way on a trip around the world. The countries over which the plane flew were represented by humorous gags and followed by appropriate songs. Although the idea was an old one, the manner of its presentation made it interesting. The audience proved they were pleased with their trip by the way they sang and by the applause which greeted the organist at the close.

MARLIN (Brooklyn Loew's Metropolitan) introduced "A Personal Presentation" as his solo this week. A straight community-sing interspersed with gags, spoken over the mike, as Marlin introduced each number, led to the introduction of a guest singer, Bon Walker, who pleasingly sang that rhythmic ballad, "In Perfect Harmony," to a most gratifying reception from the audience. The audience-singing numbers were: "You Didn't Have to Tell Me," "I'm Happy When You're Happy," "For You," "By My Side," "Moonlight Saving Time," "Got the Bench" and a final chorus of "My Baby Just Cares for Me." The audience sang well, and Marlin got a good reception.

DICK BETTS (Stamford (Conn.) Publix Palace) presented an entertaining solo called "A Popular Song-Fest," which consisted of the audience singing of a number of popular tunes. It was a straight community sing, with nothing outstanding in the way of novelty, but everyone in the audience joined in the singing and that was Betts' intention so nothing more need be said regarding that. Betts is billed as "The Singing Organist" and his fine voice and good playing lead the audience in each song. His program this week consisted of "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "Ho-Hum," "Kings' Horses," "Whistling in the Dark" and "Wabash Moon." Betts is the only organist in this town at the present time and it is his popularity and box-office draw that is keeping him on the job.

IRIS WILKINS (Milwaukee Wisconsin) offered for her organ selections, "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," "Two Hearts In Waltz Time" and "Anchors Aweigh." The words to the various selections were flashed upon the wide screen and the number got a good hand.

RAY McNAMARA (Publix Saenger, New Orleans) replaces "Herbie" Koch as organ soloist during the latter's vacation, and while his offering for the current week, "My Diary" lacks originality and suffers from an apologetic attitude, his playing is a refreshing change from the ballyhoo type of solo which has held forth at the Saenger for over a year. McNamara opens with a request for the audience to sing, gets a hearty response with "Wabash Moon," plays the sentimental "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" in fine style, introduces a tongue twisting parody on "Sweethearts on Parade" which makes use of the "ixnay-ungay-arget" and closes with "Walkin' My Baby Back Home." He ranked a heavy hand with the singing audience.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

"Have you Forgotten?"—Well, everyboly else has. . . . It seems that nobody remembers anything any more. . . . Why don't you remember or "Have You Forgotten?" Anyhow, Harms, Inc., publishes a song by this name and it is claimed by Will Rockwell that this number has been given the honor of reviving street-corner singing, for so long a time comparatively non-existent. . . . So if, after all these years, "Have You Forgotten?" can bring the old quartet back, it must be some song . . . Remick Music Corporation is all dressed up in new finery, its offices having been rearranged and redecorated within the past few weeks. . . . Little Jack (so long, N-B-C-ing you) Little has done right well by Remick's and Danny Winkler, executive vice-president of that company. . . . His "Dancing with the Daffodils" is becoming one of the most pleasing epidemics this country has ever heard. . . . Aside from being a topic of conversation, like operations, "Daffodils" has been signally honored as one of the "must have" tunes in orchestra leaders' and organists' books. . . . And you don't have to be told that this song packs a whale of a stage unit and production idea.

A lot of out-of-town organists are in town right now, waiting new assignments. . . . Among them are Lee Weber, Johnny Winter and Con Maffie. . . . These boys are Publix organists and according to the main office will be back on their jobs or have new ones real soon. . . . Let's hope so, for everybody's losing out when boys of their caliber are not working. . . . Just heard from Clarence W. Leverenz, organist at the State, Kalamazoo, Mich., who has just returned to the State after touring as guest organist in his circuit's houses. . . . Good for you, Clarence, and drop me a line again soon. . . . Was talking to Henrietta Kamern, organist at Loew's 175th street theatre, the other day when a hurdy-gurdy interrupted our conversation. . . . Miss Kamern wisecracked, "Oh Oh, not enough competition from other theatre organists, but must have competition brought right in front of the house in which I'm working." . . . Bernie Cowham, organist at the RKO Flushing, wants to give Mr. Lanahan, his manager, a mention because he (Lanahan) is one of the managers who believe in plenty of music in theatres. . . . In fact, so much so, that he has had workmen taking out the entire first row of seats in his house so that the orchestra and organ can have more room in which to work. . . . Let's give Lanahan three rousing cheers.

One of the surest indications of a hit is when the little three or four piece "orchestras" on the ferry boats and Coney Island Steamboats start to plug a song. . . . The "piece-de-resistance" of these itinerant musicians at this time is Feists "Moonlight Saving Time." The verdict is in!—It's a hit! . . . Dave Ringle is the composer of that logical successor to that old favorite, "Alabamy Bound." . . . The new tune is called "Roll On Mississippi, Roll On" and Shapiro, Bernstein publishes it. . . . I have seen this staff enthused but never more so than it is over this song. . . . Ben Edwards, vice-president and general manager of Master Music, Inc., tells me that this company was formed originally to exploit and sponsor Charles Maduro's compositions, which are "In Old Granada," "I Love the Rain," "Oh Senorita," "Colombiana" and last but not least "Bonsoir," that song that Maurice Chevalier made well known.

Five New Teams to Appear In 1931-32 Fox Films

Five new teams are scheduled to appear in the Fox program for 1931-32. These will be in addition to the Janet Gaynor-Charles Farrell team, which will appear in three, "Delicious," "Merely Mary Ann" and "Sunny Jane."

The new teams are: Warner Baxter and Elissa Landi, to be co-starred in "Cheating" and "In Her Arms," both to be directed by William Cameron Menzies and Kenneth MacKenna.

Hardie Albright and Joan Bennett, to be featured in "Surrender" and "Lipstick."

Edmund Lowe and Greta Nissen. in "Disorderly Conduct," "Transatlantic" and "Silver City."

Frank Albertson and Maureen O'Sullivan in "The Royal Road to Romance" and "Young America."

Allan Dinehart and Linda Watkins, both newcomers, in "The Rainbow Trail," "Rogues Gallery," "Charlie Chan's Chance" and "Sob Sister."

Paramount Adds Six to Mystery Picture Parade

Paramount has added to the mystery film vogue with six new titles, just acquired for production on the 1931-32 program. They are:

"Murder by the Clock," by Rufus King; "Daughter of the Dragon," by Sax Rohmer; "The Glass Key," by Dashiell Hammett; "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," by Robert Louis Stevenson; "Uncertain Women." by Edgar Wallace; and "Twenty-Four Hours," by Louis Bromfield.

Chicago Massacre of Past Theme for Universal Film

Universal is to tell a part of the history of Chicago in a feature production built around the massacre of Fort Dearborn. The idea for the picture rose out of the present construction of a replica of the fort as a feature of the World's Fair of 1933. The fair commission is cooperating.

Columbia Buys Two Stories For '31-32 Feature Release

Columbia has acquired rights to the Ursula Parrott story, "Love Affair," and "Blonde Baby," by Wilson Collison.

These are the latest on Columbia's 1931-32 schedule.

Named Legislative Committee

Cleveland M. P. Exhibitors' Association has elected a committee to watch tax legislation, composed of Fred Desberg, E. C. Flanagan, Henry Greenberger, J. J. Harwood and George W. Erdmann.

Anna Wong Drops Play Role

Anna May Wong left the Philadelphia company of the Edgar Wallace play, "On the Spot," to fulfill a Paramount engagement in "The Daughter of the Dragon."

Radio Teams Three Stars

Radio will star Adolphe Menjou, Erich von Stroheim and Lily Damita in "The Sphinx Has Spoken" Victor Schertzinger will direct.

"Sure," he beamed. "I was playing the picture on percentage."

Chicago's Papers Out for New Circulation

Tribune, News and Times Increase Space Given to Personality And Studio Publicity

Chicago independent newspapers are beginning to challenge the Hearst publications here for fan circulation by carrying new studio correspondence and film personality copy. Local theatres are also benefiting by the policy changes which include increased space devoted to theatre publicity and listings.

Heretofore, the Hearst papers have been the acknowledged favorites of the fan circulation in Chicago. Their Hollywood correspondence and film news service, coupled with the theatre publicity of a local character, were not matched in any other Chicago daily.

Recently, the Chicago Tribune made a bid for the fan circulation by inaugurating a daily column by George Shaffer, the publication's Hollywood correspondent. Increased use of movie news and publicity has also marked the paper's challenge to the Hearst publications locally. Heretofore, the Tribune has carried little movie news except in Sunday theatrical sections.

The Daily Times is also in the field with contracts for movie material to be run serially. Most of the copy will be of a biographical nature. The paper's policy will also include increased use of Associated Press Hollywood news, and local theatre publicity.

The Daily News is also increasing theatrical publicity space, particularly in its Saturday editions. This paper also runs Jack Casey's Hollywood column, but the feature is not regarded here as fan circulation winner because of its "panning" attitude, which is not relished by the real fans.

Bill Regulating Admission Of Children Faces Defeat

The house judiciary committee at Springfield, Ill., has recommended that the bill regulating child admissions be not passed. The bill provides penalties for admitting children under 16 to a theatre exhibiting a picture wherein a crime or any act punishable under the laws of Illinois is depicted.

The operators' bill which would require a projectionist for every machine appears not to have the required strength for passage, despite evidences of a powerful lobby. This bill has been reported out of committee favorably and is now awaiting a final house reading. The state censorship bill, still in committee, has been tabled momentarily.

DEAR HERALD:

The time has come when you should go
Out where all Nature is aglow
With radiant beauty, rare and sweet,
That lures you from the busy street;
Where you can sense the joy of life
And be immune from the city's strife.

All Nature beckons you to come
Where clover blossoms are ahum
With music by the busy bees;
Where birds are warbling in the trees.
And wood and dale along rippling rills
Are all decked out with daffodils.

If you could sense this joy so rare
You'd break away from all life's care
And come on out where Nature smiles;
Where wood and dale for miles and miles
Are ringing with the hum of bees
And a million songsters in the trees.

If you'd come away from the busy street
And the constant tramp of a million feet
Upon the sidewalks everywhere,
And breathe a while this fresh, pure air,
And enjoy yourself, as we know you can,
You'd go back home a better man.

There, if that won't bring you, then it's you and the undertaker for it.

Is Something Wrong?

What's the matter with California? We are in receipt of a letter from one of the "FOUR HORSEMEN" who is soaking up some of California's sunshine in Los Angeles for a time, and he says that theatres out there are running double features and in some instances three features, trying to stimulate business. If you can imagine anything that will kill the business any quicker than by that method, then you have a greater imagination than "JUST IMAGINE" and you should go out to Hollywood and cash in on it.

He tells us that the Chinese theatre has been closed and that the Carthay Circle is playing to the ushers mainly at $1.50 and $2 prices, and it is also about ready to take the count. These producer-owned theatres seem to be skating on thin ice as well as the common herd.

Motion pictures have been, and always will be, a popular priced entertainment. By popular prices we mean from 10 to 35 cents, and when they build theatres costing two and a half million dollars and try to run popular-priced entertainment in them at a dollar and a half and two-dollar prices, it's the last word in damphoolishness, if you care to know what we think about it, which you probably don't.

The heads of these producer-owned theatres have had their sights set on Mars, and El Brendel and a couple of other guys are the only ones who have been up there, and they didn't bring anything back that was worth pickling in brine, and they have gone hogwild on building theatre palaces and will continue to go hogwild as long as a fool public are suckers enough to buy stock in two and a half million dollar theatres in which to show 25-cent entertainment. We would like to own a theatre that didn't cost to exceed $40,000 and with a capacity of 1,500 located alongside of some of those palaces and we'd shoot 'er at 10 and 20-cent prices and see which one went into the hands of a receiver first. Wouldn't it be fun to watch results, Gertie?

Just Jealous

Don't it beat all how soft some people have it, while us common folks have to dig our toenails into the sod to keep ahead of the wolves?

For instance, you take George W. Huebner of Oconomowoc. He is not only a swell guy, but he has a swell theatre and a swell home with a back lawn sloping right down to the shore of a beautiful lake. Just think of going out there on the shore with a rod and reel of a morning and yanking out a four-pound black bass while your wife was getting the frying pan all het up for business and breakfast. Ach du lieber, Louie, bring on the chloroform; we'll take anything.

"THE MAN WHO CAME BACK," with Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor.

We are a little hesitant about saying anything about this picture for fear we will slop over, but the facts are that we were so thoroughly disgusted to think that they would take two such capable stars as those two, who had made "SUNNYSIDE UP" and "HIGH SOCIETY BLUES" and who had become the idols of the fans, and put them in such trash as this, that we felt like kicking the varnish off the seats and using language for which we could be arrested.

Farrell plays the part of the millionaire's wayward son, who goes down the line from one drunken whoopee party to another until he finally winds up in a Chink opium dive in San Francisco and he drags Janet Gaynor down with him until you see them in all the degradation of derelicts drifting with the scum of humanity. What is there about that kind of stuff to make entertainment, can any one tell? Miss Gaynor has always impressed us as being a delightful lady, and we still want to regard her as such, but pictures such as this one will eventually cast a haze over our vision and we may become prejudiced. We dislike to have idols shattered in this way. You remember what "SPARROWS" did for Mary Pickford after she played in that grime and filth, and we shudder to think what this one might do for these two delightful stars. Raoul Walsh should have known better.

Talent in the "Hicks"

It may surprise you to know that the little town of Viroqua, Wis., has a high school band of 80 pieces, and that this band takes first prize at all the band concerts in this country. B. C. Brown of the Temple theatre and his brother are sponsors for this band, and his brother is the director and instructor. This proves that you don't have to go into the cities to find talent any more. No you don't. We know some hammerheaded goofs in the cities who go around with stiff necks from trying to see the tops of the buildings and who think that Erie, Pa., is "away out West."

We like this town of La Crosse. They claim a population of 40,000 and we are not going to dispute it. It probably has more wealth per capita than any town of like size in Wisconsin, Iowa or Minnesota, and if it will please La Crosse any better, we will include Nebraska, although we are making a pretty big concession when we do it.

This is the town that was made famous by the John Gund Brewing company, but now they have to fall back on near-beer and disappointments, which makes it tough for La Crosse.

Perhaps one reason why we like this town is because we were invited to dinner tonight at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Friese, and that dinner was one of those dinners you occasionally read about but seldom come face to face with. They may get 'em up better, but we don't know who does, and we can see no reason why any one should. Mr. Friese is the assistant manager for the five theatres here in La Crosse and we judge he has his time pretty well occupied. And tomorrow we are to have dinner with Guy Beach, who used to play our house some years back. Then Carl Dalton just called us up and wants us to come see him tomorrow, which looks like a pretty strenuous day for us. Carl played our house years ago with "Tillie Olson" and other attractions, but that was back in the days of the old "Opera House Reporter," and as El Brendel says, "Them was the good old days."

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Showmen and Business Men!

SHOWBUSINESS is as much of a business as any commercial line, yet many dyed-in-the-wool showmen refuse to handle themselves in a good, businesslike way.

A merchant in a commercial field conducts his affairs in such a manner that he is always prepared, no matter what comes along. If it's automobiles he's selling, he keeps records and files which immediately disclose everything there is to know about the line he is handling. If it's clothing, he is likewise prepared with all the information at his fingertips.

Why can't showmen, selling entertainment, handle themselves the same way? Why should they turn up their noses at the proper filing of information about the pictures and attractions they must sell. Why must they find themselves entirely unprepared for a sudden switch in attractions without the slightest information about the new picture they must sell to the public?

One of the keenest showmen we ever met was city manager for a certain chain with four houses under his supervision. Our first surprise came when we entered his office. It was as clean as a pin and every detail of it was as well laid out as a banker's office. His files, at first glance, appeared to be too numerous for the position he occupied, but a brief survey of what they contained and the part they played in his administration of those houses soon dispelled any notions that he was going in for too much efficiency.

His regular correspondence was filed in proper order. Then he had a folder in which he placed every bit of information pertaining to pictures not as yet released or ready for showing in his town. A five by seven card file revealed a brief outline of each picture as soon as such information was available. These cards showed the exact length and running time. Type of production. Cast, director, author. And other important dope, together with his own notes jotted down as he went along.

Still another part of his filing system was the so-called tickler file, which was laid out to fit most any kind of picture or event. Anniversaries. Carnival Weeks. Blue Ribbon Campaigns. Celebrations. Merchants' tie-ups. Ballyhoo gags. Exploitation of different kinds. In short, any item dealing will show merchandising was filed away in proper, neat order.

From the moment a trade paper carried any information regarding a picture in production, right up to the time it was reviewed and played elsewhere, he made sure that his files included such information.

That is what we would call applying commercial methods to showbusiness. And it is also why this showman advanced from an assistant manager to city manager, and will continue to advance to the highest posts in his chosen field. He is efficient, thorough and businesslike in the conduct of his position.

To such men trade publications mean more than just newspapers. They look to the trade papers for every bit of information they can secure. And then they put that information where it will help them when the time arrived.

All of this did not require a large staff of office workers. By no means. Just this one man with the office assistant he employed handled the entire layout. And they were not crowded for time, either.

In addition to all the valuable dope he had on attractions to come, he also had complete records dealing with pictures already played. He could tell you at a moment's notice just what types of stars and stories were best liked in his city. He could tell you (without revealing figures) whether this or that picture played to average, above average or below average business. And he could also tell you whether too much or too little had been spent to merchandise those pictures.

Other showmen would do well to profit by this man's methods. They, too, can run their offices and theatres in a more businesslike manner. And they, too, would soon leave the rut and climb to the top.

The sooner showbusiness is put on a more businesslike basis, the sooner it will be a pleasure to be a part of it. No matter what the restrictions may be that are piled on to a manager, he will never be criticized for running his theatre like any other well-run business.

Al Knopp Puts Over "Fighting Caravans" With Pioneer Wagon

An old covered wagon, used in pioneer days to haul beer and freight from nearest freight depots, was successfully adapted to exploitation of "Fighting Caravans" by Albert Knopp, advertising director of the Palace Theatre, Fredericksburg, Texas.

Five days prior to opening of the picture the old wagon was parked in front of the Palace and immediately became the object of much attention on the part of Fredericksburg citizens. Appropriate banners were strung along side of the wagon and old pioneer cooking utensils added a further touch of old days' color. A display frame of stills on the current attraction completed the exhibit. The wagon was not something built for the occasion, but was really donated by one of the old pioneer Texan families. The local newspaper gave Knopp a nice write-up that did not bear the slightest taint of advertising.

The local paper and city authorities also co-operated with Knopp in putting on a tin can matinee during "clean-up week." Each kid that collected a dozen old tine cans and who brought the junk and five cents to the theatre was entitled to see the current show. Knopp secured some front page stories for the stunt.

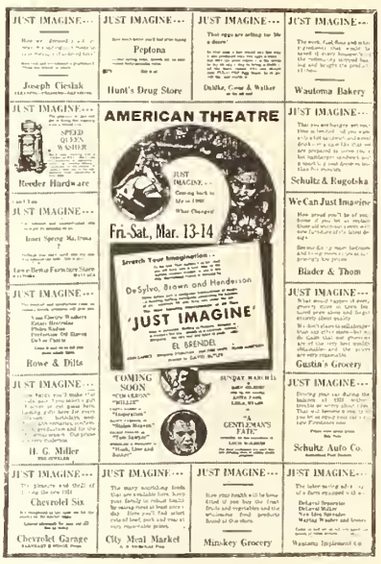
During Easter week Knopp tied up with a rabbit-breeding farm and gave away real live rabbits at a special matinee for the kiddies. The rabbits did not cost Knopp one cent as the breeder was more than satisfied with the publicity received for his farm. Prior to the matinee a pen of rabbits was placed on display in the Palace lobby.

Thanks, Al, for keeping the Club informed about your activities in Fredericksburg. We hope you will keep up the good work, for we are interested in what fellow members are doing.

Hemphill Uses Gag With Radio Station To Boost "Dracula"

W. H. Hemphill got plenty of mention over a local broadcasting station at the cost of one pass to advertise "Dracula" playing at the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Tex.

Station KTSM mentioned a special midnight matinee for three days in advance. And then on Sunday night, on opening day of picture, the theatre put on a program over the same station from 10:10 to 10:50 at no cost to the theatre.



Dance music was played with announcer breaking in to mention the "Dracula" matinee and also to say that every tenth person appearing at the box-office for the Monday matinee and mentioning the call letters of the broadcasting station would receive a guest ticket to see the picture.

Most persons are somewhat timid when it comes to asking for a possible ticket. In fact, only 15 persons mentioned the call letters of the station at the box-office and only one of these fifteen received a guest ticket to see the picture. This proved a very economical way in publicizing a picture.

Thompson Gives Us Newspaper Ads From Small Town Papers

Through the kindness of Ken W. Thompson of Adams, Wis., a former showman who forsook the game to get into the newspaper racket, we are enabled to pass along these few examples of the newspaper advertising being turned out by showmen in towns in Ken's vicinity. A quotation from his letter follows:

Ken, in his letter, states: "Being a strong believer in the possibilities of newspaper advertising, I study the Round Table thoroughly each issue of the Herald. Thought perhaps you could use a few newspaper displays from theatres in small towns, so am sending you copies of the Hancock News and the Waushara Argus, Wautoma, Wis., containing what I consider excellent displays from newspapers in towns of 1,000 population or less."

So here they are. And though the showmen making up the ads are handicapped as to mechanical facilities with which to turn out the displays that are seen in the large cities we are sure that you will agree with us they certainly make the most of what they have. You'll notice in the full page co-operative ad for "Just Imagine" that the showman, though he didn't have lots of mats and cuts with which to work, nevertheless turned out a pleasing layout through the use of well chosen copy, and a large advertising mat. We want to thank Ken for passing these along to us and we hope that we'll hear some more from him. How do you like the newspaper business these days, K. W., or, are you thinking of returning to your first love?

Carlos Frias' Ice Box Tie-Up Garners Plenty Free Space

Carlos Frias effected a splendid tie-up with a frigidaire dealer that resulted in lots of publicity for "Dishonored" playing at the Plaza Theatre, El Paso, Tex.

Advertising campaign on the picture was started three days before opening with the theatre securing a 100-inch newspaper tie-up which ran in two papers the afternoon the picture opened—and on Sunday, the second day of picture.

The newspaper tie-up was worked with a local frigidaire dealer who paid for the ads in exchange for a lobby display.

About half the ad was used in showing a cut of Marlene Dietrich and Victor McLaglen as well as forceful sales copy about the picture, name of theatre and playdates.

Lobby Display And Street Ballyhoo Are Effective On 'Skippy'

J. P. Harrison of the Waco Theatre, Waco, Tex., had an unusually attractive lobby display and also put on a street ballyhoo that helped to sell many extra tickets for "Skippy."

In the lobby was placed a piano box. This piano box was cut out at one end for a door with a cloth hanging down in front of it. A fishing cane protruded up on either end of the box with wires running across as an aerial. The cut-out figures of Jackie Searl, Robert Coogan and Mitzi Green leaned against the box and such words as, "Beware!"—"Mad Dog"—Keep Out" and "Poison"—were painted on the box as well as the title of picture and names of cast. On top of the box was a chimney with the head of Jackie Cooper bobbing up and down from behind it.

For two days during the run of the picture there were ten dogs, in cases, placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre. These dogs were to be shot at the "pound" but arrangements were made to display them in front and sell them for one dollar, the amount of the pound tax. As a result of the touching episodes in the picture, most of the dogs were sold. A story also appeared in the newspaper about these dogs being sold at the theatre.

Eight boys about 11 years of age each, dressed in overalls, knickers and carrying fishing poles and bearing signs of names of the boys in the picture paraded the streets. The boys also towed a wagon on which placards were tacked, reading, "Patrol Wagon—Dog wagon—Poison gas—and Beware." The boys also took cut-out letters, one for each man, reading "S K I P P Y—W A C O—N O W." These letters were four feet high and had handles on them. The ballyhoo caused much comment because of its unusualness.

New Orleans House Used Antique Engine To Plug '3rd Alarm'

An old city fire engine, a horse-drawn vehicle now an antique in this auto era, was used by the Laurel Theatre, New Orleans, to ballyhoo "The Third Alarm." On this page we are reproducing a photo which shows the old steamer parked on a city thoroughfare, a gentleman standing along side whom we guess to be the Laurel's proprietor. Should this paragraph be brought to his attention we hope that he will substantiate or correct our surmise. And since this showman seems to be a live member of the fraternity, we will also look forward to receiving further account of his activities in the Crescent City.

Can you tie any of the above events into your theatre's activities?

And don't overlook the many local events that are constantly turning up right in your own town, county or state.

Keep an eye on "The Showman's Calendar" for an advance tip on future holidays and events.

Exchange House Programs!

Members who would like to receive copies of other theatre's programs are requested to advise Club headquarters. We will then select a variety of programs and see that your name is placed on their mailing lists.

The exchange of this courtesy is available to all members and they are urged to cooperate in every possible way. If we ask you to put certain names on your list, we know you will want to help us carry out this service just as you would expect the other fellow to do likewise.

This kind of cooperation will be extended to other angles besides house programs until the Club, as part of its service to theatremen, will be assisting them materially in many ways. But only the wholehearted aid of the membership will make this possible. And we know we will have that aid.

ORLOVE'S KID MINSTREL SMASHES B. O. RECORDS!

Here Is a Profitable Idea for Showman Not Afraid of Hard Work and the Answer To Just What Is "Institutional"

As long as we've made up our minds to plug the institutional angle, we might just as well unburden ourselves on the subject to the extent of giving our interpretation of just what is Institutional.

Here is the man—L. W. Orlove, Manager, Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisc.

Briefly, it is that form of exploitation or propaganda in which anything but a particular picture is being sold. Such as the activity of E. S. C. Coppack at the Paramount Theatre on Staten Island, N. Y., and described a few week's back.

So up steps L. W. Orlove, managing director of the Midwesco-Uptown Theatre in Milwaukee, Wisc., with what he claims to be the World's First Kid Minstrel Show. We're not going to argue the claim for it being the first because if it isn't, friend Orlove will hear about it soon enough when others "pop" up and claim the honors. But whether it is the first, second or fiftieth, matters little to us. The fact that it is a good business getter, creates plenty of interest, is marvelous entertainment and last, but far from least, sells seats without tagging a picture on to it, is sufficient to make us feel that it warrants our especial attention.

Takes Plenty of Work

Like most everything else worth-while, plenty of work is necessary to the real success of these gags. This one took two and a half months to produce, stage and direct, and played the house for two days only. And what grief handling those kids! They had to be hunted out of the most unusual places whenever they were needed, 'cause who can beat a youngster when it comes to discovering hard-to-find spots around a theatre.

and here is the theatre he runs. The Uptown, a modern, beautiful showhouse of 2,000 seats and equipped with every up-to-the-minute apparatus for theatre construction and comfort.

As for the actual business results, it almost cost Orlove a spell in jail because of the way he had to pack them in in order to take care of the crowds. But the number of fathers, mothers and relations, to say nothing of the friends, of those kiddies who wanted to see them perform made it next to impossible to turn them away. So he did his best to satisty them all.

As the picture of the cast on the stage shows, it was "some minstrel" and what's more, there were plenty of them in the cast. No denying that this gag had it all over the usual amateur follies, or those other local shows. The kid appeal made that part of it certain.

Here is the Bunny-Pen erected in the Uptown's spacious lobby. It featured an Easter angle that had the kiddies talking about it for weeks. Many of them carried a rabbit home as a momento from the theatre. We rather like the neatness usd in constructing this display.

But this Minstrel Show was not the only stunt engineered by Orlove. As witness the photo of his lobby with a crowd of kids looking into the specially constructed Rabbit pen, while other youngsters are holding the Bunneys in their arms. Apparently, Orlove has found the children angle, in all its branches, a profitable one for the theatre he is managing. And likewise apparently, many other managers are going to find out the same thing.

Here is the Orlove-Kid-Minstrel-Cast ready to deliver the goods for two days to packed houses as a result of this keen showman's ability to build up interest in his theatre through his institutional activity.. Worked out to best suit local conditions and requirements, we heartily recommend this idea to other theatres looking for something new.

Gets Good Paper Breaks

Practically everything engineered by Orlove breaks in the papers, with the result that many thousands of free inches are reaped as an additional reward to the theatre. How we have all hoped, in the past, that our pet "stunt" should get us front page breaks. And when we were fortunate enough to get such a break we could well be proud of our achievement. Therefore this showman has attracted attention because of his ability to create a business-getting stunt and then see it through to a successful conclusion. A man-sized task any time.

Newspaper tear sheets, enclosed with these bare details of Orlove's most recent activity carried pictures and stories about this great minstrel show. If other showmen are anxious to start some healthy word-of-mouth talk going the rounds of the town, they too can get together with the right people and start work on a kid minstrel show. Keep in mind that certain laws are to be observed in connection with kids appearing or performing on the stage. You should know your own local requirements on this angle. Keep out of trouble, but keep on plugging for business.

We'll be telling you more about Orlove and his money-making showmanship in future issues of the Club pages. And if YOU have something that sounds like an institutional plug for the theatre, send it along for the benefit of the other members. Push this slant as much as possible. Try a "crazy-clock-contest," a popularity contest, local movie stunts, or any of those other business builders.

Haas Changes Show Five Times Per Week, But Exploits Livest

Here is one that should make those five-change-a-week managers sit up and take notice. Walter Haas is running one of those houses where he has to change picture more often than he probably changes his shirt. (Don't take us too seriously.) And this showman is holding forth at the Strand Theatre in Freehold, N. J., surrounded by much and powerful opposition. Yet he succeeds in engineering at least one exploitation stunt a week.

The week ending April 4, Haas was particularly active. He capitalized upon Easter Week and the unemployment situation. The first day of the showing of "Reaching for the Moon," Haas offered free admissions to children who brought four eggs in lieu of the usual admission price. Haas used the line "A Thought for Easter" in putting over this stunt. He announced his offer in his newspaper advertising and elsewhere.

165 kids responded, bringing a total of 660 eggs. This stunt created considerable interest and comment due to its novelty. Several advance publicity stories were carried by the local newspapers —and two stories appeared the following day, telling of the success of the stunt. Each story mentioned the feature picture.

The eggs were turned over to the needy families of Freehold by the county nurse.

On Thursday night, April 2, "Amateur Night" was held. The average Thursday night receipts were doubled.

Trailers were run on the screen in advance announcing "Amateur Night." It was mentioned in the ads, and newspapers carried publicity stories. It is interesting to note that the receipts were doubled, in spite of the fact that a picture of less than average quality was presented.

Haas says that "Amateur Nights" will be made a regular Thursday night feature as long as they prove popular.

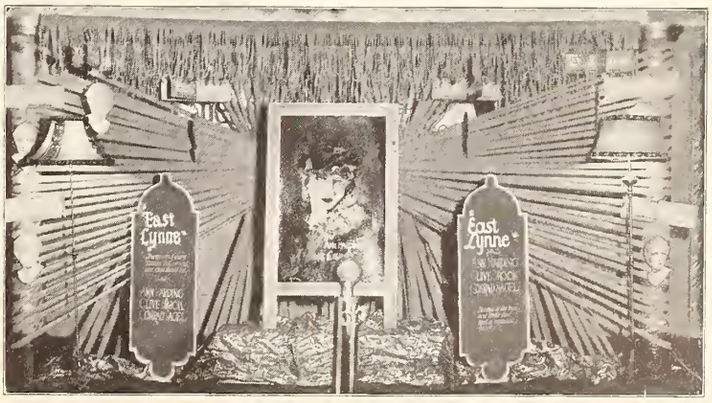
Practically all of the leading merchants of Pocatello, Ida., were sure that it pays to advertise; for they decided to take space in the co-operative page that was featured by R. E. Archibald of Fox Theatres as a plug for the Fox Orpheum showing of "It Pays to Advertise."

One of the most valuable moves in conjunction with the selling of the picture was a tie-up with the local newspaper whereby for three days free space was given the theatre and picture.



In order to plug the want ad section of the paper, and boost the daily intake, the paper agreed to run small tease boxes throughout the paper. The reader, after turning to the designated page, was requested to turn to page seven, where he found a plug on the ads and an announcement to the effect that any one placing a want ad in the paper would be given a free ticket to the theatre. This stunt went over very well.

The other stunt that proved valuable is shown. This was a full-page co-operative ad in which prizes were offered for the reader's correctly filling in the names and addresses of the dealers whose trademarks were represented. Like the want ad gag, this, too, bowled them over, and its success was so marked that it is quite possible it will be used again in the near future, revamped so as to fit some other picture.

Now here's some of the art work that is turned out by F. A. Olson, at the Fox houses. The photo shows an advance display on "East Lynne," and the clever way in which the display was set helped a lot towards putting the film across to the results wanted. The display was placed at the top of the ramp in the entrance foyer. The background was of orange crepe paper, and the picture of Ann Harding, an oil painting.

It has been quite some time since we have last heard from Mr. Archibald and learned what's going on at the various theatres in Pocatello, and now that he's again represented, we hope he'll continue, as his work always contains something of interest to his fellow Club members.

MOVIE MANAGERS ARE BEST!

Motion picture theatre managers outstep those in the legitimate field, is the opinion of Thoda Cocroft, special correspondent of "The Quill," official house organ of the Theatrical Press Representatives of America.

In a forceful article, appearing in that publication's issue of May, 1931, he discusses some of his experiences with the aforementioned type of theatre manager while he was handling the press work for the Mrs. Fiske company on the road.

Here is a part of what Mr. Cocroft has to say on this important subject:

Business on the Road Hurt by Old-Timers in "Legit" Theatres

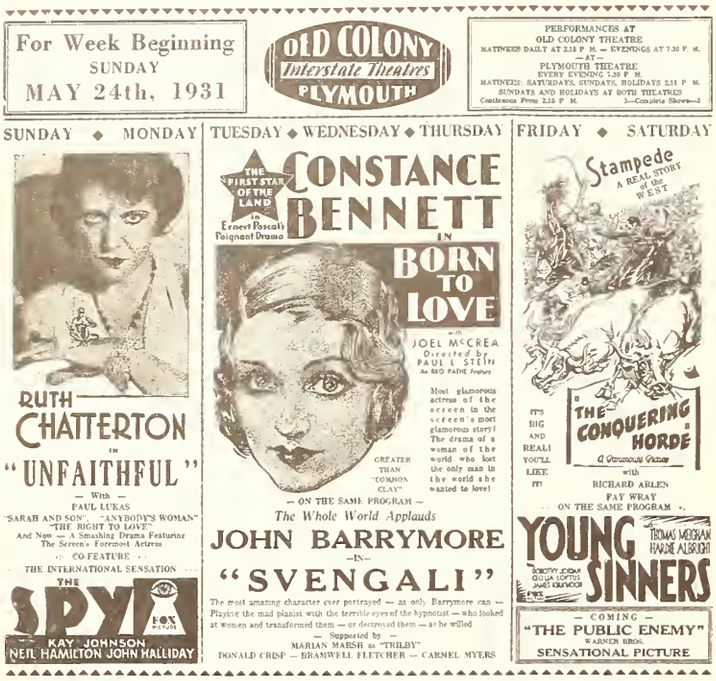
It has been a grand experience on the road this year and would have been much more profitable except for the stick-in-the-mud local managers—old "legit" managers, mind you —who still think in terms before the days of motion picture theatres. They refuse to stir out of the hackneyed ruts.

My TPR brethren may want to boil me in oil for saying it, but some of these old-timers are positively hopeless. They are the hangovers from the "legit" days when attractions sold themselves and agents used mimeograph and a cut trunk.

Occasionally there is a live-wire local manager and then we pack the theatre. Poke fun at your picture house managers if you will, but those trained in the Publix school for house managers know their stuff.

Jim Barnes, our company manager—you know Jim, always on the job and "regular"—tells a story of coming back to Broadway after a long tour.

"What was your greatest opposition this season?" asked another back-with-the-company expert.



"The local managers," he says was always the answer.

Had lunch with a dramatic editor in one of our important cities the other day. He reads our press agents' paper and knows the road, and pointed out that the worst handicap on the road comes from the "legit" managers themselves. You'd think in these days that theatres playing legitimate attractions would have managers willing to go after the business as the movie managers do.

It's a pleasure to meet a manager trained in exploitation, like Richard Watson at the Gladmer Theatre, Lansing, Mich., to name only one. Nothing is too much trouble for Manager Watson. He wanted to show that his city appreciates a visit from a star with a New York company. His middle name must have been "efficiency." Forgot to ask him.

It was not so many years ago that the legitimate manager turned up his nose at the boys handling vaudeville and picture houses, but the movie manager was by far the most progressive and soon stepped far ahead of the so-called old-timers. We heartily agree with Mr. Cocroft's views. The legitimate field would be much better off with wide-awake managers of the type who are making theatrical history in the exploitation of motion pictures and movie theatres. The "old-timers" ought to forget some of that tradition applesauce and get to learn that the business has changed and they must keep stepping with it.

PROGRAM AND CIRCULAR COMBINED!

Something like a combination of circular and broadside in this throwaway turned out by Eddie Ansen's manager for the Old Colony in Massachusetts.

This Interstate house is certainly giving away plenty in entertainment if the attractions listed here count for anything.

As a one-piece edition of a house program and throwaway all rolled into one, this circular (measuring 14 by 15 inches) covered plenty of territory.

Hostler's One Man Lobby Creation On "Father's Son" A Hit

Jack of several trades and master of them all is the way we'd describe Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa. It isn't often that you find a manager, artist, stage director, carpenter and builder all rolled into one, but that's just what Alvin is. Moreover, it isn't the first time that attention has been called to this fact on Club pages.

We are reproducing on this page a cut of a flashy lobby display on "Father's Son," painted, designed and erected by Hostler. We can believe him when he says that it looked like a million bucks and attracted plenty of attention.

The title was constructed in red foil paper with a silver outline and this combination produced a striking effect. The background was in pink and lettering among the top in silver with a black background.

We know every man isn't as versatile as Hostler but that's no reason why we shouldn't take this opportunity to show members a bit of his handicraft. Oke? And let's hear from you again, Alvin.

We are particularly interested in reproducing photos of attractive theatre fronts such as the one above and believe that all your brother showmen are likewise interested. Let's hear from other members on this subject.

Read of Colorado Uses Novel Gag On "Lemon Of Orange"

John P. Read of the Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo., used a novel stunt in advertising "Mr. Lemon of Orange."

On opening day of picture, he put on a special street ballyhoo in which he distributed 1,000 oranges and lemons. Each orange and lemon was labeled with a gum sticker which carried copy giving cast, playdates, title of picture and name of theatre.

The oranges and lemons were given away from a truck which was enclosed in art posters made up in the form of oranges and lemons.

The stunt received much favorable reaction and received lots of attention.

From reports we are told that the stunt attracted sufficient interest and attention to bring about much favorable comment, and, if for no other reason, Read deserves credit for the way he handled this one.

We're looking forward to some more of this showman's fine activities and feel quite certain that we will not be looking in vain.

How about this, Read? Can the Club depend on you to keep it posted on show business in Colorado Springs?

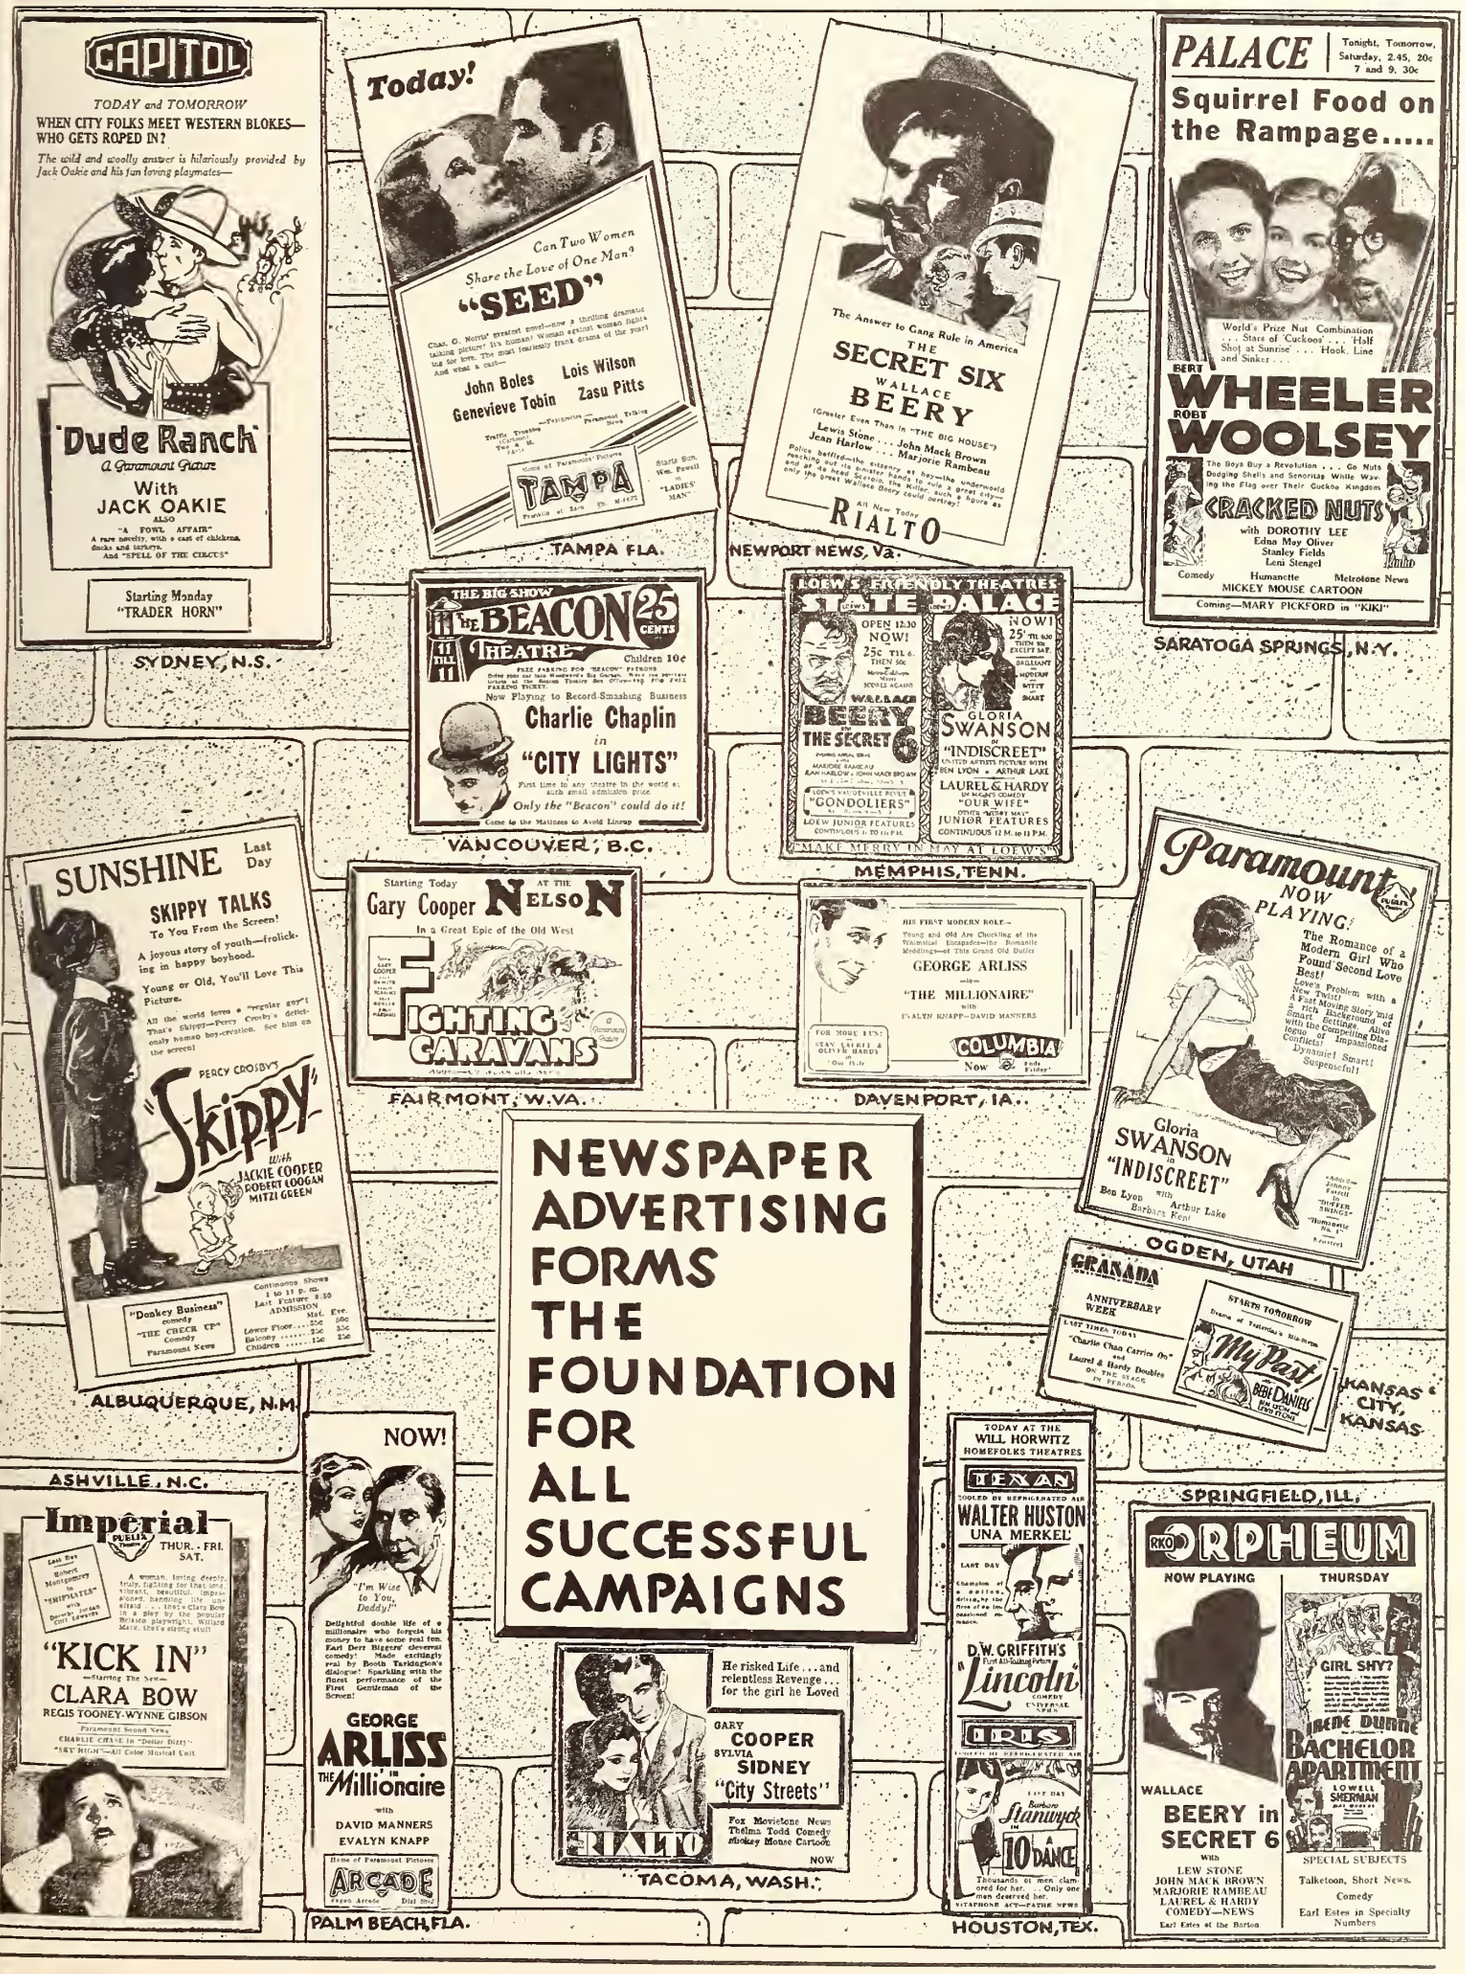
Rosenthal Promoted A Display That Was A Wow For Theatre

Everything was jake for Morris Rosenthal recently, and all because he effected a corking tie-up with his local General Electric branch in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and promoted electrical apparatus and appliances for display on the mezzanine of the Capitol Theatre.

Some party! And some tie-up! Here's what Morris received as a result of the stunt. First, ten thousand heralds, printed by the dealers on the opening week and distributed. Next, all of the dealers in on the electrical exhibit allowed banners to be placed on their trucks. This was followed by mention of the theatre during the dealer's weekly radio time. The dealers donated prizes including demonstrators, electric clocks, sun lamps, washing machines and vacuum cleaners, which were given away weekly, one at a time.

Newspaper publicity was plentiful as was advertising. Of paid space, the dealers took a full-page ad for the opening smash and followed it up with a half page thereafter.

As a special treat for the patrons, coffee, waffles, frozen desserts, and ice cream was dispensed. A hostess was dispatched from Philadelphia, and a beautiful girl, Miss Hot Point, known over the air and in various key cities, acted as demonstrator of the appliances. The show was so good that General Electric sent their officials from around all of Pennsylvania to see it, and stage the same sort of show in their respective territories. And that, says we, is somepin what am somepin!



Sam Silverman Had Fine Campaign On "Skippy" That Hit

On "Skippy," a fine campaign was turned out by Samuel Silverman, manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Schenectady, New York, that proved not only a box-office builder but a marvelous good-will boost as well.

He tied-up the local schools and obtained permission to place in the class rooms and on the bulletin boards, placards and heralds announcing the showing of the popular kid picture. The Parent-Teachers Association gladly placed upon the picture its seal of approval, and with this behind him, Silverman had quite a powerful weapon with which to go further ahead on his campaign.

A special kiddie matinee was planned for the school children, and through contacting a manufacturer of a popular ice cream, he obtained small cup samples which were passed out to the kids. What a hit they made with the youngsters! Then inside the show house, just before the picture unreeled, Silverman gave them a songfest in the form of an organ and slide performance of the new song "Skippy" obtainable from a New York publisher (Feist, Inc.) at no cost to the showman.

The show was a success from the moment Silverman planned it. Everything fitted in perfectly, in one, two, three order. The kids were happy and pleased, and the local Parent-Teachers Association more than handed the theatre a flock of good-will that will help in subsequent campaigns. Right, Sam?

Summer and the Kiddies!

With school-closing right around the corner, showmen should realize that the one-matinee-a-week schedule for kids is changed to six-a-week.

Outdoor and action pictures are what the youngsters crave and many an adult has the same weakness, even if they hate to admit it.

This appears to be one summer when no theatre need suffer from a shortage of western and action pictures. From recent surveys, plenty of mighty fine product is available and this same survey also shows that many sections of the country are going to give this type of entertainment the play it deserves, if present contracts and booking is to be accepted as a guide.

Outdoor and action pictures, backed by intelligent exploitation campaigns, ought to prove a boom to many a theatre this summer on the question of filling the seats, and not the least of this revenue is going to be, naturally, the kiddies and the matinee trade.

So long as you keep that house open you are duty-bound to do everything possible to keep it in the black. Give the outdoor pictures a chance to prove how much they can help you boost business during the warm weather.

Medd Contributes Samples of Art On 2 Current Pictures

Two examples of the very striking art work he is doing for the Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C., are sent to the Club by E. R. Medd, general manager of this house. We are reproducing both photographs on this page.

They are both made of beaver board, the one of Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" painted by airbrush in water colors of green shaded with black. The flowers and trim are in silver and green tinsel; the dome trimmed with silver, gold, green and lilac tinsel. The cutout of Fairbanks made from a three-sheet. The colors and make-up on the "Behind Office Doors" display consist of beaver board trimmed with silver tinsel, the main part in green tinsel with the circle backed up with pale green paper.

As a matter of fact, Medd sent us three photographs but the fine detail on "Devil to Pay" would scarcely reproduce so as to be legible. We are therefore publishing the two sharpest photographs and you may be sure, E. R., that your work on the other picture is not being left out for lack of appreciation. The Club would like to have you continue to send in examples of your work from time to time as members are constantly asking for material along these lines. Thanks for this contribution and we will expect to hear from you again in the near future.

The consistent use of displays such as described will enhance the general attractiveness of any theatre lobby, and while there's many a house that cannot afford the steady services of an artist on its staff a little ingenuity on the part of the manager can produce results which cannot fail to measure up in dollars and cents. By this we do not mean work which only a capable artist can turn out, but displays of a grade that can be made by the layman after a small amount of experimentation in the theatre work-shop.

The Club is delighted to know that so many managers are going in for this sort of work and the fact is evidenced by the large number of photos received showing samples of different managers' handicraft. So keep that camera on the job, members, and submit a photo of any display which you think deserves to be passed along to your brother showmen.

Exploitation Hard To Get In Finland, Says R. C. Schoham

A striking contrast in exploitation methods in certain European countries is seen in a communication from R. C. Schoham, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange manager, Helsingfors, Finland. Not only are exhibitors more or less indifferent as regards the publicizing of a picture but the City authorities are very strict where the issue of a ballyhoo permit is concerned.

Schoham sends the Club several photos, a sample of which is reproduced on this page. It will be seen that a donkey or pony is the popular means of calling public attention to the showing of a film. A small auto ballyhoo truck has been used on one or two occasions but it took a great deal of persuasion on Schoham's part to obtain a city permit for this vehicle. A cut of the truck, used in connection with "Broadway Melody," was reproduced on a Club page in the issue of February 21.

Schoham reminds the Club that "he is no showman" but represents M-G-M in Helsingfors. In addition to regular duties he tells us that he is doing his utmost to overcome local objection to the publicizing of pictures, and the exhibitor's indifference along this line.

Club members in this country, aware of the co-operation which can be obtained here in the way of publicizing a picture, will get a large-sized kick out of this pony ballyhoo of Schoham's. But suppose you fellows were up against a proposition of this kind. Wouldn't be so nice, would it boys?

Glad to hear from you again, Schoham. Let us know how your campaign for better ballyhoos works out. We are sure that your persistent efforts will eventually reap the desired results.

Carlson Uses Many Good Tie-Ups With "Father's Son" Drive

In connection with the showing of "Father's Son" Gustave W. Carlson, manager of the Peoples Theatre, Superior, Wis., made a drive which included the Boy Scout organization, the Public Library, schools and Parent-Teachers' Association. That it netted the desired results is testified to in Carlson's letter.

Three hundred fifty letters, multigraphed in red ink and advertising that "Father's Son" was an ideal picture for a boy to see, were mailed through the local Scout secretary to members of the organization. This, Carlson reminds us, must be done entirely by the Scout official as their mailing list is kept secret. The letter also called attention to the fact that the featured player, Leon Janney, was a member of Scout troop 90 of Los Angeles. There was also a reproduced testimonial letter from the Chief Scout Master in the lower left hand corner headed "A Great Endorsement."

Bookmarks also played an important part in Carlson's campaign, 7,500 of them being distributed in all schools through the principals of these institutions. One was enclosed in each of the Boy Scout letters and the Public Library was also generously supplied. In connection with the school plug a special ad was run in the daily paper calling parents' and teachers' attention to the showing of the picture.

Those are nicely gotten-up book marks, Gus, and bear the marks of your originality. Sorry we cannot reproduce one, but believe us when we tell you that they're too doggone long and narrow for a run-around. By the way, while on the subject of your originality as applied to little gags of this sort, we received one of your "Mind Photo" cards from Tommy Phelan, manager of the Paramount at Long Branch, N. J., who has been using it with William Powell's "Man of the World." More power to you, Gus, and be sure to keep the Club posted.

Glaser's Heavy Ad Campaign Is Getting Box Office Results

Just to show our brother Club members that Will J. Glaser is on the job out in Faribault, Minn., where he manages the Paramount Theatre, we are reproducing on this page a layout of some of his recent newspaper advertising. Glaser is taking plenty of space, you will all agree, but his efforts are reaping the desired results at the box office.

The Club would particularly like to call members' attention to the top center ad on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" in which Glaser has incorporated some lines of a nature which the Club has been plugging for some time. We have reference to the lines carrying a local message. Note by the cut that "Faribault is being taken for a Laff Ride." You can see for yourselves that this gets away from the cut and dried lines we've all been using for a so long a time and we believe that a sprinkling of this sort of stuff here and there will materially aid the box office through catching the reader's eye with a locally directed message.

That Glaser also is receiving strong support from his newspapers we can see by the tear sheets he enclosed. He is getting a great break on readers and a separate column headed "Screen News." We also note that he consistently plugs coming attractions through the use of boxed teaser ads.

Another little gag he sends along is a sample of an envelope used to exploit "Dracula." It contained sand or dirt, but the message read:

You're Wrong If You Think This Is Ordinary Dirt! This Is "Dirt of Satanic Power! It Sustains the Life of a Monster who Feasts on Lovely Youth! This Monster Is Count Dracula, the Un-Dead Vampire! By Night He Seeks Young Victims with Soft White Throats. By Day He Must Return to His Earthen Bed! WHY?

Learn the Story of—The Strangest Passion the World Has Ever Known! (The name of theatre and play date follows.)

The Club appreciates the fact that you remembered it on the occasion of its Third Anniversary, Will, and knows that you will continue to keep up the good work out in Faribault. Keep the Club posted on what else you are doing to sell shows in your town.

But to get back to the subject of Glaser's newspaper advertising. That is the topic we like best to discuss because of its importance to the industry in general. Glance over the layout and see whether you like the style he uses. Also, whether he is giving his various pictures the best possible display for the amount of space used.

We have already commented on the "local slants" injected into this showman's advertising, but we go back to it again because of it's real importance. Try it yourself for a week or two, see if it doesn't add a different touch to your ads and attract more attention, especially where and when you inject the town's name into your scare heads.

However, no matter how much you seem to pick these ads to pieces you'll have to admit in the end that Glaser has turned out some fine work; as a matter of fact, these ads would fill the bill for any deluxe key-city house, so fine is the make-up and general layout of them. And then, don't lose sight of the fact that the beauty of these ads are due to sensible use of exchange mats and good type selection rather than art work. That's the point we've often tried to impress upon our many members and readers. Especially those who always insist that without an ad artist a theatre can never turn out attractive advertising. Here's the answer, pure and simple. If some of the grumblers would devote their grumbling time to doping these things out and watching what the other fellows are doing they would have less time to growl all over the place.

We will be showing you more of Bill's ads in some of the future ad layouts that are published on the Club pages from week to week. In the meantime, those of you Club members who have never done any experimenting along these lines, take a leaf out of Glaser's book and try dressing up your ads. We believe that this little extra effort will reap its own reward at the box office.

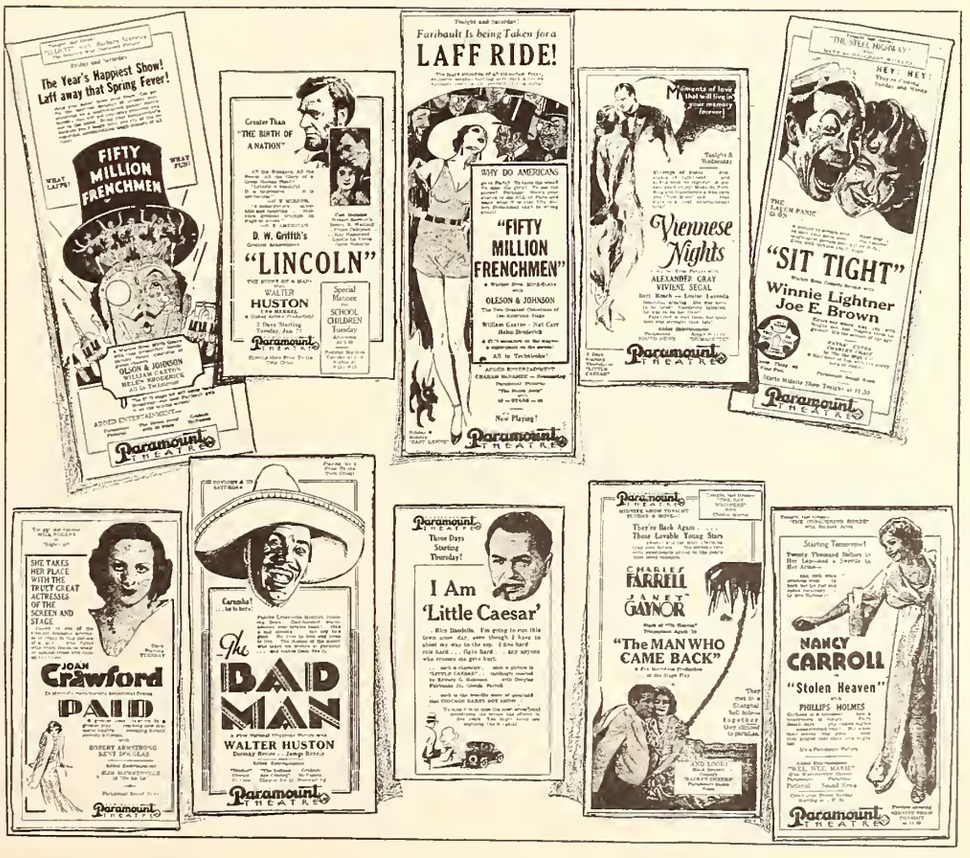
How About Local "Shots"?

At this time of the year, many street and outdoor events are staged by schools, high schools, local organizations, etc., and if you are on your toes you ought to arrange to "shoot" as many of those events as possible.

You know you can take regulation standard film yourself and save the expense of a cameraman, especially if you are located where it is hard to get a good man. So there is no reason why you should not take such local pictures of events bringing out large crowds, or of parades, etc. (especially parades), and if you use a car, have appropriate banners or signs telling the crowds when and where they can see the pictures.

Don't overlook the spectators at such events. Get slow panorama shots of them; they'll surely want to see what they look like. All representative groups attending these outdoor rallies should also be taken separately.

Cohen Pulls Fast One Cashing In On Lost Ball Game Bet



Ben Cohen pulled a smart one in advertising "Reaching for the Moon" playing at the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa. So good was the stunt that it evoked a lot of comment and proved an excellent medium in publicizing the picture.

Interest was at a high pitch on the outcome of the Hazleton-Allentown basketball game. The teams were evenly matched and it was not an uncommon thing to overhear people saying that they had placed a bet on their favorites.

Consequently, Cohen grabbed a couple of unemployed men and had them make a bet on the outcome of the game. They then promenaded the streets with signs on their back stating that if his favorite team lost he would sit on top of the theatre marquee Reaching for the Moon.

After the outcome of the game was decided, the loser sat on top of the theatre marquee sign. His sign, in large letters, read: "Allentown wins; I lost my bet; so I'm 'Reaching for the Moon.' Anybody catching me down from my perch will receive a guest ticket to the Capitol to see Douglas Fairbanks in 'Reaching for the Moon,' starting Monday."

How's this for pulling a novel gag? Come on, you other managers; see if you can't pull something similar for your own houses. Ben succeeded and so can you if you make a try at it.

Nat Silver Gives Haverhill Kiddies Colossal Egg Hunt

Nat Silver, manager of the Publix-Colonial theatre, Haverhill, Mass., who admits he has been missing from Club pages for a while, comes through with two corking publicity stunts which he put over ace high in his home town. There may be nothing new in an Easter egg hunt, nor can the appearance of a double truck in the local rag be classed as a new gag of showmanship, but, when an egg hunt assumes the proportions of Silver's and new slants are introduced to the double truck idea—coupled with the fact that it was the first time this particular newspaper ever fell for a like idea, then we know that other Club members will find Silver's efforts most interesting.

What an egg hunt! More than 2,000 Haverill youngster's joined in the festivities and what a time they had! It was Haverill's first egg hunt, and, according to several special stories in the "Haverill Gazette," the whole town looked upon the affair as a gala event. Silver not only secured newspaper co-operation, but enlisted aid from the local Park and Police departments.

And now let's see just what damage Silver did to the expense account. From a local drug company he secured 3,000 Easter eggs gratis and a beverage concern donated 10 cases of liquid refreshment for the kids. The entire cost in real money to the house consisted of three prizes for the winners, one of $5 in gold, $2.50 in gold and a new $1 bill. In addition, there were 30 passes handed out for the Colonial and Paramount theatres.

Well, Nat, we call that getting away with something worth while at very little cost. Was everybody satisfied? Take a look at the accompanying photo taken by the Gazette's star photographer. At Nat's left stands Haverill's Park Commissioner, and Al Brodie, manager of the Publix-Paramount.

Crashing a newspaper with a new advertising-publicity idea is not an easy task, but that's just what Silver accomplished—and how! Two double trucks on "It Pays to Advertise," and you can see for yourself by the reproduced pages that the merchants all fell in line with the idea. Note that the first spread carried box ads asking "Who Is the Dealer" for some advertised brand of merchandise. At the top of the page were run streamer ads of the attraction. At the bottom the message read: "Guest tickets to 'It Pays to Advertise' for correct answers." Five days later the spread was again run with the correct answers.

A sure-fire stunt, Nat, and one that is just bound to secure further co-operation from the local paper. Let's have some more, "N. S.," the other members will appreciate it.

Trade Board Snubs Ernie Smithies, But He Makes The Party

They almost got Ernie Smithies in a corner up in Kingston, Ontario, not so long ago, but the matter boomeranged around, came back and kissed him on both cheeks to the tune of the Merry Cash Register. It's a good little story and we are passing it along to fellow members as Anniversary material.

The long-whiskered bugaboo about a theatre taking money out of a town was the thorn in Ernie's flesh a few weeks ago. It seems that the Board of Trade, like all other boards of trade, was about to start some kind of a drive to combat hard times. So it began to make Kingston hum with that well known slogan, "Buy Made-in-Kingston Products and Spend Your Money With Those Who Keep It in the City." It was a great and concerted movement with but one off-note. The board forgot to ask Ernie to the party, which, as he tells us, made him feel as though he was one of those fellows who had sent all the dough out of town.

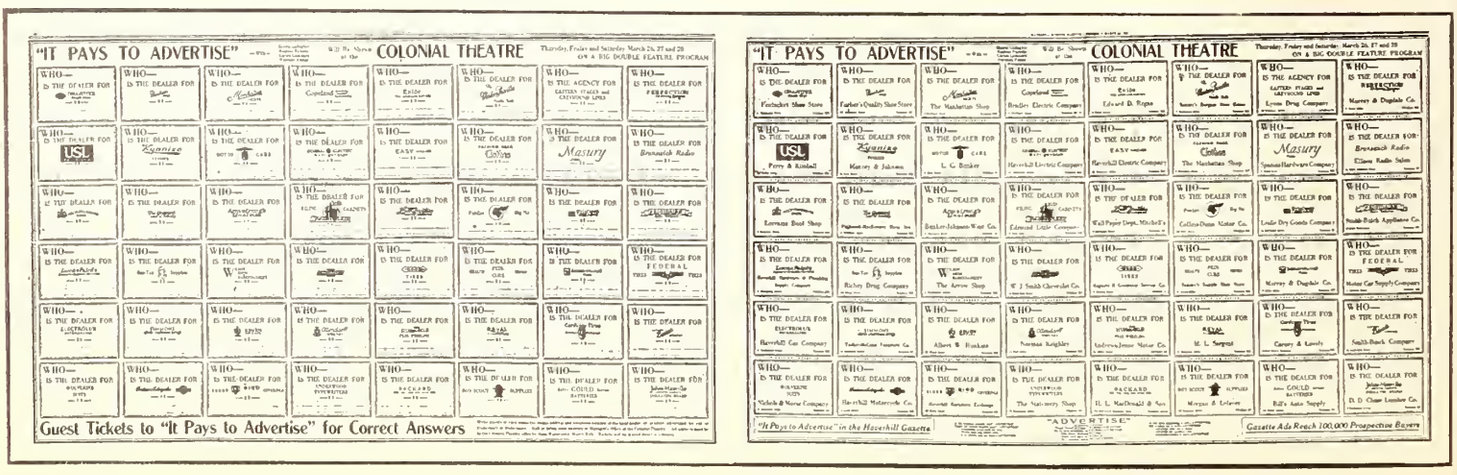
Being made of sterner stuff, Ernie hiked right over to the secretary of the board with a little campaign of his own. He suggested that he could greatly help the organization with its campaign (and at the same time get the theatre some good publicity rather than bad) by using the lobby of the house to display "Made in Kingston Goods." He also suggested that he supply a suitable trailer and show it at every performance during the week. To make a long story short, the board fell for the idea, hook, line and sinker. Following is the copy used for special trailer:



TO EVERY LOYAL CITIZEN

Demand products manufactured in Kingston.
Result:
(1) Your dollars do double duty.
(2) One hundred more people will be employed.
(3) The pay check stays in Kingston.
(4) This will help you; it is your business.
(5) Will you do your part?

Mr. Purchasing Agent, Mr. Employer of labor, and last, but not least, the Housekeeper, spend your dollars in Kingston.

Kingston Chamber of Commerce.

Not only did Ernie gain the good graces of the local Board of Trade, but through this lobby display (a cut of which we are reproducing) secured daily mention in the Kingston papers, an editorial on his community spirit for permitting use of his screen to promote trade, and he garnered plenty of coin of the realm.

Long Tailed Dogs Boost "Skippy" B.O. For Chas. O'Donnell

We're not nearly as concerned over the picture that he tied on to this piece of showmanship as the fact that it constitutes excellent material for lots of other pictures. So don't shy away just because you may have played "Skippy" and feel that the stunt is of no further use. Keep it handy and you'll soon find a spot for it on your early schedule of show-merchandising activities.

So, with this elaborate introduction we want you to know that Charlie O'Donnell, live-wire manager of the Paramount Theatre in Baton Rouge, La., is the guy we're shouting about and we won't be quieted, either.

Contest—contests—contests—! We've heard of so many that we are almost ready to turn into a contest ourselves, but when we hear of one that takes on so many new slants we're all attention again. So here goes:

One of the contests pertained to dog owners. Every kid in the city that owned a dog was given an opportunity of winning a guest ticket to see "Skippy." The only details were that the 10 owners of dogs that had the longest tails would win the tickets. As the story article read, the dogs with the longest tails would win the prizes because the dog in the picture had a long tail and that's why he was so beloved by one of the kid actors.

The dog contest brought an avalanche of dogs of various descriptions to the Paramount theatre on Saturday afternoon on opening day of picture where each dog's tail was measured. The stunt also attracted the attention of passers-by as well as being a good publicity item through the columns of the paper.

The other contest showed different close-up views taken from the picture. Contestants—boys and girls—were required to fill in the balloons with copy as if the character portrayed, was saying some special thing. The ones coming closest to guessing what was actually said received $5 in gold to the first prize winner and one guest ticket each to the next 20 winners.

So well? Anybody want to pick this one to pieces? Let 'em start now and we'll get into the thick of the battle ourselves. But instead of trying to pick it to pieces we suggest you try using something like this yourself. It will click for you just as it clicked for Charlie. Feed us lots more like this one, O'Donnell, and you can have all the space your stuff needs on our pages. Is it a bargain?

Need Some Russian Dressing? Try Dave Walsh's New Brand

Here's one from Dave Walsh of the Strand Theatre in Pittsfield, Mass., that ought to be food for thought and the box office in many other spots throughout the country. If your house is going to feature a picture with a Russian twist this one is made to order; if it be any other kind of nationality, just hire the boy related to said language and let him do the rest. Good rules always work more than one way. Right?

Walsh engaged a young Russian boy for a small pittance; the boy canvassing the Russian section of the city. He told all his callers about the picture as well as handing them heralds on which was imprinted the title of picture, theatre and playdates.

Walsh also tied up with a book store on Tolstoy's works in which the book, "Resurrection," occupied a prominent spot in the window.

Nice work, Dave, let's have lots more like it. Those gags with the slightly "different" slant are what the boys in the field are always looking for, especially on these Club pages.

Local Pastor Wins Hands' Casting Gag; Clicks With Public

The star casting contest of 17 Paramount players sponsored by E. B. Hands, Jr., of the Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, and the Daily Twin City News was won by Rev. Frank O'Brien, Sacred Heart church pastor.

Seventeen Paramount players were listed and contestants were asked to write briefly about each star, what particular parts they should portray on the screen and why.

The contest was widely advertised and publicized through the newspaper columns resulting in hundreds of answers which indirectly was a plug for the Publix-Paramount Theatre.

The very fact that the local pastor won this contest makes it all the more worth-while. It directs public attention towards the fact that this theatre stands well with the church. Hands used excellent judgment in the way he handled the entire affair and no small wonder that it clicked. Send us more like this one, "E. B."

Dirty Bulbs and the Front!

Talking about keeping your theatre in tip-top shape brings to mind the thought that you ought to devote a morning or afternoon to cleaning all the electric bulbs on the outside of the theatre.

Maximum brilliancy can never be attained from your signs if the bulbs are coated with dirt and soot. And while discussing this subject, may we inquire when you last walked out of the theatre, on an evening, to the opposite side of the street to look over the front of your house?

We suggest you develop the habit. In fact, it's worth doing several times a week, just to get the patron's slant on what the front of the house looks like. Is it inviting? Are there a lot of lamps not burning? Perhaps the letters of your theatre's name sign is sadly in need of a coat of white paint. Maybe the attraction letters could stand a good cleaning.

These represent but a few of the angles that every wide-awake showman should make it a point to watch. Whatever else you may do, DON'T wait for one of your bosses to tell you that your theatre looks like a "dump." Such news generally spoils your appetite for dinner and jars the nerves.

Landsborough Used Newspaper Plug On Co-Op. Ad 6 Months

For the past six months Ed Landsborough, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Galt, Ontario, Canada, has been using a newspaper gag which has proven an excellent plug for theatre, merchant and paper. It has been clicking along in great shape ever since put in effect and all concerned are more than gratified with results.

All he did to get the idea under way, Landsborough tells the Club, was to sell the advertising manager of the newspaper on the getting up of a co-operative ad page and supply 10 guest tickets each week. The newspaper man did all the rest of the work.

In one section of the paper appears a regular display ad of the Capitol Theatre on the current attraction. In the center portion of the co-op page is a large box reading: "Check Over the Advertisements on This Page. . . . See If You Can Find the Name of the Picture Playing at the Capitol Theatre" (the days are inserted here and fit the house play dates). Five pairs of guest tickets are awarded each week. A morticed box sets forth the particulars.

The advertising manager of the newspaper has informed Landsborough that the paper receives between 350 and 400 written replies each week the ad was run through the six months' contract. It is difficult to estimate how many more worked out the answers just to pass away some time. not bothering to send a letter to the newspaper.

We are reproducing a portion of Landsborough's co-op page in order that other members may follow out the same, should they so desire. As he tells the Club, it required but little effort and expense to put this over and there can be no doubt that a steady six months' plug of this kind will not only result in much valuable publicity for the theatre, but also serves to impress the reader with the title and name of star in the next feature attraction. Thanks for sending this one in for the Club Anniversary, Landsborough, and for the Club spirit you display in coming through. What gag are you going to use to follow up this one? Let the Club know.

Goodwin Paves Way To Double Truck By Preview Performance

Fortune finally smiled on Manager J. Goodwin, of the Ritz Theatre. He got a break with a newspaper. No, it isn't the first break he has had with a newspaper, but it was the first with the Scranton Republican.

The advertising staff of the Republican, together with advertising heads of various mercantile firms, were invited to a special preview screening of "It Pays to Advertise."

The result of the preview screening resulted in the newspaper selling a double-page truck to the merchants on "It Pays to Advertise." This double broke on morning of opening day of picture, and as this was the first double truck in over a year in the town of Scranton, it was only natural that Goodwin should feel highly elated.

Magazzu Uses Full Page Co-Operative Plug On 'Big Money'

Pete Magazzu of the Grbnd Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., got an excellent full-page layout of co-operative ads that greatly helped to publicize "Big Money."

As staged in one of the ads, "Big Money doesn't necessarily mean that you need big money to share in the wonderful values that these merchants are now offering. No, indeed, you don't need big money, and what's more, your dollar will do double duty in many instances. Read these ads carefully."

Practically every ad tied up with the title of the picture in one form or another and also carried stills from the picture.

The main theatre ad occupied the center of the page and every merchant who advertised offered some special inducement whereby a savings would be made on the purchase of some particular merchandise.

Kandy Kisses Prove A Very Sweet Morsel For Wally Caldwell

Catering to the sweet-toothed citizens in his town was the means used by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, when exploiting "Strangers May Kiss."

With the aid of his capable usher staff, Wally literally flooded the city with candy kisses and he tells the Club that the men and boys—and girls, too—went for these kisses in a great big way. Each smacker was dennison tagged as follows:

"Here's a genuine kiss from Norma Shearer. Don't miss her Greatest Picture, 'Strangers May Kiss.' Robert Montgomery and Star Cast. Loew's Valentine—Now Showing."

The girls were stationed at principal street intersections or any place where circulation of foot or vehicle traffic was thickest. As Caldwell tells the Club, the stunt proved an excellent means of creating a live interest in the picture, with an additional value of publicity for the theatre, and he heartily recommends use of it to his brother showmen.

Well, Wally, the Club opines that candy kisses will meet with lots of approval in practically every town so it's a tip to some of you other fellows to equip your ushers as per the reproduced cut and cash in the same way Wally did. Thanks for sending the photos, Wally, and be sure to let us hear from you again in the near future. Remember us to all Club members in your town.

Old Round Tabler Whyte Active Again Down On Long Island

Way back in the days when the Round Table was about as big as a dime, and the membership proportionately as large, one of the good old stand-bys was W. A. Whyte, then located in a suburban theatre at Hartford, Conn. Today, we find Whyte show-selling on all 12 cylinders at the Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., and not many miles away from another good old Connecticut showman, Charlie Maxfield.

Whyte, we should explain at this time, has not been active on the Club pages for a while, chiefly due to his getting accustomed to new surroundings and supervising the renovation of the theatre. But with that job completed, he took a well-earned vacation and trotted back to Connecticut to see whether everything was going along all right there.

Getting back on the job found him chock-full of pep and the very first thing he engineered was a big dollar day campaign whereby every merchant in the town was solidly behind the theatre and the gag. In addition to an elaborate street parade which included a calliope and two clowns for the event, he sponsored the decoration of the entire town and Main Street to make the entire affair a gala occasion.

This street parade was particularly good, consisting of floats representing practically all of the merchants, and Whyte took advantage of the fact that he was playing "Fighting Caravans" that day, and gave as his entry a covered wagon that carried copy on the banners which plugged the theatre and the show.

For an usual ballyhoo in front of the theatre he erected a cage with black window-shades to plug the "Bat Whispers" and the copy on the shade when they were drawn to the bottom of the cage advised the passersby to "Sh-h-h-h—The Bat Whispers." The idea was when a sufficient number of people gathered around to peek in a chap on the inside dressed in black hood would let the shades fly up with a bang and jump on the bars screaming. Undoubtedly this attracted plenty of attention and gave Riverhead something to talk about theatrically.

Let's hear some more of your interesting activities, Whyte, and be sure to remember us to Maxfield and the rest of the boys out Long Island way. With the advent of summer we know that the east end of the Island will soon be humming with a flock of summer residents and therefore are aware that you are going to be real busy. But take off enough time to keep the Club informed.

SHOWMANSHIP — FIFTEEN YEARS AGO!

Creating patron-interest in the theatre and it's attractions via a very unique method was the achievement of the Victoria Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y. . . . Here's the gag; they invited criticism of their pictures through the theatre's house organ. . . . A well laid-out form did the trick . . . and from records before us it was a peach of a stunt, too. . . . Jimmy Pilling of the Orpheum Theatre in Vancouver, back in 1916 BR (before Radio) admitted all war veterans free to witness the official Canadian War Pictures when they played at his theatre. . . . Another of his local good-will stunts was the inviting of opposing ball teams on the opening day of the season. . . . These and other local twists helped make the Orpheum the outstanding theatre of that city for many years. . . . Now we learn that Johnny McNear, Jr., guiding the destinies of the Mystic Theatre out in Petaluma, Cal., decided that a vest-pocket house organ was a good idea and forthwith put in into operation. . . . He was a great believer in the patron carrying those little programs around with them as he always felt the larger programs were discarded or lost about the home. . . . Well . . . they still think the same way in many spots right now and we've many a vest-pocket program to prove it. . . . Ballyhoo being the order of the day, Manager Mendenhall of the Opera House (my gosh, where have all those opera houses gone to?) in Pacific Junction, Iowa, dressed a flock of youngsters in appropriate outfits and sent them through the town to sell some interest in "Overalls." . . . Now some one up and ask us what those kids wore. . . . Here we are asking modern showmen to pay more attention to the possibilities of local shots for interesting events in town and lo! and behold! (with apologies to Oscar Doob) we find that another showman of 15 years ago found this a marvelous slant in his business. . . . We have reference to W. W. Watts, owner and manager of the Vaudette (there's another name that's getting hard to find) in Springfield, Ill. . . . He had a cameraman on hand whenever a big event was taking place in Springfield . . . and how he cashed in on this stuff is everybody's business and should be right now. . . . And now, Eddie Hitchcock please note. . . . Here we come with Manager Von Herberg of Seattle, Wash., and we want you to know how he tied up with the exchange to give "The Island of Surprise" a great send-off. . . . He arranged for the delivery of the films via a sled and dog team. . . . Now we ask you . . . wouldn't that be a great gag, even today? . . . Sure it would and it was just as good then. . . . Of course, we almost forgot to tell you that snow is important for this stunt, so if you are ready to pull it, you will have to make pretty definite arrangements with your local weather-man. . . . Oh, well! . . . Good old "Von" is still setting a pace or two in Seattle. . . . If your local electric plant goes flooey and you have no juice for your machines, take a tip from Manager Hyde of the Rink theatre in Lindsey, Cal., and run your auto into the theatre and let the headlights give the necessary illumination while a vaudeville act entertains the cash customers. That's what he did back in 1916. . . . With all the fan-fare of the present-day movie premiere, Manager Rhodes of the Coliseum Theatre in Seattle started off "The Great Divide" with a smash opening. . . . But how could they do it without the usual radio announcer? . . . you will ask, . . . but keep on asking; . . . we can't answer it anyway . . . and then again . . . who cares? . . . Get ready for a great, big, unusual surprise. . . . In the immortal year of 1916 the startling discovery was made that Courtesy was an asset in conducting a theatre . . . and now in the less startling year of 1931 a lot of managers still don't know anything about it. . . . To add atmosphere to his showing of "Aloha Oe," Manager Graham of the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee carted a victrola from a local music store and concealed in back of this screen where it played Hawaiian music. . . . It was "a decided hit with the spectators." . . . That's what the story said . . . and why should we doubt it? . . . "How does he do it" is the title of this little antique. . . . It seems that a showman, answering to the name of C. White, and doing business in the town of Clarkson, Neb., with a total population of 800, conducted, profitably, a theatre of 600 seats . . . again we ask . . . "How did he do it?" . . . Programs, newspapers and the use of telephone calls, constitute his chief assistants in accomplishing this seemingly impossible job of running a 600-seat theatre in a town of 800. A. H. Brown (seems as though everyone with the initial A. H. made money in the show business) and R. A. Babbitt pulled a good one when they started operation of two theatres known as "The Washington-Regent" in Washington, D. C. . . . The same program was presented in both houses . . . thereby making up the necessary capacity needed for the booking of expensive pictures. . . . C. W. Taylor, of Omaha, asked, "What woman is not interested in clothes?" . . . We don't know the kind of answers he received . . . but kidding aside, it was in connection with playing up the gowns which Edna Mayo wore in the picture "The Strange Case of Mary Page," . . . which lent itself nicely to fashion tie-ups . . . and right at this time we all know the value of this angle. . . . Oh, well . . . we've said about enough for one week and our fingers (two of them) are getting tired of pounding this l——sy typewriter, so we'll sign off until next week, when we will be back with a fresh crop of 15-year-ago gags. . . . 'Slong.

Morris Kaufman Is Good Detective For Red Headed Femmes

A followed-out threat to go right down in the audience and pick out every red-headed girl in the house brought a great kick to the Brooklynites attending a show recently put on by Manager Morris Kaufman, of the Fox-Stratford Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. And we're here to tell you that Morris carried out his threat.

Morris was staging a "Millie" contest, in connection with the showing of the picture by that name, and had made a tie-up with a local beauty parlor to make awards to the girls possessing the most beautiful head of red hair. A trailer, lobby decorations and heralds spread the news of the event.

On the night of the contest Kaufman announced from the stage that unless all red-headed girls immediately stepped upon the stage he'd personally do a bit of investigating. And he did, with the aid of his projectionist who followed him through the audience with a spotlight, making certain that all red heads make a move towards the stage. The stunt made such a hit that most husbands voluntarily encouraged their wives out of sheer sense of pride in the occasion. Inasmuch as each red head had her own boosters in the audience, the box office played a merry melody.

Oke, Morris! Maybe you have the makings of an M. C. or a movie actor, who knows?

Another tie-up recently made by Kaufman at the Stratford Theatre was a deal put over with a perfume shop whereby a sample package of perfume and face powder was given to all female patrons for four days prior to the opening of "Inspiration." This also made a hit with Stratford patrons and materially helped boost business for this picture.

All right, Morris. We'll do just as you tell us—tell the world of showmen that you are not asleep and that you are going to continue to shower the Club with plenty of good merchandising ideas. The Club knows that you are on your toes and will look forward to hearing from you regularly. We'll be checking up on you. As you make your rounds be sure to remember us to all Club members.

The Club Presents Charles J. Holtz, North Sacramento

Charles J. Holtz, manager of the Del Paso Theatre, a Blumenfeld Circuit house in North Sacramento, Calif., sends the Club his photo, which we are reproducing on this page. We are glad to note that a Round Table membership certificate occupies a prominent position on the right hand corner of Charley's desk. That's the proper spirit! We also note the well appointed office and the gold fish. We like fish, too, C. J., but never had any for pets. We guess they're all right.

Charley sends along some program material which we have closely scanned. We will state right here that C. J. is one of the best programmed managers we've written about in some time. He uses a well laid out monthly calendar, calling attention to China and Silver Nights, a weekly program, and a vest pocket edition of the monthly program. Oke! Charley, your patrons will never go wrong on dates with this system. Another thing we'd like to mention concerns the reader in the local paper. You and the editor must be hitting it up all right, judging from the length of the article. Let's hear what else you are doing out in North Sacramento. And thanks for sending the photo.

More New Members Swell Our Ranks!

FRED E. McSPADDEN is the manager of the North Park Theatre, San Diego, Calif., and is another Coast Service Corporation man to apply for membership in this Club. We note that the North Park is advertised as "San Diego's Finest Suburban Theatre," so we are going to bank on receiving a lot of interesting material from this new member. Let's go, McSpadden! We will await that first contribution.

R. L. DIMMICK manages the Lang Theatre, 'way out in Kingman, Arizona. He's a brand new member of this outfit and we believe that he intends to become a regular contributor of show-selling ideas to these pages. How about this, R. L., can we count on receiving some Kingman gags that went over the top for you? And how about a photo of yourself next time you write the Club?

MARTY FINGER is the assistant manager of the Colonial Theatre, Natick, Mass., and a cordial letter from N. G. Harris, manager of the Colonial, proposes that Marty be elected a member of this Club. Before Finger came to this theatre he did publicity for Paramount Publix in the Boston office and Manager Harris informs us that he is turning out some remarkably fine exploitation work in connection with his present job. All the boys will be interested in your work, Marty, so don't forget to send along some samples.

GERALD BROWNFIELD (Mrs.) is the manager and part owner of the De Soto Theatre, Mansfield, La., and is one of the latest members of the Club's Southern unit to forward her application for membership. Mrs. G, there are quite a number of lady-managers among your fellow members and we are proud to include your name with theirs. Let us know how you are selling your shows down in Mansfield and why not send us a photo for future use with your biography.

FRANK K. SCHAEFFER is proposed for membership in the Club by Frank M. Boucher, manager of the Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md. Schaeffer is the assistant manager at the Maryland and with Boucher's able coaching it surely won't be long before this new member will be wearing the title of full-fledged theatre manager. At any rate, that is the Club's sincere wish and we will look forward to hearing about what Schaeffer is doing to help Frank sell shows at the Maryland. Don't forget to send along a photo next time you write.

EARL H. CROTHER is the assistant manager of the Coconut Grove Theatre, Coconut Grove, Miami, Fla., and is proposed for Club membership by his brother, Ted Crowther, manager of this theatre. Well, Earl, you and Ted are indeed brother showmen and under Ted's capable direction we will soon expect to welcome you as a full-fledged manager. Give our best regards to brother Ted and tell him we wish him lots of luck with the new job in "America's Most Beautiful Suburban Theatre." What about that photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

JAMES "JIMMY" BITTLES manages the Granada Theatre, Greencastle, Indiana, and is proposed for membership in this Club by Arthur B. Clark, of the Vonderschmitt Amusement Enterprises. The Club welcomes you, "Jimmy," and as you are one of a live bunch of showmen on your circuit it will expect some snappy accounts of what you are doing to sell shows for the Granada. How about this, can the Club depend on you? And don't forget that photo next time you write so we can give you a proper introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

H. M. FRANCISCO is the manager of the Mabini Theatre, Manilla, Philippine Islands, and the Club extends sincere welcome to this new member from those far distant islands. We are sure that Francisco's contributions to these pages will lend color and shall await with interest his first accounts of how shows are sold in the P. I. We would also like to have a photo to file for future use, Francisco, if you can spare one next time you write the Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

CARL F. NARATH manages the Fox Criterion Theatre in Santa Monica, Calif., and heeded the warning not to be left on the "outside." We are therefore chalking his name up among the go-getting, live-wire members of this Club with a hope that he will live up to his pledge to inform his brother managers of what it takes to put shows over in Santa Monica. What about this, Carl, can the Club count on you? And give the Club regards to all Round Tablers in your section.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

JOHN ELY is the advertising director of the New Lillian Theatre, Clarksville, Tenn., and he, too, is now enrolled among this big organization of showmen. We note that there are four changes weekly at John's house so infer that this new member is on his toes in order to keep abreast of the parade. He also ought to have a lot of gags up his sleeve to pass on to other members and we are going to look forward to hearing from him in the near future. We can also use one of your photos, John, if you have one to spare.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

Speaking of HITS...

HERE is one for everybody! It's Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2... a new negative film, two to three times as fast as previous emulsions under Mazda lights. Possessed of an unequalled combination of other advantages, it is bound to improve the quality of sound pictures. Yet its price is the same as that of regular negative. Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2, is a film whose effect will be felt throughout the industry. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

Directed by John Cromwell.

Smart Showmanship by PARAMOUNT

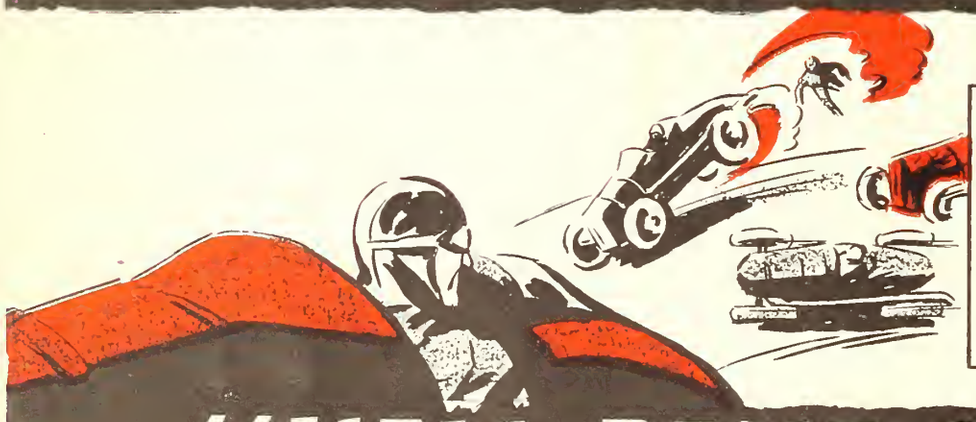
THRILL-O-DRAMAS



With Kenneth Harlan and Josephine Dunn. The first picture of its kind. Action in the sky, revolving around the dramatic story of a new development in police patrol. Climaxed by a magnificent battle in the air!

"AIR POLICE"

With Rex Lease and Dorothy Gulliver. The rugged virile ghost of the rowdy old West makes a hectic entree into the new, and then how the cactus does fly! Hard riding, hard fighting, woven 'round with a golden thread of romance.

"IN OLD CHEYENNE"

With Charles Delaney, Vera Reynolds and Carrol Nye. Rival auto racers, competing for a pretty girl's favors, run the gamut of incredible thrills. A sensational race reaches its climax in a death-rending crash! Action galore!

"HELL BENT for FRISCO"

Romance From Rochester

OUT of far away Stockholm comes a tale that should carry a thrill for Mr. George Eastman and his co-workers of Kodak Park. In the year of 1897, one year after the screen was born, the Andrée Expedition floated away into the Arctic skies, equipped with roll films from Rochester, the same raw stock that founded the motion picture industry. When the bones and shards and relics of the Andrée party were found among them were several of these rolls of film, exposed and stowed in metal tubes. For thirty-three years they had laid among the icy stones of that fated scene of adventure and tragedy. Now Dr. J. Hertzberg in Sweden has succeeded in saving and developing the pictures recorded there so long ago. An undeveloped image in photographic emulsion has been described as only a state of stress. There is strange magic in that flashing impress of light, acting for mayhap but a hundredth part of a second, which can so survive within a few thousands of an inch of silver salts and gelatine for a third of a century.

From the Scrapbook!

A HOLLYWOOD critic digs up the interesting fact that foreign settings in a recent picture—very artistic and credited altogether to the creative genius of the director—are exact duplicates of illustrations in a back number of Travel Magazine.

There is nohing alarming about this. For years the research departments of all the studios have supplied just such photographic material to directors, art directors, construction, wardrobe and property department. Writers—the best of them—make it their business to take what they want from the records and work of the past.

That is one thing, however. It is another matter when an individual sits back and silently acknowledges credit for artistry that someone else created. There is too much false credit in Hollywood. It breeds magalomania, downright dishonesty, and certainly it must dispirit those creators who are so outrageously robbed of the praise due sincere and successful effort.

Some one individual generally gets the credit for a good picture; and there are many instances where another's hand did the trick.

A Broadway Example

IT IS pleasant to record that the hit of the Broadway stage now is "The Band Wagon" by George S. Kaufman and Howard Dietz, of M-G-M fame, and that, with this coloration of motion picture contact, it is seen by the critics as a conspicuously clean production.

"No devastating wise cracks, no smutty jokes, no heavy handed gags and no laboriously assembled jests," observes J. Brooks Atkinson in the New York Times.

The success of this piece is somewhat of an answer to the more recent insistence that Broadway and New York audiences demand strong meat and spice beyond decency. A triumph of the sort may well have a staying influence on ill-advised trends and yearnings among the seekers of picture material.

Mr. Sherwood's Forecast

WE HAVE said it before, and Mr. Robert E. Sherwood has said it before, but it seems it cannot be said too often, and so, quoting from his article in the forthcoming issue of McCall's Magazine, he can say again:

"It is the fixed and immovable rule in the movie business that the unique successes of one season will become the monotonous repetitions of the next. Whenever some random prospector in Hollywood digs up a 'theme' that finds favor with the public, the entire industry indulges in a frantic, helter-skelter gold rush, and multitudes are soon surging over the new field, where the lucky strike was made.

"Next season we may look forward to a superabundance of films of two distinct types: tales of illicit love and its bitter consequences, an imitation of 'The Easiest Way,' 'Strangers May Kiss' and 'Millie'; and a vast number of sentimental comedies about children, designed to cash in on the prestige attained by 'Tom Sawyer' and 'Skippy'."

And so it is likely to be forever and ever—for that is the way of the world and of all businesses serving the mass public.

Spending vs. Giving

THESE rainy days we are beset with a terrible uprising of amateur economists and a vast deal of advice about business from persons who never did any. A curious but typical line of thought is presented at last Sunday's sermon at St. Andrew's in New York by the Reverend Dr. Frederick B. Newell, executive secretary of the New York Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who remarked: "New York City justly prides itself on raising $8,000,000 to succor the jobless last Winter, but at the same time two men spent $4,000,000 in constructing racing yachts for their amusement." Now may not one observe that the four millions spent on building the yachts went mostly to payrolls, spread through many industries. If the millionaires concerned had denied themselves the yachts there would have been a lot more unemployment and no fun at all. Money spent on amusement created by labor and talent is probably about as ultimately constructive as contributions to dole funds. A dollar spent at a motion picture box-office must not be considered an economic waste—if the show is worth the dollar.

A Success of Sincerity

THE passing of Mr. George Kleine brings one to the abrupt realization that the motion picture has come to the span of a full generation. And in the whole of the story of the industry there has been no more clean cut and consistently successful career than his. As one of the founders of the industry from its obscure beginnings in 1895-6, he was, through all the formative years, one of the more substantial and businesslike influences, and with a cultural attitude which early exerted important influence on production. Probably his most significant single venture was with "Quo Vadis," roadshowed to an astonishing and trail blazing success at the dawn of the feature era. His reward for long and earnest endeavor has been a substantial fortune, a life happy beyond the average, a good library, and the general esteem of all who associated or contacted with him.

"The real Wealth of a People is not in the Strong Boxes but in its Guts!"

WILL H. HAYS

IN ringing words of exhortation to confidence and courage Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., addressed an audience of the governors of twenty-two states, gathered in conference at French Lick, Indiana, last week. Mr. Hays put an unwonted fervor and pungency into his words, striking out at the timidity of capital, today "skulking in non-productive areas." It was an utterance delivered with the zeal of a son of Indiana with his feet firm on his native soil and with the earnestness of deep conviction achieved by observation and experience. Mr. Hays' utterance is receiving wide attention in the daily press.

THE EDITOR

WILL H. HAYS

French Lick, Ind.

Following is the text of Will H. Hays' address before the meeting of governors of twenty-two states:

In the earlier days of this hotel, the distinguished owner overheard a customer order a beefsteak three inches thick, tender, ripe, bursting with juice, broiled to a golden brown and rare all through, lightly kissed with spring onions and caressed by a dab of sweet butter. Interrupting the customer, the owner observed: "My dear sir, if we could turn out a steak like that in this house, I'd eat it myself." The analogy is obvious between this anecdote and any individual's ability to offer a complete and practical solution for present conditions.

If I could tell you how to start hay-making, I'd be doing it myself. I am still young enough to believe in rainbows, and yet old enough to remember the pots of gold that have rewarded all the greater American industries and promotions that subscribe to the elder Morgan's creed, "Don't sell America short."

My boyhood vividly recalls the graphic narratives of veterans who participated in the first and second battles of Bull Run. But I did not think I would ever witness a third Bull Run, destined to pass into history as the most shameful exhibit of financial leadership that the country has ever witnessed.

For the first time in our record, the stewards of popular opinion have totally repudiated the great commanders under whom we have smashed every obstacle and conquered the bitterest circumstances—General Confidence and General Enthusiasm—and enlisted in the ranks of General Doubt.

God Almighty can't help a community which has ceased to believe in itself.

The real wealth of a people is not in the strong boxes, but in its guts.

All the billions on earth are impotent in the hands of folk ready to admit that yesterday was bigger than tomorrow, or that predecessor intelligence exceeded contemporary capacity.

All capital now skulking in non-productive areas is an ingrate to the opportunity which bred it, and a distruster of America's destiny. While the field marshals of American finance and industry continue to dollar-doubt that we shall steadily continue to advance and expand, mass opinion will remain in its pessimistic present attitude and national saving and spending will be inspired by their sneers at optimism and their fears for the future.

With all due respect to the executives of the twenty-two commonwealths here tonight, the most important state is not officially represented in this assemblage. It is marked on no map and has no boundary lines—it is the optimistic state of mind. And without its concurrence, your twenty-two states and the remainder of the forty-eight can do little to improve conditions.

There has been a lot of faulty cement which has cracked and there have been many weak timbers which have broken in our structure since 1929—but our knowledge of construction and repair is all that is necessary to rebuild the structure which we thought we had. We have more ready cash than any kingdom or republic ever possessed, our working plant is intact, our natural resources are unimpaired—but we have lost faith, and until we recover it and resume our march under its banner, watch prices fall, see machinery stall, and hear Wall street bawl.

And the first spot where the banners of faith must be raised is over capital.

As long as our billions are held in restraint, dammed at the source, prosperity will keep gnawing the hambone.

Labor must have the same purchasing wage and labor must have the same comfort capacity, and money must work and must work for proper wages. Business isn't getting any of the 1 per cent money that the newspapers are talking about. In many places the only security that can write a note today is a listed stock exchange security. In many places business is at a standstill because there is no mortgage money. In too many places character loans simply are not.

America wasn't built that way—its expansion program was not conducted under any such system of finance and its further progress must be stalled under such a system of finance.

Depression can not afford present costs of federal administration or state government; it can't afford national, state, county or municipal costs any more than it can afford the idleness and reduced spending for which Uncle Sam and his forty-eight daughters are as much to blame as any one else.

A definite help in business revival has been rendered by governors and legislatures in making their major purpose the efficiency of the business administration of their own state government. Much of the discussion of the last few years arguing for more efficient and economic public administration is being translated into action and into legislation for the definite betterment of the business of state government. The federal government is wisely showing business that it can cut expenses legitimately

Graham Says No More Paramount English Houses

J. C. Graham, Paramount chief in England has stated on his return to London that Paramount plans no further acquisition of theatres in England, confining itself to the approximate 12 it now controls in various key cities.

Paramount Pictures, Ltd., of which Graham is managing director, plans 70 features this year, with two or three reels of shorts per week.

Graham stated a larger budget than ever before was being allowed for these films.

RKO Trailers for Chicago Shows May Be Made There

RKO's Chicago theatre trailers announcing coming attractions may be made in Chicago in the future, instead of elsewhere, and then routed over group houses of the circuit, as is now the custom. The reason lies in the uncertainties of shipping which, last week, deprived the Palace of its announcement trailers.

Independents in Search of Silent Recording Units

Independent sound units have jumped on the noiseless recording band-wagon with Western Electric and RCA Photophone, both of which made available "silent" recording for licensees many weeks ago.

Although others are understood to be working on the development, Verne Bramen's Blue Seal Sound System, New York, is the first independent device to incorporate noiseless recording, both in its portable and studio recording apparatus.

"Junior" Leaves in 2 Weeks; "Senior" Will Stay Home

Carl Laemmle, Sr., this week suddenly decided to visit Europe and just as suddenly cancelled reservations. Laemmle has not decided whether he will sail in a few weeks or return to Universal City.

"Junior" Laemmle, now in New York for story material and home office conferences, may return to the Coast in two weeks. He originally had intended to leave on Saturday.

Paramount Most Heavily Capitalized Unit

Expansion and Concentration Raises Total of Listed Capitalization $500,000,000 in Two Years

Par value of total outstanding and authorized stock and bond capitalization of film, equipment and allied branches of the industry now reaches $1,000,000,000, of which $942,809,650 is listed by 15 companies and approximately $57,000,000 by companies other than major producer-distributors and equipment companies.

Based on "listed" securities of 15 companies, capitalization of major interests increased from $437,598,596 in 1928, to $741,501,370 in 1929, and to $942,809,650 in 1930. These totals represent increases of $303,000,000 in 1929 over 1928; and $201,000,000 in 1930 over 1929.

The $500,000,000 increase over the two-year period in listed capitalization of the 15 companies reflects the rapid expansion and concentration which has taken place within the industry during this period. While a large share of the half-billion figure represents actual upbuilding of properties and investment in new theatres and equipment, an important part of the tremendous increase in capitalziation of the 15 units was brought about through acquisition of important theatre companies. Paramount's acquisition of the Comerford circuit and transfer of Stanley holdings to Warners, represent typical instances where important increases were made in listed capitalization of major interests, although, in reality, Comerford and Stanley capitalization already had existed as part of the industry's "unlisted" capitalization structure.

Warner Brothers, talking pioneers, showed the largest individual gain in capitalization, the total spurting from $5,089,652 in 1928 to $187,652,461 in 1929, from which there has been little change.

Paramount is revealed as the most heavily capitalized unit at the present time, stocks and bonds of this company and its subsidiaries totaling $224,899,991. This compares with $168,088,491 in 1929 and $124,685,132 in 1928.

Expansion of General Theatres Equipment in its Fox acquisition is reflected in a rise in capitalization from $47,590,000 in 1928 to $93,073,288 in 1929 and $103,227,930 in 1930.

Growth of the stock and bond investment in the industry over the two-year period, shown by other large capitalization gains, is illustrated in the chart which appears elsewhere on this page.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

SOME weeks ago this palladium of truthful purpose exclusively presented the charming story of the English gardens with purling brooks constructed at vast expense in a Hollywood studio for the nourishment of the soul of Mr. P. G. Wodehouse, the merry writer of lightsome stories and novels. It was with some journalistic misgivings that the story might be a wee bit overdrawn. But now comes Mr. Wodehouse, himself, with a tale of his own, as purveyed by the Associated Press to the New York Sun:

> HOLLYWOOD, June 8 (A. P.)—P. G. Wodehouse, English humorist, looked back today over a year's work in motion pictures just completed, and confessed "it dazes me."
> "They paid me $2,000 a week—$104,000—and I cannot see what they engaged me for," he said. "They were extremely nice to me, but I feel as if I had cheated them.
> "You see, I understood I was engaged to write stories for the screen. After all, I have twenty novels, a score of successful plays and countless magazine stories to my credit. Yet apparently they had the greatest difficulty in finding anything for me to do.
> "Twice during the year they brought completed scenarios of other people's stories to me and asked me to do some dialogue. Fifteen or sixteen people had tinkered with those stories. The dialogue was really quite adequate. All I did was to touch it up here and there.
> "Then they sent me to work on a story called 'Rosalie,' which was to have some musical numbers. It was a pleasant little thing and I put three months on it. When it was finished they thanked me politely and remarked that as musicals didn't seem to be going so well they guessed they would not use it.
> "That about sums up what I was called upon to do for my $104,000. Isn't it amazing?
> "Personally, I received the most courteous treatment. But see what happened to my friend, Tommy Roland Pertwee. He did a story and they slapped him on the back and said it was great. He returned to the studio, as usual, next morning, and was informed by the policeman at the gate that he could not be let in, as he was fired.
> "It's all so unbelievable, isn't it?"

This is the first unemployment complaint of the kind to come to the attention of the Insiders. Once again Mr. Greeley is vindicated in his: "Go west, young man, go west."

Pointing the Way

Mrs. Anne Bennett, president of the Citizen's League for Better Motion Pictures of Baltimore, which represents the ardent censorship advocates of that region, calls upon Gov. Ritchie to reorganize the Board of Censors and to provide a more rigid censorship. In her letter she says, according to the Baltimore American of May 10, 1931: "The fact that our censor board is not an expense to the State, but maintains itself out of the fees collected from the motion picture producers is no excuse for its members to be subservient to these producers and do their bidding.

"According to the Board's own report, the percentage of eliminations has decreased from 22.5 per cent in 1921 to 4.2 per cent. in 1929."

Way Down in the Depths

The four petty larceny salary-snatchers at 729 7th Ave., New York film building, continue to give the industry a black eye. These self-called "independents," are in reality cheap "fly-by-nighters," who attempt to work in on the state rights market with short subjects, boasting proudly of their sensational box-office pullers while their clerks and assistants plead pathetically for back salary. One has a group of under paid clerks whose salary envelopes are always five or six weeks in arrears—and if they quit they lose everything. Another is being sued for a $100 salary check for a film editing job, while a third recently chuckled heartily when an assistant threatened court action unless she received at least half of the four weeks salary due her.

IT is a fact that no person's voice, when played back after recording, sounds as the owner expected it to sound. No one ever recognizes his voice the first time it is heard. That is one thing that has made the making of talkers difficult.

Frances Starr, quite accidentally, has discovered how to have a playback of her voice without going near a microphone. She was sitting on the edge of her empty tiled swimming pool, repeating lines from a forthcoming picture, when she noticed that her voice bounced back at her with a strange quality. She experimented and found that, if she stood in the empty pool and read her lines, her voice came back to her with exactly the same quality as it had in a playback in the studio.

Consequently, all those picture players fortunate enough to possess swimming pools are using them as rehearsal halls.

Recording a Dusty Noise

Persons of experience with the jitters that come from party gin all have heard the poignant story of the unhappy young man who sat head in hand over black coffee in the morning with Old Man Remorse at his elbow, when a dainty kitten came mincing into the dining room across a deep pile carpet, only to look up startled and scream at the little cat: "Quit stamping your feet."

Until this week that stood as the world's high mark for sensitivity in sound detection.

Now a new record, or at least an endeavor at one, is being made by the experts of the somewhat sound picture. The other day a perplexed contact man supervising a newsreel picture under production at a studio over Sherman avenue way called the desk at the New York office.

"Say, now on this make-up picture, with the girl in the boudoir, what kind of sound do you want to get?"

The expert on the desk stalled and puzzled a moment, and then glibly handed out a ruling. "Strictly natural sound, that's our policy, and be sure you get the real sounds of make up—you know, the powder puff an' everything."

Job Insurance

There's a young man drawing $1,000 a week for the making of comedies, not because he is so funny, but, because his superior has an item of $25,000 on a loan to collect. The collection rate is $500 a week, so apparently this particular funny business will be in effect about fifty weeks. Debts to the company or debts to the boss have been used as job insurance before, in both Hollywood and New York.

SECRET REPORT HAS AROUSED M. P.'S. TO NEW FIGHT ON GAUMONT DEAL

Columbia One-Up on RKO and Fox By Slicing 1¾ Hours from Work Schedule

It looks like a competitive battle between RKO, Fox and Columbia in the race to bolster personnel morale, with Columbia one-up at the close of this week's session.

RKO, Fox and Columbia have definitely tabooed salary slashes, with Columbia this week gaining a lap by reducing working periods 1¾ hours weekly. Columbia's home office closing hour, beginning immediately, will be 5:30 P.M. daily, instead of 5:45, while the office will close at 1:00 P.M. on Saturdays, instead of 1:30 P.M.

Schlesinger Finds Way to Mint But Gold Isn't There

M. A. Schlesinger is at it again—counting the potential millions which he, and apparently he alone, believes lie ahead in the form of royalties on alleged patent violations of another Lee DeForest device.

Last year, Schlesinger, who purchased various DeForest patents, started suit against Western Electric claiming violation of the Ries sound patent. At that time he said he was all set to hire a corps of assistants and auditors to aid him in handling the tremendous bookkeeping job in counting the millions which he expected would come from victory against the Bell interests.

Schlesinger lost that suit on appeal and forgot about the royalty business until this week when the U. S. court of appeals on patents gave to Schlesinger priority rights to a certain sound-on-film printing machine invented by a former DeForest engineer. And, though the court's decision had barely reached the press, Schlesinger began to figure out who's going to pay on this one and how much.

"It's the biggest thing we've got," said Schlesinger, but even that failed to cause a ripple in the laboratory field.

The decision, Schlesinger pointed out, will be administered fairly and equitably, but what he failed to state is that the patent is being violated by only interests which are very inconspicuous in the industry, and does not at all concern the large and more important laboratories which do not use the device.

Publix and RKO May Try Plan to Lease Transfers

Although the theatre pooling plan of Publix and RKO was stopped in its formative stages through legal objection, it is understood that after further discussions a new arrangement has been arrived at whereby the leases of one company will be turned over to the other in various localities.

It is said that the plan will be tried first in Chicago, with RKO at the receiving end.

Universal After Juveniles with 1931-32 Serials

Universal will concentrate in serials all production and financial resources which are available for juvenile appeal in next season's product.

Starting with "Battling with Buffalo Bill," the company intends to line up "name" casts for the four serials planned for 1931-32 release.

John Wayne will star in the initial release, with Johnny Mack Brown playing "Bill" and either Dorothy Revier or Marceline Day as the female lead. Jim Thorpe, Indian athlete, is spotted for a lead in support.

"Heroes of the Law," "Airmail Mystery" and "Danger Island" will complete the quartet of serials for 1931-32.

Back in 1900, Tom Crahan contracted with the Edison interests on behalf of Northwest Transportation Company, to make an eight reeler, paying $5 a foot for the negative.

The Alaskan gold rush had just started and Northwest, which operated a string of boats between Puget Sound and Alaska, wanted a picture for promotional purposes.

When Crahan and Robert Bonine, Edison's man, arrived at Alaska, their first sight was a huge sign, freshly painted by Harry and Herbert Miles and reading:

Trade Asks Why Facts Are Not Revealed

British Coal Magnate's Son Reported Loser by Half Million on Film—Warner Shakeup Rumored

By W. H. MOORING, London

Unless present plans are modified in the light of subsequent revelations, there is to be further parliamentary agitation here concerning the process by which Gaumont-British is alleged to have come under American domination and its effect on the British industry generally.

Those M. P.'s leading this agitation are Messrs. Remer and Muggeridge, and both are understood to be basing their case on the secret and confidential report prepared at the instigation of the London Trades Council, acting in liaison with the Trades Union Congress.

Already this report has been received and examined by the Board of Trade, who, however, have no authority to make its contents public. Alfred M. Wall, secretary of the London Trades Council, is not disposed to issue the report to the press, though he has agreed to consider doing so. The trade on this side is asking: Why all the secrecy?

The report was prepared for the London Trades Council by Geo. T. Slow, a member of the staff (without officer's status) of the statistical department of the Customs and Excise. Mr. Slow is therefore a civil servant in the employment of the Government, and presumably in making the report on Gaumont he drew on certain sources of information not usually open to the Trades Council.

Assuming that the executive of the London Trades Council entertains no doubt concerning the analysis of the situation which Mr. Slow has put before them with the utmost confidence and assurance, why should not the full facts so revealed be immediately released to the public?

In New York it is stated that Fox is to sue Gaumont in connection with the recent financial deals arranged between the two. The point is made that Fox executives purchased certain Gaumont stock under the impression that by so doing they would gain a hold on Gaumont sufficiently strong to insure blanket of playdates for their product. Actually Fox alleges, in addition to a 49 per cent stock held by Gaumont interests, the chairman of a financing (subsidiary) company, the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, holds a balancing influence through a 2 per cent share. If this reveals the true state of affairs, can the Trades Council report, which states definitely that Gaumont-British is under American influence through these same financial deals, remain unchallenged? Is the Trades Council now dubious concerning the accuracy of the report which already has been sent with

GEORGE KLEINE'S DEATH REMOVES ABLE FOUNDER OF FILM BUSINESS

World's Largest Dealer in Film in First Decade of Industry Dies After Year's Illness — Pioneered for Education Progress

By TERRY RAMSAYE

George Kleine, a leader among the founders of the business institution of the motion picture, died at midnight Monday, in New York. The funeral was held Thursday.

Mr. Kleine had been ill for more than a year. The end came at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen Bold, 64 East 86th street. His wife, Beatrice Oldfield Kleine, died here in 1923. He is survived by only his daughter and a sister, Mrs. J. J. Thompson of Bloomfield, N. J.

Mr. Kleine was born February 18, 1863 in New York, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Kleine. He was educated in the city and was graduated from the College of the City of New York in the class of 1882.

The elder Kleine was engaged in the optical and scientific instrument business and the son took up the same pursuit, establishing the Kleine Optical Company at State and Randolph streets in Chicago, an address which in years to come was a local center of motion picture activities and influence.

In 1895-6 Edwin Hill Amet, a Waukegan, Ill., inventor, engaged in the making of a projection machine, with the collaboration and financial support of George K. Spoor. The machine was brought to the attention of Mr. Kleine, while under development, and was christened by him the "Magnoscope." This machine did not achieve commercial success but it became the inspirational source of considerable motion picture activity and development of far reaching influence in the industry.

Became Largest Dealer

The Kleine Optical Company, already in contact with the amusement business through dealing in limelight illuminations, stereopticons and like devices, launched into the budding motion picture industry handling films and equipments. Mr. Kleine was an aggressive merchandiser and organizer and became the world's largest dealer in motion picture films in the first decade of the screen. He became the American distributing agent for all of the major European producers, and also made strong personal and commercial ties with Thomas A. Edison's picture production interests on the one hand and the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company on the other.

The equipment trade of today bears the impress of Mr. Kleine's influence in the widely known Simplex projector, which was born of the Edengraph, invented by Frank Cannock, a Scotch mechanic in the service of the Eden Musee in Twenty-third street. Cannock developed the machine, which later became the Simplex, under the patronage of Mr. Kleine, but ultimately was detached from the picture because between the Scotchman's demand for microscopic precision and his penchant for re-inventing the machine while it was in work, production was unsatisfactory.

Mr. Kleine's first sally into production was with the formation of the once-famous Kalem Company of New York in 1907, which took its name from the initials of the three participants, Kleine, Long and Marion. Mr. Kleine's participation, as he once humorously remarked, consisted of loaning his credit to the new company for the price of a camera. Kalem, like the other pioneers of the period, became vastly prosperous with the swift rise of the nickelodeon theatres which began in 1905 and reached a tremendous climax about 1911. Mr. Kleine, however, being engaged in many and larger enterprises, sold his interest in Kalem for the profits on one week's operation, which when the bookkeepers got the total was just $5,000.

Through the days of the wars of the early movie kings, Mr. Kleine was a strong influence toward a clarification of the terrific tangles and problems of the industry, and operating largely behind the scenes became the chief instrument of peace which resulted in an Edison-Biograph peace and the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company in December of 1908.

Having the friendship and confidence of Mr. Edison and of Jeremiah J. Kennedy and Henry Norton Marvin of Biograph from the opposing battle lines, Mr. Kleine's plans, influence and counsel entered more importantly into the constructive movements of the period than is generally known in this age of the motion picture. With his extensive experience in matters of distribution he was also a large factor in the background of plans and operation of the General Film Company which became the merchandising arm of the Patents Company federation of producers.

In this period the Chicago trio, George Kleine, George K. Spoor and Colonel William N. Selig, was a unit of large power in the industry.

Had Larger Vision

Mr. Kleine was among the first to enjoy a vision of the motion picture as the instrument of a business far greater in scope and scale than the nickelodeon of the early General Film days promised. His extensive European connections kept him decidedly abreast of the more pretentious progress in the art abroad.

One of Mr. Kleine's larger services to the motion picture industry relates to a tale of the tariff and the days of the Wilson administration in Washington, which can not be written yet for many a year, because of the personages of high and low degree involved. But it can be here recorded now that Mr. Kleine's eleventh hour intervention in a star chamber session in Washington

George Kleine occupied a position by himself in the motion picture industry and was an important contributor to its progress in the earlier days, not only directly but by the influence of his views on the proper direction of development.

JEREMIAH J. KENNEDY.

The motion picture industry owes to the late George Kleine a debt of esteem. He brought to the business, and its inception, a fine sense of honor. He was a cultured gentleman, a man of great ability. His contribution to the motion picture is written large in its annals.

WILL H. HAYS.

George Kleine was a valid pioneer. It was through his enthusiasm and effort that the motion picture industry was first brought from chaos to an organized institution. I had the privilege of knowing his social and domestic life aside from our association in business, and a more noble, more generous and more honorable man never held the high esteem of all who enjoyed his acquaintance.

DOUBLE FEATURE RESCUES FAMILY THEATRE, DECLARE INDEPENDENTS

Clearing the Books

Program changes of two and three times a week are supplanting weekly changes in a number of circuit theatres, according to information reaching insiders.

Several reasons are assigned for this policy change. One is that the houses originally were not in weekly change spots. Another is that the dull period has made the more frequent change of picture imperative.

It is suggested also that with the 1930-31 season drawing to a close, some houses find themselves stocked with unplayed films, and find this time ripe to clear their books.

Sack Resurrects San Antonio Unit

Following several years of dormancy, Sack Amusement Enterprises, a film distributing and theatrical booking agency established in 1920, was revived here with the opening of offices at 304 Main Avenue in San Antonio's film district.

The company was founded by Alfred N. Sack, former theatre-owner, who still heads the business as president and general manager. Associated with him now is his brother, Lester J. Sack, former newspaperman and theatre press-agent, as vice-president and sales manager.

As southern states representatives for United Film Agencies, of Hollywood, and other independent producers, the firm is distributing a group of native-made Spanish talking features and shorts in the Texas-Oklahoma-Louisiana-Arkansas-Mississippi territory. The product also includes several talking and silent features with all-negro casts and a group of new talker "westerns."

Alfred Sack heads the San Antonio civic committee to secure 250 guarantors, with a total pledge of $25,000, for the Lyric League, the local civic body which brings the Chicago Civic Opera Company to San Antonio every year.

Walter B. Lovelace, who has been associated with the Sack Brothers for the past five years, is booker for Sack.

Abram S. Myers, Allied States Association chief, is due in Hollywood the end of June to confer with officers of the Southern California Exhibitors' Association, Allied unit.

Tides House Over Three Or Four Bad Weeks

Only Good Attractions Bracketed, Says One Operator, With Extra Picture During Dinner Hour

With the public economy-minded, the double feature in the family theatre is an asset, in the opinion of several independent circuit operators.

This opinion, however, is in contrast to the one generally held by theatre men regarding a subject which has aroused a controversy throughout the trade.

In discussing the question, one important circuit operator said:

"The double feature often is the difference between profit and loss. We have found it a good policy to double two good features, rather than one good picture and one mediocre film. By billing two good attractions you gather enough momentum to carry the theatre over three or four bad weeks.

"We know that in one family, for example, the parents may like one type of picture and the children another. By double featuring pictures carefully chosen for the individual neighborhood you get the entire family into your house.

"Of course, we seldom run the two features throughout the day, for even with a double feature the program must be well balanced with shorts. We generally show the added attraction during the dinner or some other off hour. We have found that after establishing such a policy we receive no complaints from our patrons."

Nord, French Firm, Increases Capital

Nord Film, French film concern, plans an increase in capitalization from 5,000,000 francs to 25,000,000. The company's activities include both renting and exhibiting.

The large coal companies of the north of France are believed behind the increase. Nord, which owns only five houses, will immediately acquire 40 more, mainly from Franco Aubert, a Gaumont firm.

Iowa Exhibitors Planning For Protection Test Cases

Reports from Des Moines, Iowa, indicate that a test case on protection is planned for the near future. The United States Supreme Court decision of last year would be a factor in seeking alleged damages due to alleged unfair practices in zoning and protection schedules.

The litigation is expected to be followed very soon by a number of other test cases on other phases of the contracts.

Greatest Thrill: Ho Hum!

Life has given its greatest thrill to Charles "Buddy" Rogers and James Hall. There's nothing more to live for. They've been guests of Al Capone! At least so says Carol Frink, motion picture critic of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

A "marvelous" host and "lavish, too," she quotes Hall. "I've never been to a Hollywood party that was half as princely as Al's party. 'Bubbly' flowing like Niagara. He's so different from the movie characterizations of his type."

Seek Settling of Wanger Contract;

Negotiations are under way for settlement of the unexpired part of the contract of Walter Wanger, head of Eastern production for Paramount Publix following the announcement in the first issue of The Hollywood Herald that Wanger is definitely out of Paramount.

Walter Wanger

The Astoria studios will close July 13 and all production will center in Hollywood with B. P. Schulberg in complete charge under Jesse L. Lasky, The Hollywood Herald stated.

The new status follows the Denver conference which Sidney R. Kent and Schulberg attended. Recently Wanger was acknowledged as head of the production activities of Paramount.

Erno Rapee Joins NBC As Director of Radio Music

Erno Rapee, appointed musical director of National Broadcasting Company, is placed in charge of the quality of all music broadcasts and of all musicians employed by NBC. He terminates his services as conductor of the Roxy symphony orchestra June 15, when he reports to John Royal, NBC program director.

Rapee, who was born in Budapest in 1891, and played with the Budapest, Berlin and Vienna philharmonic orchestras and was assistant conductor of the Dresden orchestra, came into close association with S. L. Rothafel when he became conductor at the Rialto theatre in New York. Last year he was in Hollywood as music director for Warner Bros. and First National.

STRONG RALLY PUSHES FILM STOCKS

Amusement Issues in the Strongest Rally Since Early Spring, With Fox Leading Upward Move

Amusement stocks rallied late in the week and made the strongest showing since early spring, the entire group moving up under leadership of Fox, which spurted on announcement of the new directorate representing powerful financial interests.

The dividend cut in Fox was a foregone conclusion in the "Street" and the stock was a firm feature throughout the week, moving up from a low of 15⅞ to above 20.

Eastman Kodak gyrated widely, selling off sharply, but recovering about eight points on brisk covering and new buying later. Loew's was strong after a dip.

Paramount's stocks and bonds were strong, particularly bond issues. Paramount 6s spurted about 11 points and 5½s of 1950 more than eight points, while the stock, after dipping to a low of 21⅝, rallied to around 23.

RKO came back after selling off to 12⅜. This issue was in large supply. The company, however, is regarded in the "Street" as being in a favorable position.

Warners continued steady as reports stated that its financial condition had been considerably misrepresented by recent rumors of difficulties in meeting current obligations. A statement by Warners indicated that position was secure and that the brothers were putting plenty of their personal money into the company, as needed.

Amusements on the curb market were not firm, Technicolor showing up weak spots. However, the list held well above the year's lows, with the exception of Columbia, which dipped to 10¼ on announcement of the dividend cut. However, a statement by directors indicated that Columbia earnings were well above the dividend requirements, but, in view of current conditions, it was deemed advisable to cut the rate. This was in line with a recent statement by Joe Brandt, president of the company, who advocated dividend slashing as an alternative to wage cutting in meeting present conditions.

Frank C. Walker Named Notre Dame Lay Trustee

Frank C. Walker of New York, general counsel for the Comerford interests and a director of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has been elected one of the eight lay trustees of Notre Dame University.

Announcement of his election was made at the annual commencement exercises in South Bend.

He was the choice of the alumni for representation on the board, which governs all of the activities of the University.

NVA Goes to Court in Fight Over Sanitarium

NVA (National Vaudeville Artists) has taken to court in New York its demand that the NVA Fund turn over for an accounting all books, moneys and properties belonging to the NVA, including the deed for the Saranac Sanitarium. Judge Valente signed an order to show cause, returnable Friday.

Postpone Board Meeting

The Paramount Publix monthly board meeting has been postponed from last Monday to June 15, out of respect for the memory of Mortimer Schiff, Kuhn, Loeb & Company official.

G T E Defers Dividend

General Theatres Equipment has deferred payment of its regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on the $3 preferred stock which was to have been payable June 2.

Columbia Cuts Dividend

Columbia has reduced its quarterly dividend on the common and voting trust certificates to 75 cents per share. Previous figure was $1.50.

NEW SELLING SEASON IS WEDGE ON PROTECTION AND RELEASE JAM

Patron Good Will and Friendship Paramount in Effective Exploitation

FROM FOX'S THE LAST WORD

EXPLOITATION stunts that outwardly smack of good showmanship, and that apparently achieve their primary object in the way of arousing patron interest and curiosity, may ofttimes do the theatre more harm than good.

If a stunt pulled in connection with any picture leaves a bad taste in the mouths of those whom it affects, that bit of exploitation has failed in its purpose despite the amount of attention it focuses on the picture.

The theatre manager who strews "dead man dummies" about his lobby to advertise the "X marks the spot" theme of his current ganster picture fails to take into consideration the finer sensibilities of his women patrons.

Likewise, a negative value is often achieved in the use of letter writing to patrons commonly resorted to by managers in calling attention to current and coming attractions.

In exploiting pictures centered around the theme of domestic triangles, there have been instances where managers have sent "teaser" letters to husbands or to wives, supposedly written and signed by some unknown paramour, and vaguely referring in the body of the love missile to the picture. In the majority of instances, this reference to the picture has been so vague as to foster suspicions and ill feelings in families where the letters have appeared.

When the stunt was unclothed, the reactions of patrons in many instances have not been the best in the way of sponsoring good will and friendly feeling toward the manager and the theatre.

These are but two of innumerable instances where the manager may unintentionally offend his patrons by such hoaxes.

In every instance, the good showman carefully weighs in his mind each proposed stunt, and its effects, and only carries it out after he is definitely decided that it conforms to the paramount consideration of patron good will and friendship.

Ufa to Sponsor Only Key Houses To Exhibit 20 German Versions

Own Circuit of 200 Theatres Denied —Expansion Plans Await Fall With 20 Features Available

Reports that Ufa-Film will build up a circuit of between 200 and 300 theatres in the United States are unfounded. The American branch of the German company will, however, sponsor a string of "show" houses in each of the principal key cities, where all-German versions will be screened, similar to the initial experiment at the Ufa-Cosmopolitan in New York.

No expansion plans will be considered until Fall, after which Ufa's headquarters in Germany will make available for the American circuit 20 of its proposed 40 features for 1931-32 series. There will be few, if any, simultaneous showings because of cost of extra prints.

Showing in the company's own circuit here will mark the end of American distribution for the German group of 20, although for next season Ufa will have in addition a minimum of eight English versions for

Report Gaumont Is Planinng Radical Organization Shift

Gaumont-P. C. T. is believed contemplating a radical rearrangement of the present theatre control system. The company owns approximately 200 houses in England.

It is expected that A. F. Moss, now London inspector, will control the London and Southwest houses; E. H. Lundy, present controller, will handle the Midlands and North; and Scotland will be under G. Luxton, at present in the statistical department.

Ad Federation In Session; Sponsored Reel Talks Out

The Advertising Federation of America will meet in New York, beginning Sunday, in annual convention.

Because of the recent decision of major companies, including Paramount, Fox and Warners, to refrain from further use of ad films in company theatres, it is believed unlikely that the sponsored reel will come in for as much discussion as at first planned.

Exhibitors Hope to End Special Privileges

Chicago Exhibitors Ask Advance for Subsequent Runs When B & K Waives Loop Protection

Controversies over protection and release which have raged in Chicago all spring are slated to be ironed out by exchanges and exhibitors as the selling of new product gets under way this summer.

Situations of a particularly controversial nature, which have been an irritation to distributors for weeks and are due for settlement when new contracts are written up, involve the Pantheon, Vogue and Sheridan on the central north side; the Howard, Norshore and Ridge on the far north, and the Symphony and West End on the west. Other situations involving less obstinate claims than the foregoing are also due for settlement before the new playing season opens.

Objection to the Balaban & Katz practice of waiving Loop protection in favor of its own pre-release houses, and thereby permitting those theatres to play two to four weeks earlier without corresponding benefit to subsequent run houses, is also expected to bring about the cessation of that policy in the near future. Both local exhibitor associations are demanding that subsequent run houses be advanced a corresponding period whenever Balaban & Katz waives Loop protection and plays pictures in its "A" houses immediately after the Loop. B & K is unwilling to advance release schedules; consequently, the supposition is that the circuit will abandon the practice rather than chance being forced to submit to earlier releases for the subsequent runs if the policy is persisted in.

Objections also have been voiced to Balaban & Katz juggling of double feature release dates so that pictures double featured at the Granada and Marbro immediately after the Loop were not made available for simultaneous double featuring in subsequent houses.

The maneuvering is accomplished by the circuit demanding of exchanges different release dates for whatever two pictures played the same program at either the Granada or Marbro. Thus two pictures double featured at the Granada or Marbro would not be available in the same week for double featuring by subsequent houses, and a comparable duplication of Granada and Marbro programs was made impossible.

Abolishing of double featuring on a city-wide scale by August 1, as now seems almost a certainty, will obviously eliminate this grievance.

Turnstile Houses for H-F

Hughes-Franklin has announced plans for a new automat theatre in Hollywood, with four others in prospect.

"WEAK SISTERS" WEAKEN RECEIPTS ON WEEK-ENDS

Fox West Coast to Reverse Policy Of Spotting Light Features on Saturdays and Sundays

Fox West Coast takes the lead in revolutionizing that antiquated policy which places weak films on the screens of circuit theatres on Saturday and Sunday in the belief that those days have the biggest natural draw.

Hereafter, the policy will practically be reversed, because, as executives state, "weak sisters for week-ends is a doubtful policy. Please your Saturday-Sunday family crowds first of all with good pictures."

In recent years, it has been customary throughout the industry for houses that have two or more changes a week to book second and third-rate pictures on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, using the best pictures on other days of the week. The theory behind this is that Saturdays, Sundays and holidays can take care of themselves, whereas the weaker days need what assistance they can get from superior product.

The Fox West Coast executives contend that "on the face of things, this theory looks plausible and practical, but now that business everywhere in the United States has gone off, this theory, along with a number of others, seems to have lost its value. Certainly it is true that no house in the country can claim to have held its business by adhering to this method of booking."

"One of the greatest problems before the industry today," they point out, "is to keep the public in the habit of going to pictures, not in your house alone, but in houses everywhere. That habit, where it is strong enough, is one of our biggest assets, for it is admitted that not all pictures can draw crowds and it is the movie-going habit which holds things up when you are playing an inferior picture."

Keep Your Reputation With Crowds

It is the thought of Fox chiefs that the best pictures ought to be played on the days when most people can get to the theatre. "In the first place," they state, "this will not make the weaker days worse and in the second place it will start to give your house a better standing with the larger number of people—who are those who can only get to your theatre on days when they are not working.

"The reputation which your theatre can earn by showing its best product on the days when the whole family can pass through your doors together is of extreme importance.

Week End "Weakies" Kill Patronage

"Do not forget that the man or woman who works hard all week and who can get in your house only on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday, judges your house entirely by what you show on those days and they are, after all, every bit as important as the other patrons whom you attract.'

Cinema Not Suing Paramount, Plans Suit vs. M-R Lab

Paramount Publix is a licensee under the Gaumont patents and is not defending any suit filed by Cinema Patents, as previously reported.

"Cinema and Paramount are working in absolute harmony, and under the agreement between the two, Cinema, backed by the endorsement of Consolidated Film, guarantees to defend any suit ever brought against Paramount and to hold Paramount harmless from any judgment based on infringement arising from its use of the Cinema patented machines," according to H. A. Huebner, vice-president of Cinema Patents.

Cinema gives similar protection to its other licensees, which include M-G-M, H. E. R., and, obviously, Consolidated, its parent company.

"It is true" said Huebner, "that Cinema now has pending actions against Warners, Fox, Columbia, Du-Art, and Duplex, but not against Meyer-Reiger Laboratory. However, it is intended to institute suit against that laboratory as soon as certain facts are available."

An infringement suit against Craft Laboratory awaits final argument June 29th. The plaintiff's attorneys filed their opening brief this week, and the defendants' brief is due the 20th.

"The validity of the Gaumont patents will not be affected by a decision either way in the Craft case, since the defendants admitted in court that the patents are valid," Huebner said.

"The plaintiff's brief," stated Huebner, "stressed the point that the normal life of a developing machine is five years and that the Craft machines had been in use so long they had been reconstructed. Three of their machines went into use in 1909, three more in 1911, and 20 additional ones in 1921.

"Plaintiff's counsel in the brief asserts the law to be that the original purchaser of these machines had the right to repair them but not to replace the important and essential parts or to replace separately patented parts such as the driving sprockets without the consent of the patent owner.

"To avoid any similar situations occurring with its licensees. Cinema grants a special license allowing unlimited replacements of parts, and where machines are leased, as to Paramount and H. E. R., Cinema actually furnishes all needed repair and replacement parts without cost to the user," Huebner concluded.

Cheer in Foreign Grosses

The foreign departments of distributors are optimistic at this time, with reports of increases of from 50 per cent to 70 per cent in grosses from abroad. Business in the Latin countries is responsible for considerable of the increase.

In one instance in particular the newsreel is credited with producing greater grosses from the foreign field.

Germany Favored By France, With No Reciprocation

The motion picture industry in Europe is speculative over the very obvious lack of reciprocity by Germany with France, particularly in view of the fact that the French trade has been making vigorous efforts to build up German film imports into French territory.

In 1924, when the pains of war were still fresh in the hearts of Frenchmen, Germany succeeded in disposing of only 20 features on the French market. This number has grown steadily until last year when it reached 111.

On the other hand, French picture imports to Germany were at their height in 1924 when Germans purchased 44 features for marketing, but the persistent deflation reached its low in 1923 with 13.

A recapitulation of feature imports and exports involving both countries follows:

German Imports to France	Films	French Imports to Germany	Films
1924	20	1924	44
1925	29	1925	30
1926	33	1926	23
1927	91	1927	28
1928	122	1928	23
1929	130	1929	15
1930	111	1930	13

Irish Free State Holds Tax On Reels as Only Concession

It is understood the Irish Free State tax on newsreels will remain at 1d (2 cents) per foot. This is the only concession so far accorded the industry by the Chancellor.

The economic policy in the country is such that the presentation of talking films has become an uneconomic venture.

FOX OUT AS MEMBER OF BOARD; CLARKE ANNOUNCES DIVIDEND CUT

President Hopes to Return To Dollar Basis

Stockholders Get Chuckle From Movietone Shots of "Fifi" And Her Groom

Wednesday's annual meeting of the stockholders of Fox Film Corporation marked the complete retirement of William Fox from active participation in the affairs of the company.

Although he remains a member of the advisory committee, this is purely a legal device under the provisions of which Fox receives deferred payments of $500,000 annually (erroneously considered as a salary) for a period of five years. This agreement was reached in the sale of the company to Harley L. Clarke, now president.

The directors, meeting just prior to assemblage of the stockholders, declared a quarterly dividend of 62½ cents, payable July 15 to stock of record June 30. This is on a basis of $2.50 a year. Clarke stated, however, that in the third quarter he hoped to return to the basis of $4.00 annually.

On Thursday following the announcement of the new directorate, Fox stock moved up three points.

"Fifi" Stillman McCormick, and her youthful husband, Fowler, delayed the stockholder proceedings. Before President Clarke's entrance into the meeting Fox Movietone News of the newlyweds, and two short pictures, were screened for the investors and the newspapermen. Scheduled for 2 o'clock, the meeting did not get under way until 3:30.

Interesting in the new line-up of Fox directors is the election of David K. E. Bruce, son-in-law of Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury. The complete personnel, which brings several men of international note into the picture business, follows:

Harley L. Clarke, president of Fox and also head of Utilities Power & Light Company.

Albert H. Wiggin, chairman of the governing board of the Chase National Bank of the City of New York.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, country gentleman and reputed to have large interests in railroads and other utilities.

Philip R. Clarke, president of Central Trust Company of Illinois, Chicago.

Frank O. Watts, chairman of the board of directors of First National Bank of St. Louis.

George M. Moffett, president of Corn Products Refining Company.

Matthew C. Brush, president of American International Corporation.

C. W. Higley, president of Hanover Fire Insurance Company.

Winfield Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox.

David K. E. Bruce, son-in-law of Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury.

Edward R. Tinker, president of Interstate Equities Corporation.

Samuel W. Fordyce, Fordyce, Holliday & White, attorneys.

The stockholders' meeting, attended by about 80 investors, was brief. Following its adjournment, a statement was issued by President Clarke.

Officers of the corporation will be elected at the next meeting of the directors, which will be held in one to three or four weeks, depending upon the return of the entire personnel to New York.

In his statement Clarke said:

"The annual report . . . is the financial record of a trying time and your company was fortunate in being able to show gross income and net operating profits in excess of any previously reported.

"The motion picture industry has not been immune from the effects of a business depression lasting nearly two years. Fortunately, it suffered less than almost any other business. The prospect of the business is altogether encouraging.

"Your company has not found it necessary to take drastic steps of retrenchment that would handicap production and impair the value of its product, but every practical economy within these limits has been effected. Under our system of budgeting production, it is expected that more than $3,000,000 a year can be saved. This plan has been in effect for more than five months and 1931 should fully reflect its benefits."

Schnitzer Remarks!

Joseph I. Schnitzer addresses his organization in this reassuring manner from the Coast:

"We are not considering salary reductions in RKO-Radio Pictures.

"In these trying times everybody must put his shoulder to the wheel and effect most rigid economies consistent with maintaining quality in our productions and rendering efficient service to our customers.

"I don't want members of our organization to think depression and talk panic. Let each man get to work and save every possible dollar of gross. In this way only will we be able to overcome present conditions."

Death Takes Hamm, Last F. & R. Partner

William Hamm, 72, third partner of the former Finkelstein & Reuben circuit of St. Paul, and wealthy backer of that enterprise, followed his two partners by less than one month when he died at his St. Paul home Wednesday evening of heart failure, the same disease which carried off his two associates.

Hamm was born in St. Paul, the son of Theodore Hamm, leading brewer. Entering his father's business at the age of 13, he built it into one of the largest in the Northwest. Following the coming of Prohibition, he became interested in the Finkelstein & Ruben string of houses in the Twin Cities. The circuit was built to 150 houses in Minnesota, the Dakotas and Wisconsin, and was later sold to Paramount for a reported sum of $1,000,000. Hamm was the silent partner in the enterprise.

He was prominent in politics and civic affairs. He is survived by his widow, one son, three daughters and five sisters.

Balaban Denies He Will Take Immerman's Post

Barney Balaban, treasurer of Balaban & Katz, Public subsidiary, has denied reports that he would succeed Walter Immerman as Chicago-Detroit Publix district manager.

"The report is a pure fabrification and can only have the effect of discrediting its purveyors," Balaban said. "The irresponsible circulation given it has made it necessary to advise all district officers and theatre managers by letter of its utter disregard of fact."

Brothers' Funds Ample For Warner, Says Jack L.

Jack L. Warner, on the Coast, has stated that the brothers are "cheerfully putting back" the money they have taken out of the business, that the company has at its disposal ample funds, and that its position is "solid and secure."

He claims Warner Brothers is meeting the present situation with certain economies which are "simply those any well run business endeavors to effect."

Fox Will Close Theatres Rather Than "Double Bill"

Fox Theatres has manifested its intention of sticking firmly to the one-feature policy, by the decision to close during the summer, those houses which cannot make ends meet with that method.

In Wisconsin, where Fox Midwesco houses have been playing vaudeville with the feature, all stage bills have been eliminated for the 10-week summer period. If they cannot stand up on one feature alone, they will be closed. Warners, RKO and Universal, in the same section, subscribe to the same single feature policy.

CHILD ATTENDANCE HELPS FAMILY HOUSES, NOT DELUXE, SAY CIRCUITS

A Monkey School!

Tiffany is establishing a monkey school. Young chimps who have aspirations in the motion picture direction are forced to attend—whether they like it or not. Between production are school hours, where the long-armed stars are broken in on how best to handle series gestures before the camera. They haven't a chance to play "hookey," either. A wardrobe department for them has also been established, where Mistress Caroline presides over humans' suits for them. Cowboy outfits have just been made for the jungle actors for "Cinnamon" a burlesque, which Sig Neufeld is at the moment directing. Wonder if they are temperamental?

Shorter Extended Runs Blamed to Twin Featuring

Leading Chicago distributors and theatre men are explaining the shortening of the average run of extended engagement pictures there as being due to the citywide scope of double featuring attained during the past year. Average runs there this year were 12 days, as compared with 18 days a year ago.

The increased demand for pictures brought about by double featuring forced earlier releases and made pictures available to the neighborhoods in much more rapid succession than heretofore. The situation thus created, together with the bargain aspect of double features during a time of economic depression, attracted neighborhood patronage and withheld it from the Loop. Consequent shortening of Loop runs was inevitable this year, it was agreed.

Ethel Levey Returns West From Miss Cohan's Bedside

Ethel Levey, wife of Claude Grahame-White and mother of Georgette Cohan, has returned to Hollywood after several weeks in New York with her daughter, dangerously ill.

Georgette Cohan is the victim of a mysterious malady, which may result in her becoming a cripple for life. If she regains strength sufficiently, she will be brought to the Coast to live, otherwise she will be taken abroad.

Matinees Prevent Loss Up to $500 at Times

But Damage to Furnishings in Deluxe Theatres and Holding Out Adults at Higher Prices Are Cited

Is large juvenile attendance profitable?

Circuit executives answer that question with a "yes" and a "no."

"Yes" in the case of the average theatre and "no" in the deluxe.

"In 1928-29," said one circuit owner, who requested that his name not be used, "the exhibitors got together to keep the kids out of their houses, but they soon learned that they had killed the goose that laid the golden egg.

"Of course, in the deluxe house there are other things besides the box office to take into consideration. There you have your elaborate furnishings, and a host of youngsters are unintentionally destructive. The cost of repairing damage often is more than the returns from childrens' admissions.

"But in the average or family house you do not have to take that into consideration.

"Kid attendance does bring in matinee business, for the matinee is the children's show. Without these matinees there are times when we would lose as high as $500 on a picture.

"Yes, I would say that large juvenile attendance is worth going after."

Another circuit executive, however, was emphatic in saying "no."

"You get 100 children in a theatre," he pointed out, "and that means that those 100 seats are not available for adults who pay perhaps twice as much at the box office. I consider large juvenile attendance as a losing proposition."

One executive said that his company had found it wise to direct theatre advertising to everybody, with no special appeal to the children. "However," he said, "we have found that when we play some picture that has a juvenile appeal our matinee business is big."

Edison On the Air

Thomas A. Edison spoke over a nationwide NBC hookup last Thursday, June 11, from his home in Fort Myers, Fla. The inventor addressed leaders of the electrical industry, in convention of the National Electric Light Association at Atlantic City, N. J.

"Yoo Hoo, Prosperity!"

Eddie Cantor is at it again. Since his "Caught Short," a learned treatise on the financial situation, he has been too busy to devote much time to helping the country out of its spot. But now, he has again communed with his typewriter, and the result is "Yoo Hoo, Prosperity!" which Simon & Schuster will shortly publish. There will be 7,500 words of "Cantorian wisdom" in the volume, and Eddie was assisted by David Freedman, playwright and novelist, who is on the Coast for the purpose of moving Cantor's latest film, "Palmy Days," more rapidly screenward!

$100,000 Quiz in Canada Is Headed For Pigeon Hole

Shelving of the investigation to determine whether an illegal combination existed in the industry in Canada is the net result expected, after $100,000 expenditures in legal fees, traveling costs and court fees. The commissioner's report of findings, submitted May 4, was to have been acted upon within two weeks. All companies were represented. Evidence was not collected to compare film rentals paid by Famous Players-Canadian and the independents.

Saving by Budget Is Factor in Fox Ban on Pay Cuts

Budgeting of production one year ago, thereby effecting a saving of several millions of dollars, is one of the factors responsible for the Harley L. Clarke order, "No cuts in salaries in Fox Film Corporation," according to a man prominent in the organization.

Further comment on the subject is contained in the current issue of The Last Word, the Fox Theatre house organ. It reads:

"The new management believes that good business sense calls for no decreases in salaries. It is convinced that a good management of any enterprise can find other means of cutting expenses than slashing the pay of men and women working for it. It believes that for a management to reduce salaries is a confession of inefficiency."

Cautioned to Watch Outgo

However, Fox managers are cautioned to watch expenditures. In this connection, Last Word says:

"We must cut down the nut. Expenditures must be brought down commensurate with the decrease in grosses.

"One good turn, then, deserves another. If the new management sees fit to keep salaries intact, everybody in the organization should strive to eliminate every item of expense that can be dropped without crippling business.

"The next question that arises is how we are to go about it. The first thing to do is to sit down and calmly analyze the situation. Get out your budget and your payroll and go over them carefully.

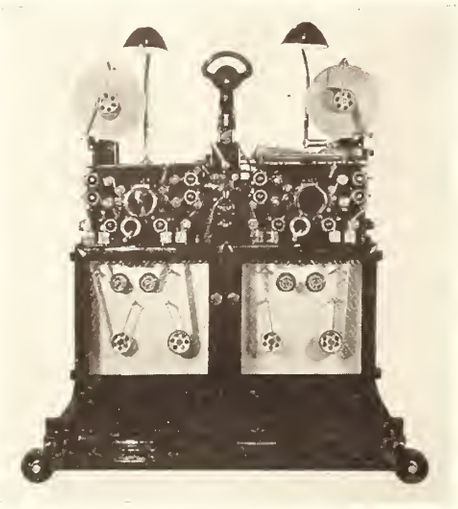
"Don't Cut Arbitrarily"

"The chances are that your budget can be reduced. But it is not smart to slice indiscriminately. Go right down your list, but don't cut arbitrarily. Study the various items in your budget, weigh their value and what they mean to the box office.

"The arbitrary method is dangerous. It can work irreparable damage, especially in the matter of causing dissatisfaction among employes and crippling staffs. The right way to handle the problem is not arbitrarily to cut off $100 here or $50 there, but to analyze your operation as a whole. Determine where you might eliminate whole departments or whole activities."

Propose World Exhibitors Meet in London Next Year

That the 1931 International Exhibitors' Conference be conducted in London was proposed at the recent session of the Conference in Rome.



Ryan and Sheehan Confer

J. P. Ryan, Fox home office representative in Cuba and Central America, is in New York conferring on sales matters in his territory.

Jay Looking at Plays

Colonel Jason Jay, Hays office contact man on the Studio Code, is remaining in New York for three weeks, looking at plays purchased for filming.

A New Printer

A new 35 mm. automatic sound and picture production printer is being exhibited by Bell and Howell. The device prints both sound and picture in one operation. Notches on the edge of the film are eliminated. All the operator has to do, says Bell and Howell, is to thread the machine, push the interlocked lever and walk away. If the film breaks or a lamp burns out, the machine stops automatically. Two features emphasized are the use of a "traveling matte" between the printing light and the negative film to control the printing value of the light without notches, and densitometric control of printing light values.

Duffy-United Artists Deal Expected To Be Completed

Final arrangement of details and signing of contracts is expected at any time in the deal made between Henry Duffy, San Francisco legitimate operator and United Artists, whereby Duffy's plays and players will be available for the film company, and the latter's stories and stars, will be at Duffy's disposal.

Duffy operates the Alcazar, in San Francisco and the El Capitan in Hollywood. Contracts have already been drawn, it is understood.

First Bob Steele Done

"Near the Trail's End," first of eight Bob Steele Tiffany Westerns being produced by Trem Carr, has been completed on the Coast. Wallace Fox directed. The next, "South of Santa Fe," will get under way shortly.

"Marty" Schiff Back From Europe

Martin Schiff, traveling auditor for Universal, returned this week from an eight months' stay at the company's London office.

General Film Moves

The American General Film Corporation, formerly at 1440 Broadway, New York, has opened new offices at 729 Seventh Avenue.

Tri-State MPTO May Launch Own Paper Exchange

Exhibitors in the Tri-State MPTO (Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee) will open their own exploitation paper exchange and sell direct to the members, if the large producing and distributing companies copyright their paper and other exploitation material, as one recently stated, it was decided at the Little Rock convention Sunday and Monday.

Minimum protection of 90 days over theatres charging ten cents admission day or night was also agreed upon.

The theatre owners decided to call upon the producers to eliminate sad endings to pictures, declaring that the box office suffers from the depressing effect of such productions on many patrons.

Obtaining of service charge reductions from Electrical Research Products was highly commended and the MPTOA was urged to continue its efforts on that problem.

M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, who attended and reported the meeting Tri-State's best attended and most successful convention, will also be at the sessions of the Southeastern Theatre Owners June 15 and 16 at the Ansley hotel in Atlanta.

Rialto to Show "Hits"

The New York Rialto, closed for one week, has reopened with a new continuous policy, showing outstanding films of the past year. Prices have been reduced to 25 cents to five o'clock; 40 cents from five to closing; 50 cents for all Saturday, Sunday and holiday performances.

Depinet Back in New York

Ned E. Depinet, vice president and general sales manager of RKO Pathe, has returned to the home office after a business trip to Canada, during which he conferred with Henry Nathanson of Regal Films and Tom Brady, Canadian representative.

"Viking" at Central Park

"The Viking," set in Newfoundland and produced by Varick Frissell, will follow "Tabu" into the New York Central Park theatre on June 16. George Melford directed.

Buys Two Indiana Houses

Wank Theatre Corporation has purchased the Grand and Colonial theatres in Peru, Indiana. Deal was arranged through Albert Goldman of Chicago.

Pass "Hell Bound"

The Chicago censor has issued a permit for Tiffany's "Hell Bound," after four weeks of deliberation. Still not passed are "Public Enemy," Warner, and Fox's "Quick Millions."

Outing for Pep Club

The Paramount Pep Club, home office employee organization, held its annual outing Saturday, June 13, at Asbury Park, N. J.

STARS in SHORT SUBJECTS

The crowning glory of

1931 M·G·M 1932

STARS that are known!

STARS that you can advertise!

STARS that belong in electric lights!

That is the keynote of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's 1931-32 short feature program.

Every time you book pictures without star values, you are betraying your sense of showmanship! Stars in shorts, as well as features, mean extra profits. And now Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has made it possible for you to fill your every short feature requirement with the biggest names in the finest product in the short feature field.

Names like Laurel and Hardy, Our Gang, James P. FitzPatrick, Sir Harry Lauder, and all the rest—they're names that mean business. Five great comedy series from Hal Roach—his name on a comedy is like "sterling" on silver—it means box office. Three amazing short feature series from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios where the industry's great features are made—Dogville Comedies, Fisherman's Paradise and Sport Champions.

And in the news department "The Globe Trotter" of Hearst Metrotone News is the sensation of the newsreel field. Every short feature series built around stars and personalities that the public of the entire nation, not just their own home town, knows and will pay to see.

Forget the unknowns! Pick your shorts from the greatest stars of short features in

IT'S GLORIOUS DAY FOR ONE WHO WON "FILM DAILY" GOLF TOURNEY

"BIRDIES"

Jerry Beatty found that the putter was as mighty as the pen, when his score-card showed a surprising (sez he) low for the morning 9.

Arthur Abeles was tripped up by old man Fate about halfway through the early play, and his score started mounting toward the century, which is familiar to him, in a theatre-way but not in his usual game of the links. He is general manager of the Century Circuit.

Morton Van Praag of National Screen Service, styling himself "World's Worst Golf Player" didn't even grace the morning list.

Isador Schwartz, vice president, commiserated with him. The putting contest brought out a lot of oh's and ah's, but chiefly oh's, or was it ah's?

P. L. Thomson, of Western Electric four, shot par at luncheon in preparation of the fifth play of the afternoon.

The ground, from the clubhouse to the first tee, was strewn with the corpses of weathermen—in effigy or something.

But 50,000 weather prophets can't be wrong and it cleared up considerably at noon—if a cessation of rain can be called that.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, could not be bothered by rain drops, and went right through the morning round without a halt (except to jump over puddles).

Speaking about weather—and there was occasional mention of it in the forenoon—several "noahed" over the waterway, with umbrellas for arks.

The Fenimore Club is a beautiful spot, rain or shine.

More Than 120 Members Of Industry There

Banquet at Fenimore Country Club Is Joyous Climax to Annual Affair

(MOTION PICTURE HERALD pictures of tournament will be published next week.)

Representatives of the film industry in the East joined in making the 19th Film Daily golf tournament, Thursday, June 11, one of the most successful of the series. The dinner funfest was voted the most enjoyable in seven years of the event. More than 100 braved a steady rain that drenched the golfers through the morning play of the tourney, which was held at the Fenimore Club at White Plains, N. Y.

Other tournaments may have had a larger attendance, but the fact that the number of players reached a total of 120 before the day was over, with many more at the dinner, was a credit to those who participated and to those who were in charge of the affair, headed by Jack Alicoate and Bruce Gallup, who has been overseer of the handicap and awards throughout the nine years of the tournaments. Those on the committee were Al Lichtman, master of Jack Alicoate and Bruce Gallup, who has been ("Red") Kann and Don Mersereau.

Following is a list of the prize winners:

Legislators to Address Wisconsin's Exhibitors

Leading legislators of Wisconsin are to address the MPTO of the state at the two-day convention opening June 16 at the Hotel Pfister in Milwaukee. Fred S. Meyer, president, promises the exhibitors a convention for business only, with the building code and billboard advertising among topics for discussion.

Speakers Tuesday include Don V. Smith, chairman of the committee on public welfare; Senators Thomas M. Duncan, Bernard Gettelman and Oscar H. Morris and Assemblyman John Grobschmidt, victor in a six-year fight to obtain a referendum on the blue law. Frank B. Metcalfe, chairman of the Milwaukee censors, speaks on gangster pictures at the banquet Tuesday. Others are Mrs. Agnes Charbonneau, the state's one-woman legislator, and "Count" Enrico Russo, entertainer. A Fanchon & Marco unit will appear, also acts from RKO's Riverside theatre and radio talent.

Hays Man Working to End French Film Restrictions

Harold Smith, in Paris representing the Hays organization, is working toward the elimination of all film import duties and restrictions. The purpose of conferences now under way is to draft a new accord to succeed that expiring next October.

American distributors have been forced to handle a large number of French films in order to get into the French market. Changed conditions and language limitations are noted by Smith as indicative of the inability of the French market to supply sufficient pictures to meet its quota.

General Film Company Will Handle Kingsley Apparatus

The General Film Company has opened offices in Memphis, Tenn., to handle distribution of Kingsley sound reproducing and recording equipment in Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama.

According to Chester F. Kingsley, president and general manager, the apparatus will sell for under $2,000 installed, both film and disc. Kingsley has been previously identified with the engineering department of General Talking Pictures and RCA.

SMPE Plans Discussions to Improve Theatre Buildings

The Society of M. P. Engineers has started a co-operative drive for improved theatres with particular emphasis to be placed on construction and location of projection booths, and acoustical problems.

J. I. Crabtree, president, will name a committee to discuss the situation with the American Institute of Architects and the Architectural League, to obtain better co-operation.

Quammen Promoted

D. J. Quammen has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia district office of Cutler-Hammer, manufacturers of electric motor control and allied apparatus — whose headquarters are at Milwaukee. Quammen succeeds F. J. Burd, who has been made assistant manager of the Chicago Office in charge of industrial sales in Chicago, and of the C-H (Harland) paper machine drive, throughout the country.

Quammen has been connected with Philadelphia office for past five years as sales engineer. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, Class of '24.

Little Improvement Seen In Televisors at Exhibit

Little improvement in commercial-type televisors over the same equipment of half a year ago was evidenced in the demonstrations at the annual exhibit of the Radio Manufacturers' Association in Chicago this week at the Stevens hotel.

The two exhibits of commercial televisors were by Jenkins-DeForest Company and the Short Wave and Television Corporation. As the equipment of each is built on the 60-line scanning standard and the Chicago stations use the 45-line, the Short Wave and Television concern had to take improvised broadcasting apparatus from its Boston offices. The image, on a 6 x 10 inch screen, was of only the head and shoulders of the performers, though the equipment is said to be able to reproduce two figures at the same time. Faces were hazy but figure outlines wers uniformly clear. Demonstrations made with laboratory, not commercial, equipment brought out reproductions on screens 10 feet square and 7 x 9 inches.

Independent Office For Ohio Censor Is Defeated

Efforts to create an independent office of chief censor for Ohio at $3,600 a year, because of the protests against the decisions of John L. Clifton, head of the department of education and of censorship, have been defeated and the state finance committee has slashed $5,000 from the $58,000 censorship appropriation.

Lou Kutinsky, New York branch salesman for Radio, has been transferred to the home office as special representative. Bernard G. Kranze, comes from Paramount to Radio to replace Kutinsky.

Grand Jury Action Near In Chicago Union Inquiry

The investigation of Chicago's projectionists' union, being conducted by assistant State's Attorney Charles E. Lounsbury, has resulted in the possibility of Joe Maloy, head of projectionists' examiners of the city electrical department, and brother of Tom Maloy, business agent of the union, facing the grand jury for an accounting and suspension.

The records, according to Lounsbury, indicate connivance between department officials and applicants for projectionists' licenses. The law requires one year of apprenticeship in the same theatre, before being eligible for examination. Records show, it is said, that the department examined men unable to spell and licensed them prior to their year's apprenticeship.

Sol Letzler Treasurer Of Visugraphic Pictures

Sol Letzler is the new treasurer of Visugraphic Pictures, Inc. The new executive has been treasurer of Prudential Oil Company for 14 years and associated with Standard Oil Company in the United States and Europe. Other officers of Visugraphic are Edward Ford Stevenson, president; Frederic F. Stevenson, vice-president, and Nicholas R. Hardy, secretary and assistant treasurer.

The dropping of sponsored films by several leading producer-exhibitor companies has served to emphasize the standards of distribution used by producers of commercial pictures, President Stevenson told the meeting Wednesday.

Eastman Puts New Splice Process on the Market

Eastman has developed its new sound track patching and splicing process for general use. A material consisting of a very thin clear film base, coated with emulsion and exposed to produce opacity is used.

The patches are five perforations long and are cut in a shape designed to cover the track completely for a distance equal to the width of a standard splice, but tapering toward each extremity until the sound track is completely exposed.

Columbia Has Four in Work; Eight Are in Preparation

Four major productions are under way at the Columbia Coast studios, including "Arizona," "Fifty Fathoms Deep," "Pagan Lady" and "Ex-Ranger." Eight are in course of preparation.

Short subjects in production are No. 8 of "Screen Snapshots," "The Delivery Boy," Mickey Mouse number; "The Busy Beavers," Silly Symphony; No. 222 of "Curiosities," "Soda Poppa," of the "Krazy Kat" series and a new Eddie Buzzell, "Bed Time Stories for Grown-ups."

sale on the American market to U. S. distributors. In the first group of four, already in New York, are "White Devil," with Ivan Mosjoukine; "Last Company," Conrad Veidt; "Immortal Vagabond," starring Lucien Haid and Gusta Froehlich; and "Love Waltz," co-featuring Lillian Harvey and Joan Batton.

In the second group of English versions will be three Erich Pommer productions: "Monte Carlo," a musical comedy; "Congress Dances," an operetta, and an untitled Emil Jannings picture. The fourth will be "Ronny," another operetta.

Ufa, it is understood, will give as much thought next season to the American market as it will to invasion of France, where serious inroads already have been made. In fact, English companies who have been close to the French situation have become alarmed over Ufa's rapidly developing hold on the Parisian market.

Ufa executives in Germany cannot understand what prompts American companies to take so seriously multi-linguals in any versions other than French and German. Ufa will not make any Spanish talkers, believing them to be economically unsound. There is a demand for Spanish films, but they feel that it is not of sufficient strength to offer paying returns.

Ufa now has 150 theatres, mostly key first-runs, scattered through Germany and the Continent.

Gives School a Theatre

Harry M. Warner and Mrs. Warner have given $250,000 to Worcester Academy, Worcester, Mass., for the erection of an auditorium to be known as the Lewis J. Warner Memorial Auditorium, in honor of their son, a 1928 graduate who died last April.

Tobis in Action in U. S.

Tobis Company of America, which has just obtained a charter at Albany, N. Y., will handle all patent and commercial questions arising from the Paris agreement reached last year on sound patents.

Milestone on Coast

Lewis Milestone, Howard Hughes director, has arrived in Hollywood, with Nate Watt, as assistant. Milestone will handle two more for Hughes.

"77 Park Lane" In Canada

Arrangements have been made, it is understood, for United Artists to distribute the talking version of "77 Park Lane" in Canada, Australia and the English colonies.

George Cukor on Coast

without lowering basic wage scales. And very well, too, can state legislatures and the congress aid business further by declaring a moratorium on all legislation which would add undue specific or general additional burdens on business. Of all times in this generation, this is the one for more business in government and less government in business.

The templates for prosperity are right behind us—the patterns for the recovery of business and the resumption of employment are on file in the history of the United States and in the biographies of shrewd, bold enthusiasts who brought us to the peaks of '29. There's nothing the matter with America except stupidity, timidity and "some yellow streak," but as Roy Howard said to the American Club in Paris last week: "We do not propose to add it to our national emblem." Fear has seized the wheel of progress and jammed the brakes. We're not running to schedule because the old spirit isn't pressing on the throttle and keeping the gas tank filled with get-up-and-go. Let's lower the banner of Fear and raise the banner of Faith.

If Patrick Henry is right—if there's no way to judge the future except by the past—all that we need is to shut up the croakers, start up the band and keep up our dander.

Sylvia Sidney, who won a prominent part in "City Streets" when Clara Bow was taken ill, and then was given the feminine lead in "An American Tragedy," has another big assignment supplanting Nancy Carroll in "Street Scene" for Sam Goldwyn.

Philadelphia Boyd Closes

Stanley-Warner is closing the Boyd theatre at Philadelphia, second only to the Mastbaum in the circuit, on Saturday, for an indefinite period. Other Stanley-Warner houses within a radius of two blocks have given the Boyd serious competition.

Independents Get Cut

Projectionists' local No. 306 of New York is giving independent owners the same consideration as accorded circuits in cutting projectionists' salaries during the summer. The cut is 5 to 7½ per cent for 10 weeks.

official blessings to the president of the Board of Trade? The report is also, according to earlier intentions, to form the basis of the case upon which the Trades Union Congress will build in serious conferences which are due to be held between the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries and the Unions. There evidently has to be explaining one side or the other!

Mansfield Markham, son of a British millionaire coal and iron master, who recently backed Reginald Fogwell Productions, Ltd., responsible for the production of the none too impressive "Madame Guillotine," is to stay in Paris indefinitely. His resignation from the Fogwell concern is believed to be imminent, and already Mr. Markham is backing Rex Ingram in the production of a new story of the French Foreign Legion, exteriors for which are to be shot in Africa.

Markham is known to have got cold feet as a result of the lack of success attained by the initial Fogwell picture, and his losses in the whole venture are said to amount to upwards of $500,000. Several stories were acquired, and treatments worked out, but that is where they still stand.

A staff of scenarists also was recruited, but their work has not yet justified the period of their service, which in several cases has been terminated.

Shakeup in Warner

Gus Schlesinger, foreign sales manager for the past five years or so for Warner and more recently for Warner-First National, is reported out of the concern. Leila Stewart, one of the slickest publicity chiefs this side, also is reported leaving Warners, because, when the two units Warner and First National come closer together within the next few weeks, Frederick J. Allen, for some time publicity chief for First National, takes over the combined jobs.

David E. Griffiths, general sales manager of First National, is in the running for the managing directorship of this concern, and as a newly created director of Warners will take active part in the control of both units. F. H. Bandy, appointed managing director of Warner when Arthur Clavering stepped out three weeks back, probably is returning to the U. S. A. to take up a new job there. It is said that Warners will send over some one from America to succeed him.

Clara Bow Denies "No More Films," Schulberg Statement

In connection with Coast reports that Paramount had broken Clara Bow's contract following several requests from the actress, Florabel Muir, Coast news writer, reports Clara as having said: "I'm positively not through with pictures, not by a long shot. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has made me an offer, and I think Schulberg has a lot of nerve to say that I want to quit."

The contract called for two more films. Hollywood reports indicate the star's Paramount salary had been between $2,000 and $3,000 per week. She had made eight films.

The Squaw Man

(M-G-M)

Melodrama

The production of "The Squaw Man" by Cecil B. DeMille, in its talking version for MGM, here reviewed, marks an interesting cycle of the motion picture art. One day in 1913 Jesse Lasky, Arthur Friend, Samuel Goldwyn and Mr. DeMille went in a diffident delegation to Edwin Milton Royle, the author of the then famous play, to see the papers signed on the motion picture rights. They had staked a then tremendous five thousand dollars on that story, a thousand in cash and a thousand now-and-then, if when and as. They decoyed Dustin Farnum into an agreement to play the title role, offering a quarter interest in the project. Mr. Farnum decided on $5,000 in real money.

Westward went Mr. DeMille and Mr Farnum, bound for Flagstaff, Arizona, chosen as their location. They got off the train, looked at Flagstaff and fled westward to Hollywood where they rented a barn for a studio. The barnyard became the famous "Lasky Lot." And from "The Squaw Man" grew the great production machine that is now the West Coast Paramount plant. The first version of "The Squaw Man" had frame line and sprocket hole trouble, and the humorously jovial Sigmund Lubin of Philadelphia and the General Film Company saved the young company by making the prints.

Cecil B. DeMille, who directed the silent version of "The Squaw Man," is again the director of this familiar story as it appears in the all-talking form, with the action in places giving way to dialogue. The picture was seen in preview at the Alexander theatre in Glendale.

The preview audience showed that it considered the production entertaining.

The story starts in England and gathers momentum after it shifts to America. Warner Baxter as a young English officer is in love with Eleanor Boardman, wife of Paul Cavanaugh. Baxter hides his love and decides to go to America to be out of the way. Before sailing, however, he learns that Cavanaugh has misappropriated some charity funds. Baxter assumes the guilt.

On a ranch in the wild and wooly West, Baxter makes his home, and he spends his time protecting his rights against Cash Hawkins (Charles Bickford) and his associates. It is in a battle with Bickford that Baxter comes to the aid of an Indian girl (Lupe Valez), and she in turn saves Baxter's life by shooting Hawkins when he goes to kill Baxter.

Miss Valez, now a fugitive from justice, seeks shelter at Baxter's ranch. After a lapse of several years, in which Cavanaugh has been mortally injured in a fall from a horse we find Miss Valez married to Baxter, and he has the name of "Squaw Man.'

Miss Boardman and her brother Roland Young, come to the Baxter ranch and find Baxter is the father of a young boy (Dickie Moore).

The sheriff discovers that Miss Valez is the one who killed Hawkins, and comes to take her to jail. She escapes to the mountains. Baxter plans to send Dickie back to England to be educated by Miss Boardman and her brother. Miss Valez returns and when she learns that she cannot break up the plans for Dickie she kills herself.

Miss Valez as the Indian maid is shown maintaining the same broken English through her years as the wife of Baxter.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. From the play written by Edwin Milton Royle. Screen play by Lucien Hubbard and Lenore Coffee. Dialogue by Elsie Janis. Directed by Cecil B. DeMille. Photography by Harold Rosson. Film editor, Anne Bauchens.

This Modern Age

(M-G-M)

Comedy-Drama

A cast of wellknown leads has turned out MGM's "This Modern Age" under the direction of Nicholas Grinde. Joan Crawford plays the difficult role of the playgirl who has Paris for her playground, and Marjorie Rambeau is her mother. The two like their good times and are "Girls Together," which was the title of the Mildred Cram story upon which the picture is based.

Monroe Owsley, irresponsible young American, is infatuated with Miss Crawford, but she, after an auto accident in Owsley's car, meets Neil Hamilton and falls madly in love with him. She meets Hamilton's sedate and conventional parents (Hobart Bosworth and Emma Dunn) and they take to her, as she has given up her fast life and friends.

With the marriage plans set, his parents are invited to her home and meet her mother. All is well until Owsley and the old crowd comes on the scene and proceeds to make merry. The mother's sweetheart (Armand Kaliz) also appears. The result is that Joan and Neil break their engagement because of the mother's friends. Joan decides to return to the old life and tells him that she will join him in the trip to Normandy that he so long has desired. They make the trip but Owsley becomes conscience stricken when he sees that Joan is giving herself to him without loving him. He refuses to stay. Then she realizes his sincerity and her own love for him. As her mother arrives on the scene to break up the wild adventure she finds them being married.

Three Who Loved

(RKO Radio)

Problem Drama

Audience reaction at the preview of this problem drama of "Three Who Loved" was moderately favorable. They appeared to consider the performances of the three principals —Betty Compson, Conrad Nagel and Robert Ames—as acceptable. The photography was criticized.

The story, originally titled "Helga," tells of the love of a young bank teller (Conrad Nagel) for his girl from the old country (Betty Compson). Nagel scrapes and saves to send her passage money and after her arrival he concentrates all his resources on building the home that is to be hers after their marriage in the new country.

That she may not be lonseome while he is devoting his time to his business, he encourages her friendship with his best friend (Robert Ames), fellow teller in the bank. Betty grows to care for Ames and he, not adverse to a clandestine affair, accepts the love of the girl.

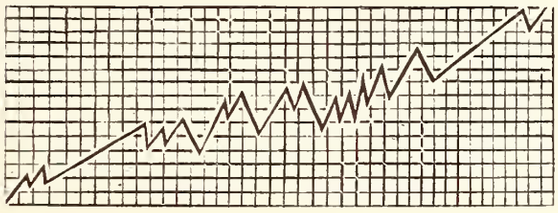
Nagel has been playing the stock market and on the day that he makes his first payment to the building contractors his brokers call for additional margin. To cover, Nagel "borrows" $10,000 from the till. The same evening he discovers Bettv's love for Ames and is told she intends to marry his friend. But Ames is of a different mind. A casual affair he regards as amusing, but marriage is something else, so he departs, bag and baggage.

The shortage is discovered at the bank and Ames is suspected. Nagel permits things to take their course and Ames is sentenced to prison.

Several years pass, with Nagel sensationally successful financially. Betty has been a good wife but secretly she still loves Ames. And Nagel's crime weighs upon his mind continuously.

Ames escapes, makes his way to their home and demands protection from Betty, at the same time admitting that he never loved her. Nagel, learning of the escape, decides to confess, calls the police, and surrenders. Ames attempts a getaway and is shot, but Nagel is still determined to face the consequences of his theft. As he is arrested, Betty assures him of all her love and pledges him that she will await his release from the penitentiary.

Important assignments in the cast are handled by Robert Emmett O'Connor, again cast as a detective, and by Dickie Moore, youngster who scored in "Seed" and "Passion Flower."



George Archainbaud directed the picture, which ran 78 minutes in preview.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. Associate producer, Bertram Millhauser. Adaptation and continuity by Buelah Marie Dix from the story by Martin Flavin. Dialogue by Buelah Marie Dix. WHY IS PARAMOUNT DOING A RECORD BUSINESS IN SHORTS?

1. Because PARAMOUNT kept from the start a policy of putting the same high class stars, showmanship and relative money into producing shorts as into the best quality of features.

2. Because PARAMOUNT made a nation-wide survey of theatres and the public to find out what kind and what number of shorts are needed. And based its production plans on the results.

3. Because PARAMOUNT, with studios in New York and Hollywood, alone gets the cream of screen and stage talent for shorts. The result is big star names and wide variety in our shorts that no other company can touch.

4. Because PARAMOUNT SOUND NEWS not only scoops all its rivals consistently on big free-for-all stories but continually presents sensational exclusive features. And gives you an up-to-date, 100% showmanship reel twice a week.

Alexander Hamilton

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy-Drama

Reports gained considerable circulation during the filming of "Alexander Hamilton" that both Republican and Democratic parties were closely scrutinizing the development of certain historical characters in the script. It was said that the activities of Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson in their political rivalry caused a qualm or two for modern-day party leaders, and that telegrams flew back and forth between political headquarters and Hollywood, each requesting that the producers do right by their historical gentlemen.

Finally, to avoid controversy, an entirely fictitious character called "Senator Roberts" was invented. No such politician is known to history, and upon his shoulders fall the villainies of the picture. It is he who "framed" Hamilton much in the way we are told political leaders are framed today.

George Arliss makes a character study of the statesman of post-revolutionary days that blends the human and humorous qualities with the more serious side of his nature.

The story is told with simplicity and might well be a story of a political intrigue of today were the characters differently costumed.

For example, following the prologue in which George Washington says goodbye to his troops, a group of malcontents are pictured at a tavern. Over their drinks they disconsolately discuss "hard times" and "after-the-war depression." The incongruity of bewigged men in knee breeches talking in terms one hears daily aroused some of the audience to laughter.

Hamilton calls a meeting of Jefferson, Munroe and the fictional "Senator Roberts" to introduce his plan of stabilizing the finances of the new government. As secretary of the treasury he is sponsoring a bill calculated to relieve conditions, but he finds himself politically opposed. Senator Roberts is willing to dicker, though not on terms Hamilton can honorably accept. Hamilton is blunt in calling Roberts a scoundrel and the "Senator" swears vengeance.

He obtains his revenge by chicanery. Conniving with a dissolute scamp, he "frames" Hamilton into an affair with a lady while Mrs. Hamilton is visiting a sister in England. Scandal impends and Hamilton is forced to pay blackmail.

Meanwhile, however, he has learned to play politics. He proposes a trade with Jefferson and Munroe wherein he will use his influence to establish the nation's Capitol on a spot "near the Potomac" in return for support of his treasury bill.

The blackmail scheme nearly ruins his plans at the last moment. Roberts misrepresents Hamilton's reasons for paying hush money and Jefferson and Munroe seem about to withdraw their support. But backed by his courageous wife, Hamilton sacrifices himself and his political career that the country may profit. Upon this note, the picture ends.

Doris Kenyon plays the role of the charming and beautiful Mrs. Hamilton. June Collyer is in the role of a siren, an unusual part for her. It is said that Arliss personally urged the casting of Miss Collyer as his conception of Hamilton could not reconcile the idea that an obvious seductress would even vaguely interest the man.

Comment was heard on the make up achievement in the case of Arliss as well as the George Washington of Alan Mowbrey. Arliss looks like a man in his early thirties.

The preview audience received "Alexander Hamilton" with unmistakable signs of delight. They laughed at Arliss' witicisms, broad or subtle. They sorrowed with him in his setbacks, exulted at his triumphs and applauded his patriotic utterances.

Running time, 71 minutes in preview.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Based on the play by George Arliss and Mary Hamlin. Adaptation and dialogue by Julian Josephson and Maude Howell. Directed by John Adolphi. Photographed by James Van Trees. Film editor, Owen Marks.

The Man in Possession

(M-G-M)

Risque Farce

"The Man in Possession," previewed at the Criterion in Santa Monica, Cal., received a good reception from an audience that apparently found the performance by Robert Montgomery to its liking.

Spicy dialogue is accompanied by swift tempo under the direction of Sam Wood.

The locale is London, where Montgomery returns to his family after serving a term in prison for selling property which did not belong to him. His father and brother (C. Aubrey Smith and Reginald Owen) try to persuade him to go to a foreign land, but Montgomery prefers to stay in England and gets a job as a sheriff's man. His first duties make him "man in possession" at the home of Irene Purcell, poor but beautiful, whom Owen loves. Owen does not know of Montgomery's duties. When Montgomery's family comes to dine, Miss Purcell drafts him to enact the butler role. His family does not acknowledge his identity, nor does he. This provides a situation for comedy, including slapstick.

Montgomery has found himself in love with Miss Purcell and declares himself after his family has departed. She reciprocates to a degree. Alan Mowbray, a former suitor, phones and Montgomery tells him that she is out. In the morning Owen comes to the house and Montgomery advises him that Miss Purcell is not wealthy. This is after Owen has paid Montgomery a thousand pounds to leave the country. Then Montgomery informs Miss Purcell of his identity, and the two leave England with the money Owen has given him.

All the principals except Montgomery speak with a very pronounced English accent. Why not Montgomery also? members of the audience asked.

Maude Eburne and Forrester Harvey add comedy touches to the picture.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Screen adaptation by Sarah Y. Mason. Additional dialogue by Sarah Y. Mason and P. G. Wodehouse. Recording director, Douglas Shearer. Sweepstakes

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy-Drama

Eddie Quillan, James Gleason and Marion Nixon top the cast in RKO Pathe's "Sweepstakes," previewed at the Belmont theatre in Hollywood. Comment was that "The Whoop-De-Doo Kid," the title under which the picture was made, was more suitable than "Sweepstakes."

Quillan is the ranking jockey, Gleason plays the role of a veteran racehorse trainer, and Miss Nixon a night club singer.

The jockey, who has a habit of winning races with Six Shooter, is known far and wide for his singing of a "whoop-de-doo" refrain into the ear of his mount.

The night club singer is attracted to him, and the jockey, brought up under rigid rules that barred girl affairs, finds he loves her.

By a frameup, Quillan is brought unwillingly under the colors of Miss Nixon's employer, who owns a string of horses. Quillan discovers the trick but is forced to ride the night club owner's horse in the big Handicap against his favorite, Six Shooter. Quillan deliberately yells "whoop-de-doo" down the home stretch and Six Shooter wins. He is suspended, and blames Miss Nixon, thinking she has conspired with her employer.

Quillan becomes a drifter and is prohibited from riding at even the lowest type of tracks. Then he becomes a singing waiter in a Tijuana saloon. Here he is found by Gleason, who, with three bartenders—an Irishman, an Italian, and a Chinese—buys Six Shooter.

Quillan's suspension is lifted but he refuses to ride again. Suddenly the girl appears on the scene. He discovers she really loved him and she takes the blame for his loss of prestige.

The big money race of the season finds Quillan again astride Six Shooter who, with "whoop-de-doo" ringing in his ear, runs away from the other mounts. The final scene shows Quillan and Miss Nixon teaching a curly-haired youngster how to yell "whoop-de-doo" into the ear of a hobby horse.

Lew Cody portrays the night club operator, and Paul Hurst supplies comedy as the Irish bartender.

Produced and distributed by RKO-Pathe. Story and adaptation by Lew Dipton. Dialogue by Ralph Murphy. Directed by Al Rogell. Photography by Edward Snyder. Sound engineer, C. O'Laughlin. Film editor, Joe Kane.

Chance of a Night-Time

(British and Dominions—Gaumont)

Ralph Lynn Again

[Comment by W. H. Mooring, London]

Take pieces of "Rookery Nook," season with a little "Plunder," turn inside out, mix well together and leave it to brew, then you have "The Chance of a Night-Time."

Ralph Lynn was never funnier: he always is funny, and the public expects him to keep it up. But with slight story material of this kind, it is doubtful whether he can hold public favor indefinitely. It will be a pity if Britain waits till he is a fallen idol before giving him just a slightly different story.

Here Lynn is a dude lawyer who, while on a professional visit to a country client, gets himself stranded at a wayside railway station. There he meets, falls in love with, and parts from a perky young lady. Later he finds himself at a large country house near by, where he has been erroneously accepted as the male part of a dancing act. He finds that his "station girls" is the femme part, so he decides to go through with the turn. And how!

The real dancer fellow turns up: bogus Bill is exposed and the chase begins. Upstairs, downstairs all over the place time and time again, until our terpsichorean lawyer and his newly found dancing girl make their getaway in the inevitable car. Not even an airplane which would at least have given us a flash of novelty. Laughs are plentiful. As farce goes, it is well produced, and audiences at the Paramount Plaza, London, where the picture has had a successful run, have enjoyed it.

Settings are mainly in the studio, and, apart from Winifried Shotter as the dance girl, supporting players are not great. It is a good comedy offering, but cannot stand up to feature rank in the best theatres. With a good dramatic subject co-featuring, or as second, it will be safe anywhere. Certainly Paramount has paid the picture a significant compliment by putting it into the Plaza bill even apart from the fact that the Plaza must take its quota of British films.

Produced by British and Dominions Film Corp. Distributed by Gaumont-W. & F. Film Service. Directed by Herbert Wilcox and Ralpb Lynn.

The Two-Gun Man

(Tiffany)

Western

Ken Maynard is a rough-riding, straight-shooting and fighting cowboy in this Western. As in others of this star's pictures, his horse, Tarzan, plays an important part.

Ken and his pal, Lafe McKee, come to the range to help the small cattlemen in a fight with a powerful syndicate. They hire out as two-gun men to protect the ranch from the depredations of the syndicate's desperadoes. When the ranch foreman is murdered after surprising the crooked foreman bent on sabotage, suspicion fastens on Ken. He makes his getaway and robs the syndicate office to get evidence that the crooked foreman and murderer is on the company payroll. Maynard is revealed as a United States marshal.

The picture is highlighted by a fistfight in the saloon between Maynard and Tom London, several horseback chases and much shooting. Comedy is supplied by Lafe McKee.

Running time, 63 minutes. Release date, May 15, 1931.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany. From the story by John F. Natteford. Adaptation by Earle Snell. Directed by Phil Rosen. Photography by Arthur Reed.

Rebound

(Pathe)

Comedy-Drama

It is inevitable that "Rebound" will draw comparisons to the sensationally successful "Holiday." The two stories have much in common; in fact, "Rebound" might be called a sequel in the general theme of marital problems. Much the same kind of characters move through both pictures.

"Rebound" gets off to a flying start as a high comedy. The many characters are introduced as they come down to breakfast on the last morning of a house party. We meet in turn Ina Claire, her sister, Hedda Hopper, sister's husband, Leigh Allen, a millionaire business man, Hale Hamilton, a not-so-wealthy young chap, Robert Ames, who is engaged to Myrna Loy, and a struggling architect, Robert Williams.

Ina is secretly in love with Williams, who is leaving for Paris. She sees him off and he sails without making the declaration of love she hopes to hear. Meeting Ames for lunch, Ina learns Myrna Loy has broken her engagement to marry the millionaire Hamilton. Ina and Ames console one another and, both being on the "rebound" from other loves, they marry.

They are in Paris on the occasion of the aninversary of their first month of marriage. Ina is very much in love with her husband and plans a little celebration. But Ames get drunk with Myrna Lov, whom he chances to meet, and is several hours late in returning. It is the beginning of a series of such neglects.

Ina sincerely attempts to laugh herself out of caring but finds even the sympathy and attentions of Williams are not consolation enough for the loss of Ames' love. In a highly dramatic scene she tells Ames just what their marriage has done to her and of her resolution to divorce him that she may regain her self respect. A reconciliation is achieved only after she has filed divorce action. This happy ending comes as somewhat of an anti-climax.

The preview audience seemed thoroughly to enjoy the gay comedy of the opening sequences but was a bit restless during the latter dramatic moments, comment being that the closing scenes seemed overlong.

"Rebound" is something in the nature of a triumph for Ina Claire. It will be remembered she played the piece on the local stage somewhat as a gesture (Shanghai, of course) to the motion picture industry after her comparative failure in her first talking film venture. Her appearance on the Hollywood stage led to a number of things. Pathe bought "Rebound" for Ann Harding, Ina Claire was signed by Paramount for "The Royal Family" and finally, when Miss Harding refused the "Rebound" lead, Claire returned to Pathe to play Sara. It was to be expected that she would enact the role as though she enjoyed it. She does.

Robert Ames contributes a straight-forward portrayal. Robert Williams' lighter comedy reading brought more favorable audience response than his other work. There is a memorable moment with Louise Closser Hale as the mother and there are some others with Walter Walker as the father. The rest of the cast have little more than bit assignments.

The original dialogue done in the usual manner of Donald Ogden Stewart has been adapted by Horace Jackson.

The direction of Edward H. Griffith was considered on a par with his handling of "Holiday."

Produced and distributed by RKO-Pathe. From the play by Donald Ogden Stewart. Screen play by Horace Jackson. Directed by Edward H. Griffith. Photographed by Norbert Brodine. Edited by Dan Mandell. Length, 6,750 feet. Running time (preview), 75 minutes.

Hush Money

(Fox)

Melodrama

A surprise ending has been added to a formula plot (the past-will-get-you-if-you-don't-watch-out formula) and the finished product titled "Hush Money." A few members of the preview audience left in the early reels, but not one during the later sequences.

Joan Bennett is pictured as a young girl who, to avoid starvation, takes the easiest way. She is living with Owen Moore and with him working a genteel hold up racket when the whole gang runs afoul the law. To save himself, Moore turns state's evidence.

On her release, Joan, with the help of a kindly cop, goes straight. She meets and is married to a young scion of wealth, Hardie Albright, without telling him of her past. Then there is a baby.

Into this happy home comes Owen Moore, bent on collecting "hush money." He calmly walks out with Joan's jewels, including a necklace which she must wear that night in honor of her wedding anniversary.

Joan appeals to her detective friend and he promises return of the jewels by six o'clock. To this end, he pits the old leader of the gang, who has just been released from prison, against Moore. This is achieved in a barber shop where the gang leader is having a scalp treatment for his thinning hair. He always has had that one vanity.

The tip-off completed, the detective wanders in on the coroner and engages him in a game of checkers while awaiting news of the inevitable killing. The jewels are returned to Joan by the copper posing as a newspaper subscription solicitor.

Joan Bennett completely unbends from the hauteur which sometimes characterizes her work. Her love scenes with Hardie Albright are highlighted by a tickling episode for which Sidney Lanfield, the director, shared in the applause.

Owen Moore is his suave self as the crook and Douglas Cosgrove contributes a quiet portrayal of the detective. C. Henry Gordon is the gang leader and Myrna Loy has a small assignment.

Running time, 72 minutes in preview in California. Release date, July 5.

Five and Ten

(M-G-M)

Drama

Marion Davies, heretofore associated primarily with stories of a distinctly comedy nature, has a more dramatic role in "Five and Ten," adapted from the Fannie Hurst novel of the same name. The picture met with a receptive audience at the Belmont theatre in Hollywood, where it was previewed.

Leslie Howard and Kent Douglass shared honors with Miss Davies, Douglass particularly winning approval.

The story follows the book rather closely. It concerns the family of a multimillionaire five and ten cent store magnate, played by Richard Bennett. The family, hailing from Kansas City, tries to break into New York's Four Hundred via the money route, and with little success.

Miss Davies falls in love with Howard, a blueblood. She arranges that his architectural talent be applied to planning the new skyscraper for her father. This permits her to be near him, but her efforts to win are at first unsuccessful.

The mother, (played by Irene Rich) also finds that breaking into society is difficult, though she does receive the attentions of a fortune hunter, Theodore von Eltz, when her husband is too busy to go places with her.

Miss Davies wins Howard's love but it's only for a short time, because Mary Duncan, Howard's former sweetheart, tells him that Miss Davies has bought his attentions with her money. Howard marries Miss Duncan though he still loves Miss Davies.

At the dedication of the skyscraper Miss Davies and Howard find themselves accidentally locked on the roof. All is quite proper but Howard's wife threatens a scandal suit unless she is given a large sum of money by Bennett. He is ready to pay, but Miss Davis stops the deal, saying she will take the disgrace rather than have her father pay blackmail.

The mother has planned to elope with von Eltz, and Douglass, the son, despondent at the way his family has broken up, takes his plane aloft and intentionally crashes it. His act brings the family together at his deathbed. They go to Europe to forget their sorrows, but not before Howard at the dock has told Miss Davies that he is divorced and will be waiting for her.

The audience did not seem to take kindly to the sad ending in Douglass's death, several commenting that it was not necessary.

Robert Z. Leonard injected comedy touches in his direction.

Novelty

An Italian composer is suing another for plagiarizing a melody, in this short set in a courtroom. As expert witness, Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, noted New York composer, who is billed as star, seats himself at the piano and proves that the melody in question has been used for many years as characteristic of most diversified types of melody.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Clean Up to the Curb
(Radio)
Comedy

Roscoe Ates, comedian, carries the lead in this number, playing the part of the janitor who climbs to the roof to commit suicide, and instead becomes sadly mixed in a complication between a bootlegger and his feminine friend, in a penthouse apartment. A truck load of chickens on the street below, becomes the resting place for two of the bootlegger's henchmen, and finally for Roscoe himself.—Running time, 20 minutes.

"From the Depot to the Barn"

Following closely on the heels of a tremendous exploitation ballyhoo and outdoor ad campaign on "Trader Horn," which, it is understood, saved that picture from a threatening "red" play on key city road show engagements, MGM has launched a more elaborate billing drive on the new Norma Shearer picture, "A Free Soul."

140-Sheet Used by MGM

Immediately after the talker opened its initial engagement at the Astor theatre in New York City, MGM sent out Phil DiAngelis to paper the town and suburban localities with 140-sheets, the largest single outdoor paper display used anywhere in this country in ten years. Working with William R. Ferguson, MGM exploitation chief on Howard Deitz's staff, DiAngelis erected forty 140-sheet stands, with letters of the title running a full story in depth. This was followed by the erection of 100 28-sheets in New York and suburban districts, in addition to the usual smaller sized paper.

I'd Clip the Highest Mountain
(Paramount)
Novelty

This Paramount Screen Song shows the characters jumping around the mountain peaks in tune with the melodies of the various numbers recorded.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Just a Gigolo
(Vitaphone)
Novelty

A song novelty short number in which an organist and singer render the tune in accord, while animated sketched figures form a moving background.—Running time, 6 minutes.

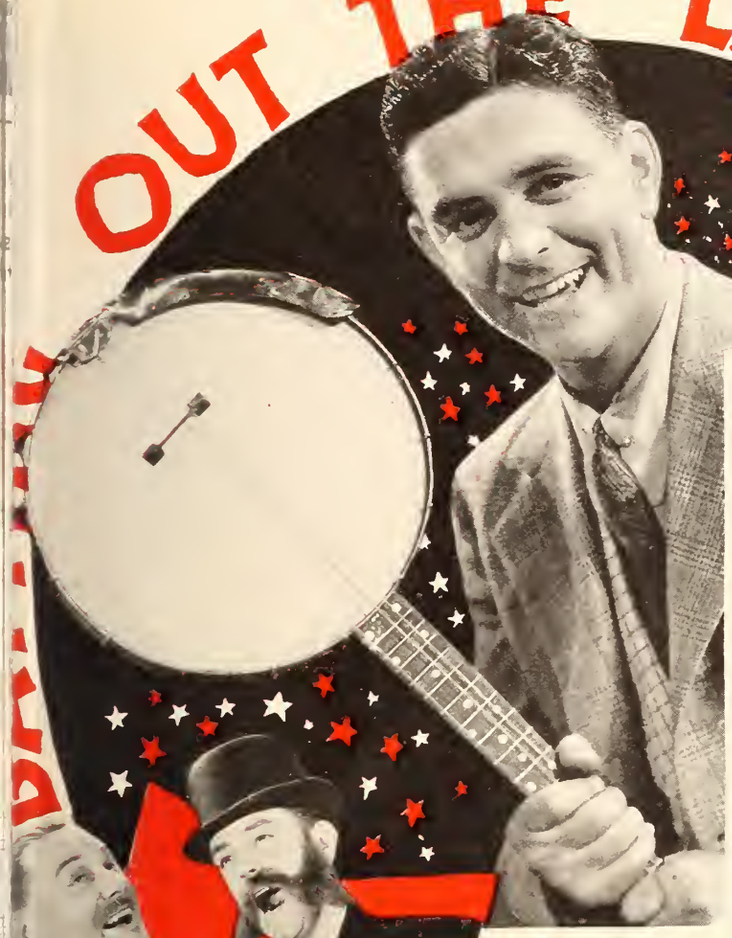
THEATRE RECEIPTS



Only one new high registered during "Current Week," although in several instances grosses topped those of last week. Pictures such as "Women of All Nations" drew heavy in comparison with the business done in "Previous Week."

On the other hand seventeen lows were chalked for "Current Week." This represents only a normal action to the summer weather. Shortly, the new s son's product will be showing and it is expected t business will show a trend upward.

World Institute Seeking Data on Educational Films

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., is cooperating with the International Educational Cinematograph Institute of Rome in providing it with a list of educational pictures made since 1925. The catalogues of the Institute, which is under the direction of the League of Nations, will be divided into subjects and published in five languages for circulation in every country. The catalogues will contain all information obtainable on each picture and the terms on which it can be rented.

The Institute asks for "all details, even of a commercial kind, referring to each film, such as title, a short account of the plot, the footage, name of manufacturing company, renter, price of hire, etc."

The aim of the Institute in this compilation, as stated by Dr. Luciano de Feo, director, is "to facilitate international exchange and thus create an excellent form of international cooperation with a view to a higher intellectual and moral development of mankind."

Baltimore to Vote on Blue Law

Baltimore will decide whether it wants a continuance of present blue laws, or new regulations permitting amusements on the Sabbath. E. Lester Muller, president of the city council, has signified his intention to name a committee to draw up a new code which will provide for legalization of Sunday entertainment, the code to be referred to the people at the polls.

KLEINE PASSES

By TERRY RAMSAYE

saved the motion picture from what might have developed into its gravest error.

In the exploitation of the Italian-made "Quo Vadis," one of the earliest of feature length productions, Mr. Kleine exerted important influence on picture destiny. He opened "Quo Vadis" at a dollar top admission at the Astor theatre in New York April 21, 1913 and played it through a run of twenty-one weeks, establishing a milestone in motion picture history. This picture, and other features which followed, he exploited across the country in large legitimate theatres and contributed importantly to a more appreciative public acceptance of the screen.

Aided in Educational Field

Mr. Kleine was probably first in America to make a serious effort to make the motion picture a contribution to educational endeavors. He made large investments in educational material and published expensive catalogues in the pioneering of this yet undevelopment ramification of the industry.

One of his most spectacular ventures in production was the now historic serial "Gloria's Romance," starring Billie Burke. This picture, most pretentious of all serials, with a story by Rupert Hughes and an imposing supporting cast, became the high-water mark of serial production. It was the last of the great serials. It went into the market with a storm of pre-release success in selling but for a combination of reasons did not make a marked ultimate triumph.

Following the decay of General Film, the imposing concern in which he had been so important an organizer and one-time president, Mr. Kleine established and operated a distributing system under his own name and variously with the short-lived K.E.S.E. which took the place of the V.L.S.E. concern that had sought to fill the place of General. Mr. Kleine's last motion picture participation was in Ritz Carlton Pictures with J. D. Williams, in the period when that concern had a somewhat transient possession of the services of the late Rudolph Valentino.

A History of the Industry

For the last several years Mr. Kleine had maintained offices in New York in Forty-fifth street. A few years ago, with a feeling for pictures of historic value, he made an arrangement for the exploitation and distribution of all the earliest of Thomas A. Edison's pictures, including the famous 'May Irwin-John C. Rice Kiss," "The Great Train Robbery," first of all photoplays, produced for Edison by Edwin S. Porter in 1903 and other like productions. In the last years however, Mr. Kleine contented himself largely with attention to his extensive investments, largely outside the motion picture industry, and to the classification and cataloguing of his business records, which in themselves constitute practically a history of the industry. A large portion of those records have been given into the custody of the drama department of the New York Public Library, where Frank J. Wilstach of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., is co-operating in building up a collection of archives and source documents on the motion picture.

For many years Mr. Kleine made himself difficult of access to the press and cloaked his outward contacts with a bearing of deep austerity. He did, however, enjoy a merry sense of humor and with his intimates enjoyed a vast appreciation of the many exciting antics of the infant industry in which he was so seriously engaged. Endless stories are told of his quips and anecdotes at the piously guarded poker parties of the General Film chieftains at the Republican Club in Fortieth street looking down on Bryant Park.

It was Mr. Kleine's whimsy on these occasions to partake only of Apolonaris water, "in tribute to my friend and classmate, Isadore Haldenstein," he remarked. Mr. Haldenstein was, and is, American agent for Apolonaris. And after that there was breakfast at Jack's in Sixth avenue, where William Swanson and other sharpshooting independents in the war against the trust sometimes lingered to listen to and argue with their friends the enemy, the masters of General Film, "the trust." It is recorded in friendliness by comrades of those days, too, that Mr. Kleine's preference for mineral water stood him in good stead and returned some amazing profits in those debates across the green cloth at the club.

Mr. Kleine travelled abroad extensively and took his later years in considerable leisure. He accumulated a large library and established many interesting friendships both here and in the capitals of Europe. Friends estimate that his personal fortune at the time of his death was likely between three and four millions. There have been periods in the flow of motion picture developments when he probably had vastly more.

Government Would Decide Canadian Copyright Fees

Strenuous objection is made by the Performing Rights Society of Canada and the American Association of Authors to the clause in the revamped Cahan bill amending the Canadian copyright act that would call for government supervision of the license fee to be collected from theatres. The bill is likely to be adopted with one minor exception.

The most contentious clause stipulates that the governor-in-council is authorized to revise or prescribe the fees in case the society "unduly withholds the issue or grant of licenses" or "proposes to collect excessive fees."

First National Case May Be Held Up Until October

Doubt that there will be a July term of the federal court in New York this year points to a delay until October in the anti-trust case of the Department of Justice against Warner Bros. in the First National acquisition. Postponement had been made until the July term at the request of Warner Bros.

Crusade Film for DeMille

Cecil B. DeMille, it is understood, will produce a spectacle film based on the Crusades, if plans mature as he wishes. No new developments will be made until his return from Europe.

GREATER SELLING EFFORT REQUIRED

By JOE BRANDT

The president of Columbia Pictures, in the following article, advocates the use of advertising and exploitation practices of big business in the motion picture business

New merchandising methods and greater selling effort is needed to bring the public into the theatre today. Pictures have become a commodity as well as an entertainment and as such must be handled in the same way as any other merchandise in order to insure adequate returns.

The old ballyhoo has given way to the highly specialized methods of advertising and exploitation of big business.

So numerous are the attractions demanding the time of his community, that a showman can not leave the choice of his particular type of entertainment to chance. He must control the choice by the influence of a positive external force. The radio, lectures, clubs, the stage, miniature athletic developments, all tend to draw away his trade. It is true that he now offers better film productions than ever and that pictures are the ideal popular entertainment. But though his success is obviously preordained he must realize that his competition is not negligible. The average citizen must be led to his theatre. If left alone the chances are that he will choose some other attraction or stay at home. If he does go to the movies he may not choose your theatre. He must, therefore, be led to your box office by judicious advertising and exploitation.

Unfortunately many a showman fails to realize the importance of advertising and regards it as an item of unnecessary expense or a necessary evil.

Suppose we look at it this way. Advertising, instead of being an expense, is an investment which, if carefully used, will return many times the initial outlay in box office receipts. Many showmen are wont to consider a picture sufficiently publicized by the marquee lights and an elaborate lobby display. They forget that such exploitation at its best can reach only the people who happen to pass the theatre. The rest of the community—all potential patrons—are left completely in the dark, whereas for a negligible charge such an exhibitor can secure sufficient exploitation material from his distributor to blanket the community. In this way, with outdoor displays, posted at a distance from the theatre, with tabloids, heralds and similar advertising novelties distributed in the neighborhood houses, and other exploitation methods more fully discussed later in the article, a strong bid can be made for the patronage of every person in the district.

A thought that seldom occurs to the exhibitor is that, in spite of any business depression that may exist in the town, good business comes to his theatre when he has good pictures properly merchandised. When a production does not go across, the fault in the majority of cases does not lie with the feature, but with the exhibitor because he failed to sell his attraction to his prospective customers.

It simply goes back to a principle a great sales manager voiced. He said: "If you want to do business, you've got to expose yourself to business."

The exhibitor must understand that his intensive promotion support of his pictures is really only a sound business insurance.

Too many exhibitors try to see how little advertising they can get away with. This is just as foolish as covering a $10,000 home with a $500 fire insurance policy.

The photoplay fans think only as highly as you do of the shows you offer. When you back a picture with the right kind of advertising, they respond, because your confidence in that production has been communicated to them.

Today more than ever Columbia surrounds each one of its productions with every possible selling aid. It has always been the company's policy to work hand in hand with the exhibitor in helping him put the picture over and in devising new methods of merchandising his product. A permanent staff of exploiteers paves the way for a ready made audience. While it is obviously impossible to provide every exhibitor with an exploiteer, work done by these men in key centers attracts such great attention that the subsequent run exhibitor throughout the territory obtains direct benefit.

Columbia is now developing a hardly touched field of exploitation, reaching almost the entire American audience through its shopping mediums. That is, the tie-up stills. It has awakened the exhibitor to the realization that he is no longer sufficient unto himself, but that he needs the cooperation of every business man in his community. Grocers, for example, will be glad to display the tie-up stills and mounts which not only advertise the pictures, stars and theatre, but also advertise the merchandise which they have to sell. The same is true of innumerable lines of business which we have tied up with our pictures. In this way both the exhibitor and the merchant benefit.

A forceful illustration of what advertising really can do recently occurred in a certain town in the South, and because one of our pictures was involved, it was of tremendous interest to me when I listened to the story told by the exhibitor in question. A little over a year ago, a man who had no previous experience in this business, invested his money in an abandoned theatre. He had been a newspaper and advertising man. Perhaps it was this lack of experience which caused him to venture in where others feared to tread, because his opposition was a powerful circuit that had erected a beautiful theatre. This circuit, however, worked on the budget system, which left the manager of the house powerless to exploit his theatre properly. This former newspaper and advertising man opened up his doors in such a way that people for several miles around knew that there was a second theatre in that particular town. The circuit house had bought all the product it had considered desirable, and there was plenty of product left for the newcomer. As an advertising man he knew the value of exploitation, and he made every one of his pictures loom up as an important production.

His advertising outlay frequently represented as much of an outlay as the cost of the picture itself, and because he was such a live advertiser, the people of his community obtained the impression that even though the opposition house was more modern, the smaller theatre showed the better pictures, reacting to the old theory that if you hear a thing often enough you believe it to be true.

Within a month the house showed a profit and continued to show a profit each week.

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 81

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 86—(A) In just what way is current generated in the coil located in the magnetic field of a Western Electric disc record pickup? (B) What will current generated in the coil in the magnetic field of a Western Electric disc record pickup result in? (C) What is meant by "oil damped"? (D) Describe the present disc pickup equipment.

The question was: (A) Describe the sound pickup system of the Western Electric system. Tell us exactly of what it consists. (B) Describe the slit assembly. (C) Describe the exciting lamp assembly and tell us its purpose. (D) How would you proceed to test the exciting lamp for correctness as to its sidewise position?

There were well up to 600 attempts to answer this assemblage of questions, the following being those who made sufficiently correct answers to demonstrate that they really understand the matter very well:

C. Rau and S. Evans, Herman Billings, Lester Borst, Andrew T. Rogers, Ben Edwards, Sam C. Small, F. C. Sanders, Steven R. LaCross, Thos. Dunbar, Dan Tomlinson, Andrew Schaefer, D. T. Power, R. T. Dennison, H. G. Shelton, Bob Andrews, Dick T. Bann, Alex D. Conklin, F. D. Richards, Andy Birdsal, Bob Thompson, Frank Lewis, F. K. Post, Richard Lewiston, G. M. Myers, G. J. Chambers, T. Quick, D. L. Michel, L. V. Jarvis, J. D. Daniel, Richard L. Rallins, T. H. True, Benjamin Shawnison, Robert Fortell, H. Howard, U. S. Tnady, R. D. O'Brien, Mack Miller, T. Ackton, T. L. Davidson, Joe Simmons, Joseph Daniels, Toot Lavenburg, Robert Roberts, Emile Hardin, L. L. Matteson, D. R. Shafer, Henry Boylson, D. H. Macy, L. B. Tannerson, Samuel G. Bird, R. T. Jameson, T. W. Wilkens, A. V. Rielly, Tom Alexander, Frank F. Brunnage, Frank Davidson, Bill Doe, Tom Hobart, K. T. Shane and David Overmeyer.

Quite a list, what? and constantly being added to. It is now a large sized task to examine the Bluebook School answers. There are many who have answered every question for months, and never yet sent one which could be honestly set down as wholly right. However, they have, I venture the assertion, benefited largely. Many have appended notes to their answers saying as much. Here is one from a man in Kentucky:

"It is a disappointment never to once find my name included in the printed list, but always an examination of the printed answer shows that you are right. I did not answer correctly on all points. But anyhow, Mr. Richardson, I feel that I have had a very, very great benefit from this school, and the benefit largely comes through the fact that I have myself actually tried to write out an answer and have sent that answer to you. It gives pep to the thing and makes me look for the printed answer and to remember where I was wrong. My boss said last week: 'I am glad to see you are improving. Everything is better than it was and if you keep it up maybe you'll some of these days find a bit more in your sock every Monday evening.' I know the answer to the 'better work' is the interest the school has given me in my work, therefore, Mr. Richardson, I thank you."

The reply of Rau and Evans, Victoria, B. C., has been selected for publication this time. These gentlemen say:

"(A) The sound pickup system (by which is meant the components of the sound head mounted on the projector) of the Western Electric Sound system consists of a light source known as the exciting lamp; an optical system consisting of a condenser, slit and small objective lens; the sound track on which the film rides; the sound gate aperture and the photoelectric cell. The exciting lamp throws a beam of light, concentrated by the condenser, on the slit; the image of the illuminated slit is focused by the small objective lens on the film at the sound gate aperture; and the photoelectric cell acts as a medium to change the variations of light passing through the film sound track into variations of electric current. From the photoelectric cell, the current goes to the film pickup amplifier.

"(B) The slit assembly is a dust-tight metallic barrel in which is contained the condenser, the mechanical slit and the small objective lens. The condenser consists of two plano-convex lenses, ⅝ inch in diameter, whose purpose is to concentrate the light from the exciting lamp upon the slit. The slit is formed by two parallel knife edges, spaced 1½ thousands of an inch apart, the slit is 3/16 inch in length. The slit acts as one of the conjugate foci points of the small objective lens, the other being its image, which is focused upon the sound track of the film at the sound aperture plate. The objective lens, as has been said, focuses the image of the slit upon the sound track in the form of a smaller rectangle of light, it having been reduced by the objective lens and sound gate aperture so that its dimensions are .08 of an inch wide by .001 of an inch high. Of course, since the size of the beam of light has been made smaller, its intensity has been increased. A microscope is used, at the laboratory, to locate the slit assembly.

"(D) The exciting lamp assembly consists of the exciting lamp, its socket and bracket. The exciting lamp is a 25-watt, 12-volt straight coil filament lamp, which supplies a steady, unwavering beam of light, focused by the condenser upon the slit. The image of this slit is focused upon the sound track of the film at the sound aperture plate.

"(E) To test the sidewise adjustment of the exciting lamp, secure a piece of negative film and thread it through the sound gate, with the emulsion side towards the light. Then light the exciting lamp and allow the light from it to shine on the film for about 10 seconds. Then turn the flywheel of the projector so that the film moves a fraction of an inch. Allow the light to shine on this spot for another 10 seconds. Repeat this procedure several times. Upon the film being removed from the projector, a series of lines will be seen where the light has been allowed to shine on the film. Compare this test strip of film with a piece of sound film, and with sprocket holes perfectly matched, it can be seen whether the exciting lamp is illuminating the slit across its whole width."

New Portable Projector

International Projector Corporation is now out with what seems to be a marvelously portable projector primarily developed for the educational and non-theatrical field. However, it has reached such an amazing stage of perfection that it might be considered for use in small theatres where a Mazda 900 Watt light source or 1,000 Watt, 110 Volt Mazda lamp will supply sufficient illumination. The machine is entirely self-contained. It is covered by an aluminum casing 18″ high by 23″ long. The width is 8″, but on the left side is a bulge about 4″ deep so that the whole width of the machine is about 14″.

The upper magazine sets on top of the casing and, of course, is quickly detachable for transportation. The lower magazine is on the front of the casing and is equally easily detachable. I have said the casing is perforated. I might add that it is very thoroughly perforated so that there can be no possible chance of overheating. The right hand side of the casing is hinged in the center and swings open so that the entire mechanism, when the casing is open, is visible and accessible. It is a really astoundingly convenient machine and so far as I am able to see within the limits of the light source power, should project just as good a picture as the big professional projector.

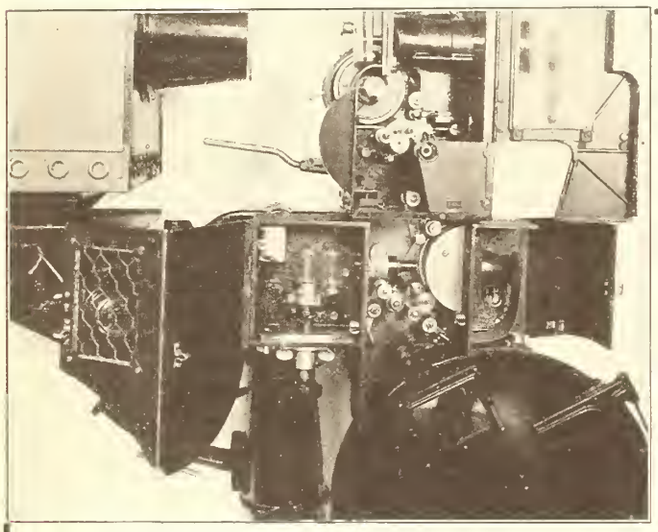
The shutter arrangement is essentially the same as that of the Super Simplex except that the shutter is so made that it acts as a cut-off shutter and a fire shutter. In other words when the projector speed is reduced below the point of safety, the rotating shutter automatically, by a very clever arrangement, closes up solid; that is to say, the wings go back so that there is no opening at all and thus it acts as a fire shutter. When the speed again reaches normal or nearly so, the shutter again automatically opens and becomes a regular 90° two blade cut-off rotating shutter.

All the various handling devices, such as the framing lever, etc., are available and very conveniently so. The framing handle protrudes through an opening. It could not be more conveniently placed. The sprocket idler carriage is full-floating and just about the best I have ever seen. I say that after having examined the thing for 10 seconds, because it is obviously true. It is a mighty clever arrangement. Merely by turning a knurled knob the gate is open and closed and in either position is locked.



The proportional aperture plates are altered also merely by turning a little knob. Any diameter projection lens may be used. The lens is supported at two points. The focusing knob is on the top near the front of the casing. The exciting lamp, its optical system and the sound gate, are located just below the lower sprocket and even the photocell is inside the casing. It is really an amazing piece of work.

The sound arrangement is mounted on two brackets and by removing six screws is detachable as a unit. This means that simply by taking out six conveniently reached screws, the sound head in use may be detached and one of any other make attached. The whole thing can be done in three minutes' time.

Another unique feature of this projector is that it has almost no gears at all. The left side of the mechanism casing opens just as does the right side so that everything is accessible.

The motor is located immediately below the lamphouse. It is connected to a horizontal driving shaft through a safety clutch so built that should the mechanism at any time freeze up, the motor would continue to run without harm or in the event the motor should suddenly freeze up, the clutch would slip and no damage would be done to the mechanism. This horizontal driving shaft connects with an upright driving shaft and that in turn connects with something entirely different from what I have ever seen. It is in the form of an oscillating frame carrying the intermittent movement flywheel and operating mechanism of the projector.

The intermittent movement and shutter synchronizing means are mounted in one common casting, and this system is fundamentally new in design. It also allows for but one pair of gears between the shutter shaft and the intermittent movement. The picture is framed by rotating the intermittent sprocket and this is accomplished by turning the framing handle when the entire intermittent and shutter support casting is rocked in the arc of a circle, maintaining absolute synchronism between shutter and intermittent movement, and allowing the elimination of the entire train of gears ordinarily present to accomplish this result in all other types of motion picture projectors.

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

The month of June offers some excellent opportunities to the alert theatre man for special programs of particular interest to his public. In these days of early summer heat the average person is less inclined to remain indoors. The open road is more alluring.

Audience interest may be sustained, however, and the public tempted into your theatre by making gala occasions of June's outstanding days.

Flag Day

To the school children of America, Flag Day is a thrilling anniversary. The Salute to the Flag is part of their daily program. Its history and its significance is stressed in every classroom. What the flag stands for in the heart of every boy and girl has been admirably expressed by Henry Holcomb Bennett in the lines:

Hats off! Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
A flash of color beneath the sky;
Hats off! The flag is passing by!

The United States Congress decided on a national flag June 14, 1777, adopting the Stars and the Stripes as the official emblem of the United States. In a history-making resolution it was decided that the flag be made of 13 stripes, alternately white and red, and that the Union be 13 white stars in a blue field. Tradition says that General George Washington, who was a member of the committee, with Robert Morris and Colonel Ross, took a rough sketch of the proposed design to Mrs. John Ross, an upholsterer, who was noted for her neatness as a seamstress. She lived on Arch street and her home still stands, a shrine frequently visited by patriotic pilgrims. The story runs that the stars in the design had six points; but Mrs. Ross much preferred stars with five points, so, with a few clips of her scissors, she deftly cut down a five-pointed star for her illustrious callers, who, satisfied with its greater beauty, accepted the change.

It would be appropriate to invite local school children to present a Betsy Ross tableau or a one-act play on the making of the flag on your program.

Guests of honor might include officers of Daughters of the American Revolution
Grand Army of the Republic
Daughters of the American Colonists
Colonial Dames
American Legion.

Display flags on marquees, in foyer and place a flag in standard on the stage.

Invite army officer or veteran, in uniform if possible, to lead children in a salute to the flag and pledge of allegiance, followed by singing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

Invite school principal, teacher of history, or officer of patriotic organization to tell briefly the history of the changes in the United States flag, from the Cross of St. George down to the present Stars and Stripes.

Invite children in costume to recite:
"The American Flag, by Drake.
"The Man Without a Country," Hale.
"The Blue and the Gray," Finch.
"The Gettysburg Speech," Lincoln.

Community singing:
"The Star Spangled Banner," Key.
"Battle Hymn of the Republic," Howe.
"Hail Columbia," Hopkinson.
"Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," Smith.
"America," Smith.

Invite library and local book store to arrange display of books relating to the flag. Souvenirs; tiny American flags.

Suitable short subjects:
"Story of the Star Spangled Banner," Pathe, 1 reel.
"Two Americans," Paramount, 2 reels.

Father's Day

Sunday, June 14, is the day to invite the fathers in your community to be your guests of honor. You might also invite the mayor, who is the city father, or a judge, to tell children about Father's Day, citing the accomplishments of some of our forefathers—George Washington, Benjamin Franklin and Abraham Lincoln. Announce prizes for the three best slogans on Father's Day. This feature if properly exhibited should win excellent newspaper publicity.

FEATURES:
"Abraham Lincoln," United Artists, 8,280 feet, sound.
"Abraham Lincoln," First National, 8 reels, silent.
"Father's Son" (Lewis Stone-Leon Janney) First National, 6,930 feet, talking.

Discovery of Electricity

On June 15 in 1752, Benjamin Franklin demonstrated the identity of electricity and lightning by the use of a kite. He was only a young journalist when he made his first experiments in electricity that were to have such far-reaching effects. The publication by an English correspondent of the letters in which he gave an account of these experiments, secured his election as an honorary member of the Royal Society of London, an undisputed rank among the most eminent natural philosophers of his time. An exceptionally intelligent program which should win newspaper comment as well as fine school cooperation might be planned as follows:

Guests of honor:
Members of Inventors' Society.
Scientists.
Representative of power and light company to tell of the development of electricity and its practical application.

Cooperate with electrical store for window display of appliances—card announcing Junior Matinee observance.

Flag-draped picture in foyer of Benjamin Franklin.

Cooperate with power and light company for Junior Matinee, children to be personally conducted through power plant—give demonstrations.

Attendance prize: Small magnet.

SHORT:
"Benjamin Franklin" (comedy), Universal, 1 reel.

Birthday of Boy Scouts

June 15 is also the Birthday of the Boy Scout Movement, which was started in 1908 for the purpose of training boys in the fundamentals of good citizenship. It had its beginning in the British Isles, but spread rapidly until today it is be found in every civilized country in the world. Saturday, June 20, would be a suitable day to feature your Boy Scouts.

Guests of Honor:
Officers and Scoutmasters of local Boy Scout organization.

Display of American flags.

Flag salute with pledge of allegiance led by Boy Scout color bearers.

If possible, open matinee with Boy Scout band or group of buglers in uniform.

Invite Boy Scout executive to tell of the Boy Scout movement, its incorporation, history and international scope.

Invite library and local book store to display books pertaining to, and interesting to Boy Scouts.

Arrange for foyer display of Scout handicraft from local troop.

Demonstration on stage of Boy Scouts work by local troops, illustrating fire-making, first aid, signalling.

FEATURE:
"Across the World with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson" (one-half with Boy Scouts), Travelogue. Talking Picture Epics, 9 reels, synchronized.

SHORTS:

GIVE SUITABLE SETS TO SPECIAL ACTS

Policy of Playing 'Em Cold Is Bad Showmanship

Little Or No Additional Expense Is Required to Embellish Stage for Artists

By ED DAWSON

In furthering the discussion of last week relative to the booking of special acts and the billing of them apart from the unit show, managers are now cautioned to use their initiative in creating a suitable setting for such acts.

Theatre executives have found the policy of permitting special acts to go on cold harmful. They contend that such a policy not only is a waste of money, but also fails to arouse favorable public reaction.

They point out that in the stage equipment in every house there are set pieces and lights that can be used to give a pleasing decorative effect and thus enhance the act.

Even an ordinary drop, they say, leaves the performance flat.

Acts can be embellished with little or no added cost. Yet, in dollars and cents at the box office, the effort and the slight additional expense which might be incurred are worth while.

Executives point out that special acts are booked to bolster a weak bill and therefore every effort should be made to take advantage of the opportunity to cash in.

Warner Managers Shifted

Victor Hudson has been transferred as manager of the Warner theatre in Portsmouth, O., to the managership of the Warner house in Sidney, O., changing spots with John L. Gray.

Leader Starts Symphony

Hal Sanders, former orchestra leader at the Memphis, Tenn. Orpheum, has organized a symphony orchestra in connection with the theatre and local music clubs.

Loew House Drops Acts

Loew's State in Memphis, Tenn. will eliminate vaudeville next week, running talking films only. This move leaves Memphis without a single film house stage show.

Rochester Cuts Orchestra

Loew's Rochester, 4,000 seat house, and largest in the city, has cut its pit orchestra from 40 pieces to 18 for the summer. Stage band of 13 pieces has been left intact.

Con Maffie

The above likeness of Con might have been taken as he was reading over a new contract, but instead he is reading a copy of a recent HERALD. The reason Maffie has been selected this week to grace the "Music and Talent Hall of Fame" is because he recently opened at the organ of Loew's Paradise theatre, New York City. Con, who has nearly captured the "globe-trotting" record, has played in Paramount houses throughout the West and Middle-west, and until his recent position at Warner Bros.' Earle, in Philadelphia, he never had been East. Now, after having that house change its policy, Maffie got himself the berth of featured organist at the Paradise, one of Loew's deluxe houses. He is known not only for his original and entertaining organ solos but for his fine singing voice.

Miss Merman Appears in House Where She Made Pro Debut

Ethel Merman is appearing this week at the Brooklyn Paramount theatre, where, last summer, she made her professional debut. Miss Merman has played one of the starring parts in the musical show, "Girl Crazy," for the past year and after this week is signed up to be starred in Paramount Pictures.

Loew Tap Dancer Dies

Cecil Graham, 29, Loew unit player, said to be the only rope jumping tap dancer, died at Genesee, N. Y., last week of pneumonia.

Music Officials Will Urge National Living Music Day

Living Music Day, for the past two years celebrated in San Francisco, may be observed nationally and internationally in the near future.

Walter A. Weber, president, and Clarence H. King, treasurer of Musicians' Local No. 6, San Francisco, will urge the annual event at the musicians' federation convention at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Theatres Turn To Children After Dropping Stage Shows

San Antonio houses are aiming at child attendance, to offset the summer slump and elimination of stage shows in the city. All first class houses have fixed a 10 cent admission for children.

RKO and Publix officials report good response despite lack of stage presentations. RKO managers insist vaudeville will return in the fall, in which case Publix will probably meet the competition.

Fox House Drops Units

Fox Warfield, San Francisco, has dropped Fanchon & Marco units with a reduction in admission, using variety bits instead. Fox West Coast California is the subject of a large billboard campaign, unusual for a second run house.

Vallee, Libby Holman On Stage

Rudy Valee and Libby Holman were featured in the New York Paramount stage presentation, "On Ze Boulevard," Fred Evans production at the house week of June 12.

Broadcasts Original Work

The first broadcast over WBEN, Buffalo, of Wilye Stahl's orchestra at Shea's Buffalo, was composed almost entirely of the leader's own compositions.

F & M Units Back at Fox

Fanchon & Marco units have been returned to the San Francisco Fox, after several months at the Warfield, smaller house.

Dances Held in House

The Paramounteers, stage band of the Portland, Ore., Paramount, now plays at the weekly Wednesday night dances, held on the theatre mezzanine, to stimulate second night attendance.

STAGE SHOWS

"Selections from the Ballet," the overture preceding the stageshow and led by Yasha Bunchuk, was decidedly the type work this orchestra presents best and it received the applause it deserved.

The stageshow, nameless this week, but with name attractions which drew them in nevertheless, proved as highly entertaining as is usual with these stars. Direct from their hit in the "New Yorkers" show, Fred Waring and His Pennsylvanians presented clever arrangements of popular tunes, augmented by harmonious solos and group singing by the boys and "The Three Girl Friends," some fine dancing by Evelyn Nair and Tonita. The numbers this orchestra played so well were "The Jayhop," "I Surrender Dear," "When Your Lover Has Gone," "One More Time," "Sweet and Hot," "On the Shelf" and "Dominoes." The enthusiastic reception accorded them offered Fred Waring an opportunity to lead the combined orchestras in Hosmer's "Southern Rhapsody." This he did from the pit conductor's platform. Kate Smith, as an added attraction and back for her fourth, fifth or sixth time, presented a cycle of songs, sung in her own inimitable manner, which again enthralled this audience.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending June 10

The world loves a lilting waltz, and Walt Roesner and his Fox Theatre orchestra present "Viennese Waltz Dreams," made up of gems from the works of Beethoven, Strauss, Schubert and Kreisler. Joaquin Garay, tenor, sings the waltz song, "Beautiful Love," with "Celito Lindo," in Spanish as an encore.

The stage show of Fanchon & Marco is "Sketches Idea" and proves a decidedly colorful affair, with some especially attractive scenic effects. It opens with a background of artists' palettes and Frank Hopkinson singing a song of the artist. Models come to life and do a lively studio dance and drill to the music of "Smile, Darn You, Smile," with Mildred Perlee in a specialty dance.

The curtain goes up revealing a huge painting on an easel and soon it is discovered that the orchestra forms a living part of the old English setting. Royal Gascoigne does some novel juggling and gets a good hand in balancing bottles and a heavy ball. His white dog also proves apt at balancing.

Angelo, Andree and Sanger put on a comedy adagio act that proves a scream. They tumble all over the stage, but the miscues are made in a manner that suggests real art.

The Sunkist Beauties bring in eight large easels and proceed to busy themselves with drawings in colors which mean little until they are joined when two attractive pictures are revealed, one a southern scene and one suggestive of Cuba.

Allan and Canfield offer a skit that includes a lot of jokes, as well as comedy singing and dancing. One learns from them that a vacuum is the place where the pope lives.

The orchestra is next revealed in a new setting flanked with huge tubes of colors, and the girls come out in gorgeous headdress, but in scant attire, as Hopkinson sings and Miss Perlee dances. Color pours from the tubes in the form of colored fabrics and the act closes with the back curtain going up on a huge palette on which girls are posed.

Denver Denver

Week ending June 9

The overture, arranged by Fred Schmitt and presented by his Denver orchestra, is called "Operatic Bouquet," and is comprised of selections from "Aida," "Madame Butterfly," "Carmen," "Il Trovatore," and others, and served to show the versatility of this group of musicians. The audience always responds warmly to their overtures and this is one of the best they have done recently.

The stage show is the first of the Fanchon & Marco Ideas, the change from Publix units having been made last week. The Ideas will stop here on their jump from Seattle to St. Louis.

"Russian Art" is the name and it is fast and lively. The outburst at the end reminds one of a three-ring circus—not enough eyes to see it all at once. Bell Telaak as the master of ceremonies keeps things going.

As the curtain goes up a chorus of twenty swing into action and Eddie Kube does an acrobatic dance with a firebrand finish. Mecha Bessoff and his Balalaika orchestra offer Russian music and Telaak does a comic act with the violin. A Russian minuet with a regal setting is followed by a comedy turn, part of it done in the theatre aisle. The Walters Duo do a novelty contortionist act, clothed in frog skins. A small stage is used for the setting of a Russian machine shop singing act and also for the Russian conception of a German beer garden. The latter uses figures painted on the canvas, with the exception of the faces and hands, these being provided by members of the company back of the screen. This number goes over in fine shape. Wasil Wania does a novelty dance to the tune of his own concertina and the finale is a flash using every member of the company and the Walters couple doing a spinning act on the trapeze.

New Orleans Saenger

Week ending May 29

A fashion extravaganza, so-called, wherein a score or so of budding society ladies exhibited glad rags and the trimming from the Canal street palaces, was all right for the personal friends of the participants, but for the rank and file not so well received, despite the heavy publicity.

In the Publix Unit the Canadian Rockets were the finest seen here in many a harvest moon. The girls were handsome and well dressed.

Sid Marion, assisted by Marie Duval, "did his darndest," but even at that failed to put it over.

The show opens to an historical orchestral feature commemorating Decoration Day. Sam Jack Kaufman, master of ceremonies and musical conductor, leads this scrim presentation, with Eddie Magill as the soldier in a motion picture battle scene, beautifully singing "My Buddy." This overture was well received.

The organ feature (see report in organ solo column) followed.

The Fanchon and Marco Idea this week is called "Prosperity Idea" but after the opening scene, a prosperity banquet, the idea peters out and the usual specialty offerings follow. Danny Beck, imitator and trick drummer, offered a creditable imitation of Harry Langdon, but the stories and gags all have been heard here before and his drumming, though good, became tiresome long before he finished his act. The Aaron Sisters (3) did fairly well with their harmonizing of Negro spirituals. They are personable, have showmanship and entertaining voices which are different from most harmony singing. Lucille Page, personable and graceful, did very well with her routine of high-kicking and acrobatic dancing. Kaufman, who is good looking, speaks well and has a likeable disposition, leads his stageband in a good arrangement of "Strolling Down Lover's Lane," as Eddie Magill, house crooner, nicely sings a chorus through his lighted megaphone.

Jack LaVier, comedy trapeze performer, had the house in an uproar of laughter at his prop falls and other funny antics while perched high up near the proscenium arch.

Stageshows here seem to be taken as a matter of course, Kaufman, West and Magill being the local fair-haired boys.

Jersey City Loew's Jersey

Week ending June 5

This week Don Albert opens the show with an entertaining orchestral feature called "Melody Moods and Modes." Ably conducted by Don and well played by the Grand Orchestra.

Ted Meyn at the organ presented one of his original musical novelty creations. This one is entitled "Singing a Song to the Stars," and proved very entertaining to this audience. The most unusual part of this solo was that Meyn did not ad lib or offer any of his usual smart chatter and that is something that the audience have learned to look forward to.

The stage-show, billed as a Capitol theatre revue, direct from New York City, is called "Bag of Blues" and featured Jay C. Flippen and Irving Aaronson's Commanders. Show opens to a simple but effective modernistic setting in which Aaronson leads his Commanders in a good arrangement of "Lady Play Your Mandolin." The musicians are versatile and do a number of bits other than playing. Edna Sedgwick does some fine tap and jazz toe work. Jay C. Flippen, master of ceremonies, comedy monologist and comedy singing, is a great entertainment, getting all of the laughs throughout this show. Fay Brady, a good-looking red-head does a "dead-pan" bit with Flippen that is extremely funny and wholly entertaining. The band closes the show with a comedy song called "Got to Ask Mussillini." The show as a whole is one of the best to play here, fast and entertaining.

ORGAN SOLOS

HARRY PEARL (Buffalo, Lafayette) offered for last week's solo "The Choice of the Stars," a cleverly presented novelty for which a novel background was set. Five tinseled stars were attached to a black plush curtain around the screen. On each was inscribed names, such as "Vega" and "Orion," with a larger star in the center over the screen, with the title on it "Pole Star." Each star represented a song and as the organist played each, a spotlight illuminated the star. Cleverly worded gags preceded each chorus, the songs being: "Truly," "Little Spanish Dancer," "Fall In Love With Me," "Sing Song Girl" and a final chorus of "Hello Beautiful." The last named was the "Pole Star" song. The audience sang well.

RALPH (New York Paradise) offered a novel solo entitled "Melody Land," which presented this audience with a chance to sing some old and new favorites and was enhanced by the use of a train platform scene on which the word slides were superimposed. The solo opened with special explanatory lyrics to the tune "Three Little Words." This gives the idea of a trip, with the audience to sing each of the songs famous to that place. The trip starts in Maine, with the audience singing "Stein Song," then jumps to Alabama by singing "Alabamy Bound," then "Carolina Moon," "When Kentucky Bids the World Good Morning," "Miss a Miss," "Mississippi Mud," "Ole Man River," "Saint Louis Blues," "Indiana Home," "Wabash Moon," a special about "Back Home" and a final chorus of "Walkin' My Baby Back Home." The entire solo was presented and played well and this audience enjoyed it.

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO Majestic) recently offered these song slides that he called "Lonesome Lover": "Fite, Darn Ya, Fight," to the tune of "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile"; "Sweet Jennie Lee"; "Oh, How I Miss You"; a tongue twister on a Scare Crow song; "Overnight"; "Little Things in Life," and last but not least, the ever popular "Your's and Mine." "Mac" seems to be well liked at this theatre and his organ solos are going over well. He appears to be popular also at the Robert Morton each week in conjunction with a violin concert played by Dave Smason.

BOB WEST (Brooklyn Fox) presented a straight singing novelty this week entitled "Let's Be Friendly." West, who is the cheer leader type of organist, has a smile and happy manner about him that makes his audiences sing right from the start of the solo. The solos he presents are, nearly always, just a lot of songs, with but little continuity or story, but this audience seems to want to sing and has an enjoyable time doing it. Songs in the program this week are: "Sugar to Tea," "Ho-Hum," "Moonlight Saving Time," "Dream a Little Dream," a tongue-twister to tune, "Cheerful Little Earful," with most of the words starting in "S," and a final chorus of "Don't Talk About Me."

PAUL H. FORSTER (Syracuse, N. Y., Fox Eckel), who has been organist at this house for the past four years except for a short absence, offered for one of his recent solos "Organ Types," in which interpolations of several different types of songs and ways of presenting them played the big part. Songs used were: "By the River Ste. Marie," "I'm No Account Any More," a parody chorus and one regular on "99 out of 100" and closing with his own special version of "Nola." Each of the songs was presented and played differently. The numbers received favorable comment.

BERNARD COWHAM (New York City, Flushing RKO). This original and entertaining solo, "Song Auction," was so well received that for all of the four days of its presentation it invariably stopped shows. The main reason for this was the cleverly written closing song, incorporating in its theme local girls and localities. The parody choruses were written to the tune, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres," and as the show caught Cowham was forced to encore with two extra choruses. Opening with his theme song, "Voice of the RKO," Bernie explained orally about the "song auction" and then went into a chorus of "Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." The next singing tune was "After the Ball," followed by "Little Old Church in the Valley" and about eight choruses of the first mentioned song. The audience liked the solo so much that even with a half full house (Monday evening) Bernie held up the show until two more choruses were sung.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) rendered numerous song hits as his final organ solo at this de luxe Publix house: first, the master organist flashed a slide upon the silver sheet with the words, "School Daze, for Kids from 6 to 60." Then came the school song by that name. Next, "Betty Co-Ed"; a well-arranged novelty to the tune of "Broken Hearted"; "You're the One," and finished with a good parody on "Under a Texas Moon." The way the patrons sang these, proved that the concert organist put over his wares in a pleasing manner, and was well received. This reviewer regrets that the Texas has lost its popular organist, but we only know that our loss is someone else's gain.

DALE YOUNG (Indianapolis Fountain Square) presented his organ club, which meets perodically at this theatre and is composed of patrons who send in a request for a popular song. The title slide of the solo is a beautiful E-fect slide bearing the words, "Your Requests." With special lyrics to "Swingin' in a Hammock," Dale tells the audience that his first number will be a classic, "Soldier's Chorus" from Faust, followed by some hot tunes. He then reads a letter (voice coming over mike attached to organ) from a member of the club who asked for Dale to play while standing on his head. Young apologizes for not having learned to do this yet but plays a very good pedal cadenza as a substitute. Following this with a hot rendition of "St. Louis Blues" and the singing of "Reaching for the Moon." The audience next sang a special "picture puzzle" chorus of "Go Home and Tell Your Mother" and adjourned by singing "Walkin' Baby Back Home."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

The Red Star Music company's offices sure look forlorn now that Jay Witmark and his secretary, Lillian Kaplan, are the sole occupants... From every side come reports that the song "There Must be a Bright Tomorrow" ("For Each Yesterday of Tears") is one of the song sensations of the year... Prisoner 3223, Marquette Prison, Marquette, Michigan, is the author of this human and stirring ballad... The song was first sent to Gene and Glenn, NBC artists, by this convict who expressed the hope that they might employ the song advantageously. Impressed with it, the boys offered it on a subsequent broadcast, explaining the circumstances via the air... The result was that they were deluged with mail, applauding their altruism and commending the song... The Oleman Music Corporation wired a bid for publication rights, which was accepted... Royalties will accrue to Prisoner 3223...

King, and Billy Moll, writers of "Moonlight on the Colorado," recently have completed what looks like their best effort... It is called "I Love You in the Same Sweet Way" and this song is looked to by the staff of Shapiro, Bernstein to help, greatly, in bringing back good old times... It sure should help, because it is chockful of the old appeal... E. H. (Bud) Morris, general manager of M. Witmark & Sons, has returned from a business trip to the Middlewest which included practically every phase of the music business except the actual publishing of songs... Aside from business conferences with Clarence Parrish, Chicago manager, Mr. Morris bought some new songs which soon will be included in the Witmark catalogue.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Canada and Its Laws

I NOTED SOME TIME AGO THAT ONE of the subscribers of this good page had something to say about the copyright laws and the evils thereof.

I still contend that Canada has the smartest set of people on this continent in the battle they are giving this bunch of American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers on the music tax. They are smart both ways. They are paying most of their taxes out of the United States on the liquor they sell and the Government is going to tell these publishers where they get off before they are through with them, contending that they are justly a trust and that if any music tax is set they will see that it is equitable. I have before me a Canadian paper with the report of the meeting, and it seems that the publishers are not going to get very far with the taxing of music in Canada.

This outfit is getting this tax three separate ways. First from the theatre owners, again from W. E. for recording, and again from the producer. Boy! It is possible only in this tax-ridden country. Get the Chicago Tribune of May 31 and read Arthur Sears Henning's resumè of the tax conditions in this country today. An increase of 333 per cent since 1913. One out of every 40 people are on a public payroll. The American people are paying one dollar out of every six dollars they earn, and see where we are heading to.

I have just paid my music tax and every time I see it going into this outfit that has the theatre owner by the nose, I see red. If it went to the Government, all well and good. But to enrich the organization that dug up this antiquated copyright law to gouge every theatre hotel broadcasting company and recording three ways from the jack don't sit very well with most theatre owners.

I see Fox is going to copyright its paper so that it will have to be bought from them, a clause in their contract to that effect. Fine! You little fellows—and I am one of them—will be sued if you happen to get any paper from your poster exchange that has not been bought direct from Fox themselves.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Commends "School and Screen"

THE INAUGURATION OF YOUR NEW department of "School and Screen," in my opinion, is one of the big things being done today to create a better feeling between the schools, churches and theatres, and Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick deserves a great deal of credit.

I am sure the exhibitors of the United States will be glad to receive her articles and give their fullest cooperation.

The Motion Picture Herald is to be commended, as it will be a great help in bringing back into the theatre the juvenile patronage. I am enclosing a copy of a herald that was used by my Melba theatre and is also being used in the Cinderella, Michigan and Virginia theatres.

These heralds were distributed to the grade and high schools in our vicinity. A letter was sent to the principals of each school asking his cooperation in this educational picture.—Fred Wehrenberg, chairman, board of directors, MPTOA, St. Louis, Mo.

On Pictures

WE WANT TO SECOND THE MOTION of Joseph Gray, Gray Theatre, Spangler, Pa., to reinstate a much needed department by small town exhibitors "What the Picture Did For Me."

Come on, brother exhibs, let's get this department going again; it will keep us from playing some of the awful lemons.

Following are a few reports:

"Along Came Youth." Very frothy entertainment, the kids will like it, but adults think it just so much nonsense, but it will get by.

"Ridin' Fool," Bob Steele. They are talking too much in westerns instead of doing something. Our Saturday night crowd wants action.

"Sit Tight." Not a special but has the Joe E. Brown and Winnie Lightner brand of comedy. It pleases the majority.

"Princess and Plumber." Silly story; this sort of thing will not make a star of Charles Farrell.

"Abraham Lincoln." Well produced and Walter Huston excellent as Lincoln. Business disappointing.

"Man Who Came Back," Gaynor-Farrell. A very dramatic story for this team, but they are equal to it. Played it very late, drew only fair.

"Third Alarm." Pleasing fire melodrama with bits of comedy. Played it with our Fire Department which helped.

"Texas Ranger," Buck Jones. Much better than his last two westerns. Action, suspense, thrills; that's what the people want.

"The Payoff." Very entertaining crook story well acted and it pleases.

"Outward Bound." Highly imaginative story of after death, older people seem to enjoy it but young folks think it the bunk.

"Stolen Heaven," Carroll - Holmes. This seemed to please old and young, well-acted and produced.

"Right to Love." Very dramatic story, well produced and acted but does not draw.

"Rango." To much monkey business, that's what the customers said. A good two-reel subject stretched into eight reels. No business.

"Finn and Haddie." Comedy drama, has its entertaining moments, but there are too many drinking scenes.

"River's End." Northwest mounted police story. Very good. Had drama, suspense, comedy.

"The Bad Man," Walter Huston." Something different in a western. Good entertainment and pleases all.—J. L. Seiter, Selma Theatre, Selma, Cal.

[Editor's Note: Probably no department of any publicotion ever outlived all of its friends. "What the Picture Did for Me" was a valued section of Exhibitors Herald for many years. However, with the passing of time and the experience of its labors, The Herald has come to what for the majority of its readers are deemed better deportments of service to the same end.]

Too Much!

JUST A FEW REVIEWS TO LET OTHER poor exhibitors know what they are in for. The main trouble lately has been that there has been too much comedy in the features and too much drama in the comedies, and the news reels have been too much dialogue and not enough news.

"Dance Fools Dance," with Joan Crawford. Fine and production is good, but the gangster story did not please my crowd.

"It Pays to Advertise." But does it pay an exhibitor to advertise this cheaply produced little 60-minute comedy with no stars in it as a feature? I doubt it. Carole Lombard, Norman Foster, Skeets Gallagher and Eugene Palette would make a good supporting cast for some star.

"Playboy of Paris." Great disappointment after seeing Chevalier in big musical pictures. Another Paramount super-production with "cheapness" written all over it. Not a thing to it. Would be a good slapstick comedy to go with some features. No songs, no music, no sense to it.

"Great Meadow," with Eleanor Boardman and John Mack Brown. Very good. Too much grimness and education in it. Too many babies, too many killings, too many scalpings, too much history. Needed more romance and comedy.

"Ladies Love Brutes." Got this one old as a substitute but it was produced when they were making good pictures and it pleased a mighty good crowd. George Bancroft, Fredric March and Mary Astor were great. They spent some money on the production.

"The Lady Refuses." Here's a sure cure for insomnia. Not much crowd and nobody liked it. Either we are getting mighty hard to please or the pictures are getting might weak. Which is it?

"Young Sinners," Fox. Look out, small town boys. This is sure hot. It even made the customers grin and wink at each other in the big city theatres where I caught it. Lots of petting going on. Good picture but too hot. You might show it for ladies only on one night and men only the next.

"Seed," Universal. Not as big as Universal is blowing it. Little better than program stuff. Just talk, talk, talk. No action. Genevieve Tobin and Lois Wilson are great and John Boles is fair. Clever bunch of kids in it. Gets tiresome before it is over.

"June Moon," Paramount. This picture was a very unpleasant surprise to me as it received good reviews from all the trade papers and movie magazines. My customers did not like it and said so.

"Ladies' Man," Paramount. This is a personal triumph for William Powell. He has a very weak part but makes it strong and gets the sympathy of the audience, so that they are disappointed when he is killed, although that is the logical ending. Carole Lombard and Kay Francis are good and Olive Tell great. Drew well and pleased. Swell customes and well produced.

"Just Imagine." This novelty musical comedy made a big hit with a good crowd. Lasts 1 hour and 45 minutes and has lots of comedy and some good songs and dances. Elaborate scenery and very clever. Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Albertson and John Garrick just fair, El Brendel and Marjorie White fine in comedy parts.

Note.—Just read in the Herald where Col. Katz has ordered a 25 per cent cut in salaries in all his theatres on account of hard times. Did not say anything about cutting prices on pictures that exhibitors bought during better times. Why not?—L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

Universal to Reach Season's Production Peak This Month

Production of features and shorts is scheduled to reach its peak for the year during the month of June, Carl Laemmle, Jr., general manager of Universal City, states. Universal's production head is in New York conferring with the sales department. Seven feature productions will be in work this month. Four of them are already started.

DEAR HERALD:

We haven't seen 10 minutes of sunshine since we came into this state nearly four weeks ago, and right now, if we could see half an hour of good old Nebraska sunshine (and what we mean is "sunshine") we'd sing the "Anvil Chorus," and the aria from "Queen Esther," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "Sweet Adeline" or what would you like to hear. If anyone tells you that Wisconsin has the most delightful climate of any state in the Union, don't dispute it, but ask him what season he is talking about.

Our judgment is that Wisconsin has a delightful climate in June, July, August, September and October, outside of that you want to remember that Nebraska is located between the Missouri river and the Black Hills, and further deponent sayeth not, for it isn't necessary. We can hear George Schutz say, "Yes, he's still blowing on Nebraska." Well, who wouldn't?

Working Fast in Hollywood

It's astonishing how fast they work on the screen nowadays. The other night we saw a picture where a woman threw her arms around his neck and made love to her husband's brother 15 minutes after she met him for the first time. We like speed but that's going a little too durn fast for us people of the old school. Back "When Grandma Was a Girl" we worked on a girl for three years making love to her and then she didn't fall for us, and we worked hard too, and six months after we gave it up as a bad job she married a Hoosier democrat and today she's got nine children, 11 grandchildren and three coon dogs. Back in those days they weren't so darn slow after they once got started. But speaking of Wisconsin, we've got this to say for these Badgers, they are about the finest bunch of folks we care to meet. They treat you just like you were one of the family provided you don't ask whether it is a home product or came from the brewery, and, being a Nebraskan, we are not overly particular about the origin.

But let's get back to that picture. We didn't blame Esther Ralston for falling in love with Lawrence Tibbett, for her husband was a despicable cad and Lawrence was a likeable hobo, and the casting director who selected Lawrence for that part certainly knew his beeksteak from pigs knuckles. Lawrence didn't want Esther to cuddle up to him quite so quick and quite so close, since she was his brother's wife, but if the husband was as we saw him on the screen, the "cuddlin'" was all right and we would be in favor of it. Then, who could deny Esther a little cuddlin' anyhow.

We don't remember the name of that picture, but you better hunt it up and go get it. This is another instance of our failing memory. We had the bellhop hunting for an hour for our hat the other morning and he finally inquired, "Whose hat is that on your head?"

The Dog Chased Him In

It is mighty surprising to drive up to a theatre and have a lady meet you at the door and say, "Well, how do you do Mr. Jenkins, you come with me out to the back yard, I want to show you something." And then for her to take you out to the backyard and then call to her husband and say, "Come here and see what the dogs chased in." That's what happened over at Mauston when we called on Mr. and Mrs. Sussycki of the Gail theatre, two people we never met before in our life. Mrs. Sussycki spotted us as soon as we got out of the car, and that was her introduction. Did we take supper with them? We did. Did we stay all night there? We did. Did we ever meet any nicer people? Now don't be silly, we didn't, and that's only half of it, we don't care to.

The next day we drove over to Reedsburg and called on O. V. Kelly of the Badger theatre who took us up to his house to meet Mrs. Kelly, two Badgers who would make mighty good Nebraskans, and when we say that that's aplenty. Our next stop was at Kilbourn where we met our old friend, Joe Winninger. Joe is in a spot where he will undoubtedly do fine business during the tourist season but,—

When winter comes, the cold North breeze
Will pile the snow drifts to his knees,
And we'll just bet that guy will freeze,
When winter comes.

But by that time we hope Joe has made enough so he can retire and live happy ever after. That's our wish for Joe.

Southward by East

When we got over to Fox Lake, F. H. Baker of the Home theatre said to us, "Come on, we are going out and play nine holes of golf." We wanted to throw our arms around his neck and kiss him. Say, it must cost that guy a lot of money for golf balls, for, believe it or not, when he drives South he knocks the window lights out in Madison, and when he drives North his ball lands in Lake Superior. That's why Lake Superior looks so white all the time. If you want to know about the game ask Baker, we just haven't got the heart to tell you.

We had a fine visit with J. E. Wragginis of the Classic theatre at Waupun. Waupun is where the penitentiary is located and we didn't care to tarry there too long, although a penitentiary has a familiar atmosphere and gives us a sort of a "homecoming" feeling, but we never could get on the soft side of the wardens.

C. W. Doctor of the May theatre at Mayville, has the keenest ballyhoo outfit we have ever seen. It is an Austin car all dolled up like a million dollars, and across the top he has a big sign board carrying the announcement of his coming attraction. On each side of the car he has had painted a picture of the HERALD plaque so natural that we thought it was the plaque itself until we examined it. It's the neatest job we ever saw. C. W. is mighty proud of his theatre, and he has a right to be, for he has left nothing out of the house that would make for the comfort and pleasure of his patrons. We wish the woods were full of just such theatremen as he. He is a delightful gentleman to meet and if we never get back to call on him again it will be just our hard luck.

And Now a Scrapper

The only thing we could find wrong with August C. Berkholtz of the Mermac theatre at West Bend, is that he doesn't play golf. He has one redeeming feature, however, he likes to fish, and that's all that saves him.

When it comes to pictures, even the producers must take their hats off to A. C. He knows pictures from Dan to Bersheba and from Richard Dix to Bill Rogers and Clara Bow. He's a mighty strong factor in the MPTO of Wisconsin, and every state needs a lot of guys just like him, for he's a scrapper from the first gong until they throw in the sponge. May his numbers increase.

Bill Roob of the Grand theatre at Port Washington, pretty nearly made us sore when we called on him. He said "Eh, Eh, you are back to get some more of our fish and beer are you?" Doggone a guy who will bawl a fellow out like that when there is nothing to it. We said to him, "Bill, it's just too bad that they didn't pick you before frost, you'd have made a wonderful specimen, but what was that remark about fish and beer?" Bill knows we don't monkey with either one of 'em—much.

John Steenport has just opened a beautiful new theatre at Chilton of which he is mighty proud, and he has a right to be. He also has a wife to be proud of too for she can cook corned beef and cabbage and strawberry short cake like nobody's business. We know what we are talking about for John took us up to his house for dinner, and what we did to that dinner was aplenty. If you want to see a nice theatre go to Chilton and see the Chilton, then be sure to meet John, for you will like him.

When you are driving the highways up here and come to a building with a sign "Dance Pavilion" you can go in, and if you want to, you can bathe your tonsils in an amber colored fluid that would make Pabst and Schlitz wonder why they ever left their native land. We never could understand why they left anyhow. Minnesota will be next.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

The Gypsies Are Still Gypsies!

WHEN the dictionary defined the word Gypsy, they could just as well have put the word Showman underneath and let the one definition do for both.

"A member of a wandering race, now found in every part of the world."

Doesn't that sound like a description of modern showmen? You bet your boots it does. And what brought it about? Well, lots of things, but chiefly the circuits. Not the circuit heads of years ago, like Percy Williams, B. F. Keith or E. F. Albee. No indeed. They used to keep a man in one spot for many years. They had the right idea, but the "high-powered" chiefs of today know better.

Perhaps their knowing so much more about handling men and theatres accounts in no small way for the deplorable condition that some of the circuits are in right now. Especially in those theatres acquired from independents which were such good profitmakers before they went "chain."

As a recent visitor remarked, "Too many executives who know little or nothing about running theatres are directing the game of chess being played all over the country with the manager and his family as the pawns."

Shifting. Transfering. Hiring. Firing. Switching. Seems to be the order all along the line. And when a new district or division man picks up the reins it starts all over again.

Home-life means nothing to them. Families, probably mean even less. Breaking off friendships in a community after many years. Dragging the youngsters out of one school and into another. No time to get acquainted with their own wives and children. Is this an existence? Like hell it is.

It has never been our aim to lead the school in singing "hard times" blues. On the contrary, we've tried to spread the gospel of sunshine and better times. But even that becomes monotonous when one stops to consider the general trend of a business which can be so successful if the men responsible for the running of the theatres were given half a chance to get settled.

How on earth can a man ever hope to make his theatre a financial success when he is constantly being shifted into new and strange surroundings. Before he can get his bearings his home office starts to ride him because the receipts are not as large as they were a year or two back. And then, if he is half-way successful in starting it mounting, he gets one of "those things" in the form of his district or division chief telling him of the great "chance" opportunity is offering if he will leave Sunday night for Palooka. Applesauce, baloney and plain common lies.

So off he goes to tell "the little woman" and try to convince her that it "may" mean more money, advancement, etc. Then, together, they start to break up what was supposed to be a happy home, and like Arabs, "they silently steal away." And the same farce is repeated several times a year.

It was bad enough in the days when a manager was paid something like a decent salary. Money can temper lots of things. But now, with salaries slashed so low that one must be a miracle man to make both ends meet, it becomes more than a farce; it's a tragedy. And after they trek to some strange and unknown community, they even have to put up a fight to get back the money they spent to move their furniture and belongings. Super-efficiency picks that last item to pieces and tries to talk them out of it. And how!!!

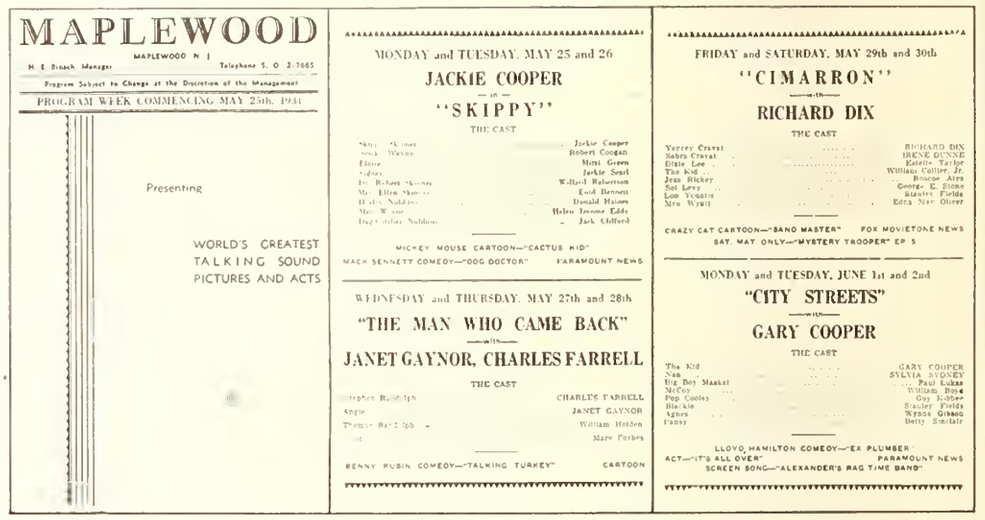
It seems about time that theatre chains got down to solid rock and stopped this switching nonsense. They have no right, regardless of what authority is given them, to uproot a manager and his family and move them around. They have as much right to a home and a family as anyone else, and to subject them to the rank inefficiency of a pack of so-called executives is not only ruining these men for show business, but ruining the theatres as well.

"Chick."

What About Your Programs?

IN an effort to stimulate the use of house organs, or programs as they are better known, we start, with this issue, to reproduce a series of different programs.

We have two separate objects in view for doing this. First, to show you what other fellows are doing, and, second, to encourage you to improve your own house organ, if you have one, or to start using them if they are not part of your present scheme of things.



In selecting the first group we made no special effort to pick any particular three. As a matter of fact, we made cuts of a dozen selected at random from the more recent arrivals at Club headquarters. But this week's selections reveal three separate and distinct fashions in theatre programs. They represent today's trend.

Next week we will select three more programs containing many outstanding features. We trust they will prove helpful to others. If your theatre is not sending us a program please put us on the mailing list now. Showmen who want copies of any programs reproduced in this series should write to Club headquarters. We will gladly comply with all such requests.

The Maplewood is the type generally referred to as the "class" program. The reasons for this classification are plain. It carries an unusually neat cover without any cuts or copy other than institutional stuff. The attractions are then carried out in the legitimate style, with the star and title as the head and the cast of characters listed below. Surrounding shorts are likewise listed in a neat fashion. A theatre with a healthy patronage generally likes this kind of program because it is not meant to "sell," but merely to inform the patron what is playing and who is in the cast.

The back cover of this program (not shown here) carried just four coming attractions and a blank request form for mailing list.

We have never seen the Maplewood Theatre, but from the make-up of their program we should expect to find an unusually fine playhouse, run as smooth and dignified as their house organ. We are going to try to influence Mr. Broach to give us a brief article dealing with his reasons for a program of this type. We rather fancy his viewpoint will be found interesting to many others.

MAPLEWOOD

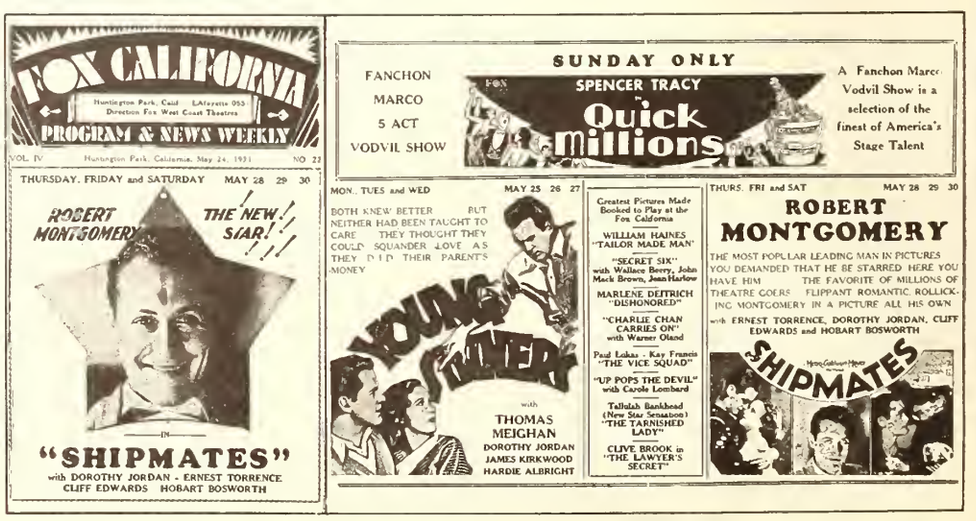
The State Newsette is just what the name implies. Besides listing its shows, it carries intimate gossip about Screenland and items that might be of local interest to the theatre's patronage. The use of scene and star cuts helps to "sell" certain stars and pictures coming to the theatre, thereby building up interest and possibly creating the desire to witness the productions. This theatre, however, improves on the general run of this type of program by boxing and segregating the attractions current that week. Many a house spoils the effect of the newssette house organ by running their current attractions through the four pages and making it difficult to know what is playing.



This type of program runs second in popularity to the "all cut" style. We find that the majority of houses seem to prefer the lines of least resistance when it comes to making up a program.

We rather like the "newsette" style ourselves, providing the manager of the house has the time to make up his copy with an eye to interesting items, etc.

The Fox California Program and News Weekly does not live up to its latter title so far as the front cover and inside spread are concerned, but it does endeavor to carry out a little in the line of news on its read cover, not shown on this cut.

No denying the emphasis placed on the Montgomery picture by reason of the "smash" it gets on the front cover. Yet, the attractions on the inside do not suffer because of position, as the reproduction will clearly show. Instead of letting the one-day Sunday picture die for want of space, this showman used excellent judgment and arranged his program so that all three attractions were well played up. While it may appear a little crowded here, don't forget that in actual size the proportion was just so much larger. This applies to the amount of white space, as well as to type.

The box in the center of the inside spread carrying the coming attractions is likewise well laid out and easy to read. All these "little" things help make a good program better.

Alden Uses School Honor Roll As Plug On Kiddie Business

While not entirely new, C. J. Alden deserves a lot of credit for working out a great little slant in connection with the Kiddie Business at the Fox Martin Theatre in Globe, Ariz.

Mr. Alden with the co-operation of his local newspaper made an arrangement with the school whereby every youngster who was successful in getting their names on the Honor Roll was given a free ticket to the theatre. In addition to the fine publicity the theatre secured by reason of this tie-up and the emphasis placed upon it by the school teachers and school authorities, the theatre soon became a household word when parents were asking their youngsters whether they were going to make the Honor Roll that week and also get the free ticket to the theatre.

To _____

In appreciation of your efforts and excellent work in attaining the _____ Honor Roll of your school,

The Arizona Record & Fox Martin Theatre

Mick[illegible] Mouse Club extends to you, this invitation to be your guest at the Martin Theatre at Globe, Ariz. _____ 1931

Fox Martin Theatre

By _____

We are showing with this story a copy of the card given by the principal to the youngsters who were fortunate enough to get on the Honor Roll and if it forms a basis for a similar idea to any of our brother members or managers, then we are sure they will be grateful to Mr. Alden for sending along this fine piece of work.

We have heard so many interesting stories about the activities of the manager of the Fox Martin Theatre in Globe, Ariz., that we are hoping that this will be the start-off for many interesting stories about the work he is doing out there.

Soffer Publicizes His House Through A Newspaper Column

The Club has long stressed the possibility of managers tying up with their local editors by the contribution of a column of movie news, and the inestimable value arising from making such a connection. This, of course, applies to communities where the local sheet does not have a man on regular movie assignment.

The case we have in mind at this particular time happens to be right in the little old city of New York, in the lower East Side where there is published a community newspaper by the name of "East Side News."

Bob Soffer has been manager of the Hollywood Theatre for the past two years. The Hollywood is located at Avenue A and 6th street and was built a few years ago by the M. & S. Circuit operating a chain of houses in Manhattan. The circuit was subsequently taken over by Manhattan Playhouses, Inc.

During Soffer's regime at the Hollywood the editor of the "East Side News" came to be a regular patron at the house. He and Soffer grew friendly and in the course of events the editor invited Soffer to contribute a column of theatre and movie news. And so he has under the head "Catering Entertainment to the East Side." The column also carries his by-line, as manager of the Hollywood Theatre.

Soffer has different ideas of how an East Side theatre should be run. He does not believe in the old East Side custom of plastering inside and outside of a house with all kinds of signs. So, in his column he proceeds to tell customers and prospective customers his method of getting over a message to his public. He also told them how he has renovated the entire house, and how he proposed to keep it in its new state of cleanliness. His advertising, he stated, would be based on "Get your customer today and get him back tomorrow," not "get the sucker today and never mind tomorrow."

The success of the Hollywood for the past two years, Soffer declares, has been built on one word, "Good Will," which he defines as consisting of good pictures, a clean theatre, and advertising which never misrepresents or leads to deception. Soffer contends you can no longer put electric chairs and robots in front of an East Side house and expect East Siders to fall for a ticket.

Oke! Bob. We agree with all your points and want to congratulate you for getting such fine results. We know about your house and also know about some of the problems you have to contend with in your locality. More power to you. But, Bob, that little column has helped you lots, hasn't it? That's the point we wish to get over the Club readers—if there is a possible chance of getting such a column in your local paper, providing, of course, that conditions warrant it, by all means don't lose any time in contacting the managing editor. You can't lose. Let's hear some more about the Hollywood, Bob.

Old Circus Stunt Is Effective Lobby Plug For M. M. Conner

A secret stunt imparted to him by an old time showman, the old circus mystery of "The Floating Head," formed the idea behind an exceedingly interesting and attention-getting lobby display put on by M. M. Conner, manager of the Tower Theatre, Chicago Theatre Building, Chicago, Ill., in connection with the showing of "The Bat Whispers."

We are reproducing a cut of Conner's novel display, made entirely by himself from odds and ends of material around the theatre without one cent of cost. It is a display which can be used on almost any picture of the same type as "Bat Whispers."

The secret of the display is in the fact that the body lies on a horizontal plane at the eye level of the observer, and is hidden from sight by the bat's wings. The inside of the cabinet is covered with black velvet which makes it impossible to see anything, no matter how close one gets to the display. The spider webs, made of thread, and an old broom in the corners touched it up. A barker was engaged to give a speil which called attention to the display and tied it in with the coming picture. The display attracted a large crowd.

Conner tells us that he has created many lobby displays but this particular one was responsible for more comment than any he has ever put on. While Conner does not furnish us with detail as to just what material he used to construct the mysterious figure, we are sure that he will be glad to pass along further information should other members so desire. It's a very clever little stunt, M. M. and the Club acknowledges it with thanks. Keep us posted as to your doings, Conner.

"BOBBY JONES" SHORTS BREAKING PAR!

Charlie Carroll

Few short subjects offer the possibilities for local tie-ups as does that of the Bobby Jones series. Chiefly because of the widespread interest in golf during the past few years, until now, practically everybody plays the game or talks about it.

It is no secret here in the East that the Stanley Theatre in Jersey City has had some mighty tough sleighing to keep in the black, and, likewise, it is no secret that Charlie Carroll deserves more than mere mention in the Movie Hall of Fame for his untiring efforts to bring business into this theatre.

Followers of the Club pages know about as much of Carroll's activities as we could undertake to say here; so we'll just assume that, knowing this showman, you are ready to read about his latest efforts on behalf of the Stanley Theatre.

Jones at Own Tourney

Warner Brothers Grab Bobby, Golf King, to Grace Tournament Named in His Honor, Sponsored by The Jersey Journal, Stanley Theatre, The Sport Shop and Teterboro Golf Club

An attempt is being made to have Bobby Jones, peer of present day golfers, start off the Bobby Jones Golf Tournament, which is being sponsored by The Jersey Journal, Stanley Theatre, The Sport Shop of Journal Square and the Teterboro Golf Club. Jones is expected to be in the East around tournament time. If he is, entrants in the tourney at the Teterboro course will see the golf master there at the tee-off.

Although the tournament will not open until June 30, the Teterboro Club is already wiping out a big slice of the entry list. Over 1100 names have been received, for a heavy play is expected during the three days of the tournament, June 30, July 1 and 2. C. B. Reed, manager of the club, is personally supervising the conducting of the tourney.

The tournament, the first Bobby Jones golf tournament to be staged in the Hackensack Meadows section, will give a series of golf contests, the prize lists which will be announced soon. All entrants in the tournament and readers of The Jersey Journal will receive information on various services and hints about what to look for in each of the Stanley Theatre and the questions will be answered through the columns of The Jersey Journal.

Quarters in the above have been established for the tourney, it is understood that much interest has been aroused and promising a big list of entries.

Inter-County Golf Tourney To Be Staged at Teterboro

Competition, for Both Men and Women, Will Start at Hasbrouck Heights Course on June 20—Will Be Held in Conjunction With Bobby Jones' Educational Movie Shorts.

Plans are under way for an Inter-county Golf Tournament to be conducted at the Teterboro Golf Club course, Hasbrouck Heights, on June 20, 21 and 22. C. B. Reed, manager, and Jimmy Martinez, professional, at Teterboro will join with the Stanley Theatre, the Journal Square Sport Shop and The Jersey Journal in pulling over this event, which will be tournament in New Jersey golfing circles, and is expected to prove one of the biggest of its kind in the East.

The event has already been named the "Bobby Jones Tournament," and will be run in conjunction with the series of Bobby Jones educational golf movies which start to perform at the Stanley Theatre next

Fans' Interest Rising in "Bobby Jones Tournament"

Open Miniature Course at Stanley Theatre Tonight

In connection with the Bobby Jones golf program arranged for Hudson and Bergen counties by the Stanley Theatre, the Sport Shop and The Jersey Journal, the formal opening of a miniature golf course will take place on the mezzanine of the local Loew house tonight.

The event, that of initialing this indoor thrill is to help boost interest in the big events scheduled for next month when the Teterboro course will be turned over to golfers for the "Bobby Jones

Golf Competition at Teterboro Course Next Month Promises to Be Big Affair.

With all preliminary plans completed, work on the "Bobby Jones Golf Tournament," to be held at Teterboro next month, is going ahead with a rush. This tournament, which will be one of the biggest golf events in this county, is sponsored by The Jersey Journal, Stanley Theatre, The Sport Shop and the Teterboro Golf Club, of which Charles H. Reed is present manager.

RED WINGS IN EASY WIN OVER

Which brings us back to the Bobby Jones golf series. So, starting off from scratch, we want you to know a little of how Carroll has put this single reel classic over to tremendous returns. Mind you, a single reel subject that actually brings in the customers even if they are not so keen for the current feature. There's showmanship with a vengeance. But it's true, nevertheless, as witness the fact that telephone calls particularly asking the time this reel goes on are constantly coming into the theatre.

On the outside of the theatre proper, he effected a great tie-up with a well-known golf club to run a Bobby Jones Open Golf Tournament. This was handled in conjunction with the local paper and several representative sports and golf shops. After the tournament we'll tell you how it worked out.

He also arranged attractive window displays and cut-outs for use in many local stores and the cut here illustrating one of these displays will bear out our statement that they were mighty attractive. Right? Just picture the number of golf enthusiasts who stopped to look this over and then, probably, made up their minds to see "how it ought to be done." He certainly worked in plenty of plugs for the picture in this window.

In the lobby of the theatre you will note a smart looking display of golf club prizes with a painted display as a background to set off the line-up of the clubs. On the opposite side he featured another display with a lobby frame calling attention to "Golf Land" on their mezzanine floor. Here again he displayed the gold equipment which was to be part of the prizes for the Open Golf Tournament mentioned previously. Naturally, these angles helped to increase interest in the tournament, and that is exactly what they wanted. It is obvious that, in view of the large enrollment for the event, it would get tremendous publicity from the papers, and that in turn would help the short subject tremendously. Altogether, this campaign showed every sign of having been carefully and smartly worked out. No single detail, as far as we can see, was forgotten or passed up.

Next we show you the "Golf Land" lay-out of their mezzanine floor. Isn't it a pip? A regular 18-hole course with all the usual trimmings to make a round of play interesting and entertaining. And again, he did not overlook the plug for the short. Note the cut-out prominently displayed in the center of the entire lay-out.

As for his direct plugs in the theatre itself, perhaps the most effective was the trailer in which he worked up considerable interest in both the exhibit on the mezzanine and the tournament at the Club. And, of course, it gave him an opportunity of plugging the series from every golf-appeal angle. As for how he took advantage of these angles, you ought to be able to judge for yourself by this time.

Before closing we want you to know that the following was also included as part of his campaign: A Letter-writing contest. Exhibition by a golf pro on the mezzanine. Radio announcements about the series and the tournament. And many other slants all tending to bring direct box-office reaction for the hard work Charlie Carroll and his associates put in to make this golf series a money-maker for the theatre.

Matt Press Fashion Show Garners Large Amount Free Space

Matt Press of the Saenger Theatre, Hattiesburg, Miss., got a fine break when he effected a fashion revue tie-up with one of the prominent stores.

The store announced the fashion revue in a four-column ad on the Saturday prior to Wednesday's date of revue. Copy in this ad read: "Easter Fashion Revue displaying on living models the newest modes and distinctive footwear in conjunction with the showing of Greta Garbo in 'Inspiration' at the Saenger, Wed., April 1, 8:30 P. M." A picture of Garbo in the center of the page and cuts of stylish dresses and shoes surrounding it, set off the ad nicely.

Two other ads, each a three-column, carried co-operative copy about the fashion revue in conjunction with the showing of Garbo's "Inspiration."

The entire cost of the ads was paid for by the store. And the store also co-operated by devoting part of their window displays to stills from the picture and announcement cards about the fashion revue and picture.

Matt has always managed to grab valuable space through his showmanlike tie-ups and this one was no exception. Shoot along more like it, Press. We'll always find room for them.

Phelan's Ballyhoo On Charley's Aunt Attracts Attention

Tommy Phelan of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., employed a man, impersonating a woman (dressed as "Charley's Aunt"), two days prior to the showing of this picture—March 27-28.

"Charley's Aunt" paraded the streets of Long Branch, carrying a suitcase on which appropriate copy was lettered.

This ballyhoo attracted a great deal of attention and undoubtedly created advance interest in the picture.

Although this is just a "short-shot" from Tommy, you all know about this more elaborate activities from stories carried from time to time on these pages. Maybe we should have held this one until his next stunt came along, but it sounded good enough to push into print on its own merits. While the idea was simple, it was the way he handled it that made it all the more worth while.

While we are on the subject of Tommy we'd like to say a word about the post cards he uses on his mailing list. They are nicely gotten up and headed: "What's Going On At Your Paramount Long Branch Theatre." The balance of the card is devoted to advertising the entire week's attractions. He also sends along a trick card on William Powell called a "Mind Photo" (which, by the way, bears the copyright of Clubmember Gustave Carlson of Superior, Wisc.), that we think is a good little gag. The idea is to look at it while counting 40, then close your eyes and look at the photo again. The photo will then appear greatly enlarged.

That certainly was some fresh air taxi you used on "Amos 'n' Andy," Tommy, and we don't doubt for a minute it made a good ballyhoo. Keep us informed as to your doings, Tom, and the Club will continue to pass on your tips to your brother members.

Free Newspaper Ad Is Given Creamer As Part Of Tie-Up Gag

Free newspaper space is plentifully garnered by John W. Creamer, manager of the Palace Theatre for Fox in Muscatine, Iowa, and not only does Creamer grab off newspaper space, but he also boosts kiddie attendance.

Two different days in the first part of the week, the local newspaper runs, an ad for Creamer which announces: "Kiddies—Watch for Coupon, Thursday. Cut it out and fill in. Then with five cents you will be admitted to the matinee performance of 'Spell of the Circus' at the Fox Palace Theatre Saturday Afternoon."

This ad is then followed up by a large ad, carrying cuts and coupon, as we are showing, that is run on Thursday and Friday of the week. You will note that the paper asks of the reader whether or not the reader is a subscriber to the sheet. The stunt of printing the free ticket has met with wonderful favor from the youngsters, and the parents as well—and has resulted in lots of good-will along with the publicity and kiddie business. Perhaps you can make use of Creamer's slant.

It's not only on kiddie business that Creamer devoted his showmanship. He has other shows as well to sell. Recently he used the summons card gag to plug "Little Caesar." This went over well. Next he used a special card herald to plug "Rango." It was printed in green and handed out to the patrons as they left the theatre.

A tie-up of value with the local newspaper is one in which words are scattered in the classified ads. Readers are informed, in another ad that also carries the title of the picture, that certain words, listed in the explanatory ad are scattered about the classified page and when put together will form a sentence. This gag is run every day, the first five persons bringing the correct answers to the gag are given passes. This is a stunt that you, too, perhaps can use to excellent advantage.

These activities—but a few of Creamer's work—have helped him to put across his house to extra business. Creamer, as most of the Club followers and members know, has always been active and interested in the activities of his town. That he knows the town very well is more than seen. And we hope, in view of his work, that we'll hear from him again soon.

The Happy Medium for Ushers!

It seems to be a mania with lots of managers to either overtrain or undertrain their service staffs (better known as ushers). Why not seek the happy medium? Pay more attention to their dress and appearance. Are they clean or shabby looking when they go on duty? Are they badly in need of a haircut? Are their shoes shined every day?

The idea of making West Pointers out of ushers is bad dope (except in New York, where some of the "de luxers" still herd the customers like cattle for no good reason). It is far better to make them put on a sunny, smiling appearance than to be snappy and short-tempered. They should be liked and respected by the patrons. If they are, those standing-room-only nights won't be nightmares any more.

And as for your assistant: Have you ever adopted the idea of putting him into a tuxedo? It's good dope and makes a decided impression on the people coming into the house, besides dressing up the whole theatre by reason of his floating around looking after the aisle ushers and things in general.

Every one on your staff, from front doorman and cashier right through to the doorman and ushers, should radiate a cheery, pleasant atmosphere. It will create more good-will than all the overtrained army type could ever hope for.

Corcoran Uses Pony And Cart With Good Results on "Skippy"

An excellent advance campaign on "Skippy" was recently waged by Ed Corcoran, advertising manager of Keith's Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., which, for results, more than repaid this active showman for his efforts.

Using the pony and cart idea as an attention-getter by way of contrast in this era of auto transportation, Corcoran had four kiddies as passengers, dressed the same as the principal characters in the picture. The pony and kids toured the main thoroughfares of the city and the stunt proved to be a corking method of obtaining publicity.

In addition to the pony cart Corcoran had a radio sound truck tour the city, stopping at schools where newspaper size heralds on "Skippy" were distributed for a "Skippy" cartoon color contest. Every child sending in one of the color cartoons was provided with a single ticket to the showing of the picture.

Corcoran also secured some fine window publicity, getting one of the largest windows in Gimbels for a display of "Skippy" dolls and life-size cutouts of Jackie Cooper, Robert Coogan, Jackie Searl and Mitzi Green. A score of music and bookstore windows were also obtained to excellent results.

Additional publicity was gained through the cooperation of "The Public Ledger," the local newspaper which daily carries the "Skippy" cartoon. A "Skippy" banner was placed on each of the paper's delivery trucks which circulated in every section of the city. Numerous radio broadcasts were also arranged.

Good work, Ed. The Club congratulates you for putting over this fine campaign. For the benefit of members we are reproducing a photo showing the pony turnout parked in front of Keith's Theatre. Also note the attractive "Skippy" front. Thanks for sending this in, E. F., and we know you will continue to keep us posted as to your doings down in Philly.

Club Index For Month of May

Ever since we inaugurated this monthly feature on the Club pages our members and readers have found it very useful. Naturally, if they want to locate some particular type of exploitation or stunt they need only refer to the index to select what they want as a guide.

It is suggested that this issue be kept handy so that the index will be available when wanted; then, you need only make sure that your weekly issues are filed in order of publication to make it still easier to find the stunt you select from the index.

Suggestions to improve or widen the usefulness of this feature will be welcome. If the listings can be arranged in any different form, or some other method of publication will assist you more than this, just pass along the idea and we will gladly give it every possible consideration.

The Round Table Club is a service feature of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and anything we can do to increase the service we are trying to render will help us to help you. This is YOUR department. Use it for all it is worth!

The Real Club Spirit!
"All For One And One For All"

Safety Pins Helped His Little Accident, Says Leonard Gordon

The safety-pin on a card gag was effectively used in connection with a showing of "The Little Accident" by Leonard Gordon, of the Palace Theatre, Newport News, Va. Gordon does not take any credit for originating this idea, but tells us that he got it, copy and all, out of the press book. He just wanted to let the Club know that it brought his house the much desired publicity for this particular picture. That's the spirit, Leonard; press book or not, let the Club know when any kind of a gag proves effective.

The beggar theme of "Kismet" was also successfully used by Gordon in exploiting that picture in Newport News. He made a tie-up with the bakers of "Wonder Bread," who made up a quantity of miniature loaves to be distributed at the theatre. Attached to each loaf by a rubber band was a tag bearing appropriate advertising of the coming attraction.

Thanks, Gordon, for sending in both of the above gags and we hope you will keep the Club posted as to your activities down in Newport News. Glad to hear that the Herald release chart is as you state, "a God-send." That's what they all say.

Comic Twists Are Outstanding Feature of Brown's Ballyhoos

For a novelty ballyhoo gag we would recommend special mention in the Hall of Fame for Russell F. Brown, manager of the Fox McDonald Theatre in Eugene, Ore.

Being a great believer of this type of show-merchandising, he generally adds a good comical twist to all of his activities and these comical twists invariably direct attention and revenue to his box office.

In citing some of his more recent activities we would like to call attention to the gag he engineered on "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" when he arranged with a plumber to set a bathtub with running water in the center of an unused lobby and erected a most efficient sign above the bathtub reading: "Pity these poor fish. They won't be able to see Buster Keaton in Parlor, Bedroom and Bath at the Fox McDonald," etc.

As further propaganda for this attraction he had a local department store set up a three-room apartment in one of their windows consisting of a parlor, a bedroom with twin beds and a bathroom. Brown furnished the cut-out figures to help make the scene more realistic.

To plug Laurel & Hardy's popular short-subject, "Chicken, Come Home," he pulled a real funny one by making up 12 pair of cambric red trousers and putting them on 12 lively, white leghorn chickens and releasing them on the main street. The slant for this stunt was that in the pocket of each one of the chickens' red trousers there was concealed a pair of passes for the theatre.

We cannot take the attitude of recommending this in general because we know some towns where the manager would end up in the hoose-gow if he ever attempted to pull a gag of this kind, but if you are sitting pretty in your own community and could get away with it, you might try it as something to start the cash customers laughing and talking.

We'd like to hear some more of Russell Brown's activities as we know from Eddy Eccles and the other West Coast boys that the McDonald Theatre in Oregon has been clicking with some marvelous showmanship. Apparently they knew what they were talking about as the little yarn will bear it out. What do you say, Rus? Can we look forward to some more of your stuff? Thanks in advance, any way.

Buchanan Employs Newsies To Exploit "Connecticut Yankee"

Liberty magazine carriers were effectively used by H. C. Buchanan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Superior, Wis., when he exploited "Connecticut Yankee."

Arrangements were made with the local magazine representative to have the boys (45 in all) pin a 11 by 14 card on their sales bag. The card carried an appropriate message. 1,500 heralds were inserted in the magazine at the news depot so that all Libertys reaching Superior had herald inserts. For their part in the campaign the boys were given a theatre party.

The remaining heralds, 500 in all, were distributed on the main street and special cards were placed below all Western Union clocks in all department stores.

Another means of publicity, one of the best he ever used Buchanan tells us, was an Austin car placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre. The accompanying photo shows the midget car and the special battlement front on marquee.

A nice tie-up, Harvey, and the Club thanks you for sending in the idea. We agree with you about the little car. They never fail to get attention. By using the Liberty boys we know you secured a wide and important circulation of the message you wanted to get over. Keep us posted on your doings, won't you?

Sherred Promoting "Kiwanis Week" As Good Will Campaign

A fine example of building community good will is brought to the Club's attention through a letter from Carl B. Sherred, manager of the Mishler Theatre, Altoona, Pa., and it is a cinch for us to see by the enclosed newspaper clippings that Sherred is being backed 100 per cent by citizens of his town.

A year ago Sherred started in Altoona what he calls "Kiwanis Week." The idea behind the move is a tie-up with the local Kiwanis to provide funds to help defray expenses of children at a health farm sponsored by the organization. The children are drawn from homes of the poorer class of Altoona citizens, those who have lacked proper nourishment and average advantages of the average home in the city. They are taken to the farm, fed with good food and under the tutelage of a physical director trained to cultivate health habits.

For one week Sherred and the Kiwanians are partners in show business. A percentage of the entire week's receipts are turnd over to the organization and Sherred tells us that last year's "Week" netted the club enough to pay the expenses of 40 children at the farm all summer. That the local newspapers backed Sherred to the limit is evidenced by the stories he encloses. Details of the move were also broadcast over the local radio station by a prominent Altoona citizen, a member of the Kiwanis.

Well, Carl, that's great! And believe us, we mean that. We can't think of a more worthy enterprise for a theatre to sponsor, nor one that will earn a manager more respect in his community. The value of this brand of good will is difficult to estimate. It just cannot be measured in dollars and cents. But it's there—and with a wallop!

As he penned a few words to the Club Sherred was on the eve of launching this year's Kiwanis Week, for which he predicts knockout returns. As one of his stunts to garner publicity he has arranged with the city for the placing of shields on either side of about 200 light standards in the two principal thoroughfares. He tells us that this is the first time any one has gotten away with this. He'll have a photo taken and send it along a little later. Lots of luck, Carl, and by this time we know that you've put it over.

Sherred also encloses newspaper clippings on a "Skippy" contest which got him plenty of space without a nickel of expense to the theatre. He calls attention to the fact that the idea is taken from the Paramount press book, and that it is a corker. It is a tie-up with the local daily that runs the Skippy cartoon and deal with answers to an assortment of reproduced stills of Skippy and other characters in the picture. There is a blank "balloon," or space for printed words, accompanying each picture in the layout. The trick is to fill the space with appropriate words, or incident typical of Skippy. The writers of the 25 best conversations may see the picture free of charge. As so many people are familiar with this cartoon it proves a corking means of calling attention to the picture.

Thanks again, Carl, for letting the Club know about this one. You are certainly on your toes with the newspaper boys in your town. We would like to know that every member of the Club is in a position to secure such fine cooperation. As soon as you get over the Kiwanis Week activities, we know you are going to find time to write the Club again.

The Exploitation Check-Up!

Here is the list of pictures which received the greatest amount of exploitation according to the Round Table Club check-up over a period of six months ending April 25, 1931:

1—"Check and Double Check"	Radio	13—"Min and Bill"	Metro
2—"All Quiet on the Western Front"	Un.	14—"Big House"	Metro
3—"Hell's Angels"	U.A.	15—"Follow Through"	Par.
4—"Tom Sawyer"	Par.	16—"Feet First"	Par.
5—"Animal Crackers"	Par.	17—"Big Trail"	Fox
6—"Dawn Patrol"	F.N.	18—"Dracula"	Un.
7—"Whoopee"	U.A.	19—"Common Clay"	Fox
8—"Manslaughter"	Par.	20—"Journey's End"	Tif.
9—"Byrd at the South Pole"	Par.	21—"Good News"	Metro
10—"Cimarron"	Radio	22—"Charley's Aunt"	Col.
11—"Africa Speaks"	Col.	23—"East Lynne"	Fox
12—"Abraham Lincoln"	U.A.	24—"Paid"	Metro

It must be kept in mind that many of the above pictures were being exploited prior to the period covered by this check-up and others are being exploited after the compiling of this survey.

There is no denying the fact that a picture with exceptional exploitation possibilities, plus a manager who knows how to get the most out of an attraction through the medium of exploitation, will react definitely at the box office.

What the industry can stand right now is plenty of product with good exploitation angles. Not angles created by a group of press book writers who can only speak with superlatives and fancy adjectives regardless of the picture they are raving about, but angles honestly present in the picture itself.

The motion picture industry spends millions to turn out pictures. Let them spend a small portion of those millions for encouraging managers to go out and exploit pictures with exploitation possibilities. They will all gain in the long run and the general effect will tend to stimulate business all over the country.

It is all very well to say that a "smash" attraction will do business regardless of how much or how little it is exploited, but we doubt whether any of the producers or distributors would like to broadcast that feeling throughout the show world. They well know the value of exploitation and other forms of sensible showmanship as it is applied to their product and what they all desire most—if we are to believe the broadsides they send out, or the pressbooks they furnish to the theatres—is to see their product exploited as widely as possible.

Showmen the world over have one common complaint; they do not get enough pictures with outstanding exploitation possibilities. Give them such pictures and they will work their fool heads off selling it to the hardest boiled patron in their community. A production like "Amos 'n' Andy" had such possibilities even before a foot of film was exposed. "All Quiet" ditto, etc., etc. The studios must learn to keep a weather eye on the box office. Too many pictures are being turned out that are artistic classics, but applesauce in dollars and cents to the theatre. Inasmuch as there are not enough "classical" patrons to support that type of pictures in any community we will still have to continue the catering to the "masses." And it's a picture with the mass appeal which is generally the most profitable at the box office.

The next Round Table Club check-up will cover the period from January 1 to July 1 of this year. Compare the two lists at that time for a more accurate check on pictures not generally available up to the time this check-up ended.

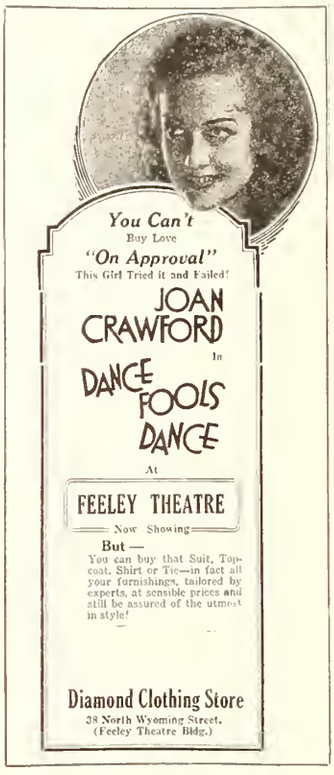
"CHICK"

NEW YORK'S NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

We have been asked why we do not reproduce more of New York's theatrical advertising in our weekly ad layouts. The answer is short and simple; we do not believe such reproductions would be anything but informative. As far as duplicating New York's style in towns and cities throughout the country, it would be a bad mistake.

New York's theatrical advertising may be the world, to New York; but as a guide to out-of-town showmen it means little or nothing at all.

We prefer to select groups from other towns and cities throughout the country with a definite view of offering something constructive and helpful to showmen in general. That is why you have seen such layouts as: one-column ads, weekly newspaper ads, typical small town ads, and such key city ads as may offer you an idea in preparing or working out your own advertising.



Next week's issue will contain a layout of exclusive New York theatre ads and we feel sure that our many members will agree that they would hardly do for other towns or cities.

The average small town manager has a definite problem to contend with in the making-up of his newspaper ads. Offering him impossible suggestions won't help one bit. But showing what managers in similar situations are doing will absolutely be of real assistance. That is our set policy and we want every member and reader of the Club pages to know it.

George Daransoll And Local Merchant Win With Co-op. Gag

After putting over a very successful cooperative page with the Mayor and merchants in his town announcing the installation of a modern sound system George Daransoll, manager of the Feeley Theatre, Hazelton Pa., followed up this effort with several other tie-ups, one of which he sent the Club for its third Anniversary number. All material for that issue had been set up in type when it arrived, so we are presenting it at this time.

The reproduced advertisement which Daransoll ran in a Hazelton newspaper in connection with a local jeweler represents a reduction from the original ad size of two columns by approximately 10 inches. This ran for two days at no cost whatsoever to Daransoll, the merchant getting his break from the copy on the lower portion of the ad. Note the boxed in copy which calls attention to the award at Feeley Theatre These were made through the arrangement of duplicate stubs from the original tickets issued by the merchant to those who made purchases of merchandise amounting to one dollar or over at his place during a period of one month. The jeweler also tied with the theatre by running his own advertisement in the local paper

Daransoll believes that this is an effective gag for cementing business relations between theatreman and merchant and for building additional trade for the theatre. Among the buyers of merchandise at whatever store is chosen there is always a certain percentage of people who come to your house for the first time in order to be on hand when the awards are made. The merchant is more than satisfied with the publicity he receives during the ceremonies and it's really a fifty-fifty break all around.

Thanks for sending this along to the boys, George, and the Club will look forward to receiving an account of a special Dance Marathon gag which you recently put on in Hazelton. These are generally good for a lot of free publicity and we want to know how you made out. 'Till then the Club wishes him the customary, so long until tomorrow.

Hucknall Swaps Ad With D. V. A. Boxing Card for B. O. Tune

Always on the lookout for a gag that will create good will in his community, John Wm. Hucknall, manager of the National Theatre, Stockton, Calif., sends the Club the following example of a tie-up he recently made. In return for advertising space on a program made for a benefit boxing card at the Civic Auditorium, calling attention to current and coming attractions at the National, Hucknall donated the back of his theatre program to plug the boxing match. As it was given under the auspices of the Disabled Veterans' Association, the cause was a worthy one and not only publicized his house, but formed further good will contacts for Hucknall.

Oke, John William. This constant building of Good Will is one of the most return-getting efforts a manager can make. The Club notes that you are soon to have a new $400,000 National Theatre in Stockton and knows that this will provide additional scope for your showmanship. In the meantime, continue to let the Club know what you are doing at the old National.

UNIVERSAL'S "SEED"!

No small part of the successful run of "Seed" by the New York Rivoli Theatre is due to the attractive front, as will be noted on the accompanying picture. The Rivoli displays are already the talk of New York's theatre managers and this one is no exception.

Besides this eye-arresting front, Joe Weil, Universal's exploitation chief put across a terrific campaign to sell this attraction to the metropolis and deserves plenty of credit for the unusual slants he injected into his exploitation.

The newspaper ad campaign was business-getting in every sense of of the word and we intend to incorporate several of them into future ad layouts on the Club pages.

This picture possesses one particular appeal that should make it easy to sell anywhere in the country, and that is "female-appeal." They played it up in the New York campaign so that nine out of every 10 patrons at the first matinees were women; and this in a theatre which was playing to mostly men right along, at their matinees.

The tie-ups included every angle that could possibly be worked up with the picture and we are sorry that lack of space prohibits our going into the entire lay-out used. However, we may be able to do so at any early date.

Coppock Ties With School Teachers On Showing of "Rango"

E. S. C. Coppock of the Paramount Theatre in Stapleton, S. I., worked one major stunt and a number of minor stunts to excellent advantage on "Rango."

He arranged to hold a preview at the Paramount Theatre two days prior to the opening of "Rango." One week in advance of play date, he mailed invitations to 1,200 teachers of educational institutions on the Island. The attendance at this private showing was approximately 70% of those invited.

In advance of the showing, Coppock spoke from the stage. The brief speech was of an explanatory nature, regarding the picture "Rango." He requested the teachers to send their pupils to the Paramount to witness a showing of the picture, provided of course that the teachers felt the pupils would be benefited by seeing "Rango."

That this stunt was successful is conclusively proven by the opening day's business, which was far above normal. Several schools sent classes in a body.

Every child attending the Organ Club Saturday morning, prior to the opening of "Rango" the following Thursday, was given a small paper bag imprinted with "Rango" copy and containing animal crackers.

Two weeks in advance of the showing of "Rango" teaser cards were carried in the lobby. These cards were changed to definite selling copy a week later.

On the Sunday prior to the opening of "Rango" Coppock had a local news shot made of a motorcycle field meet. This meet was held on Staten Island and attracted thousands of people. The film was run at all performances during the engagement. Coppock states that, judging from the number of comments received, he feels that the showing of this news shot definitely increased the gross. The sport editors called attention to the news shot; and it was mentioned by two columnists.

Wally Butler Has Some Ideas On How To Crash Newspaper

There are some managers who think that getting away with publicity for their house in a newspaper consists of selling the managing-editor on the running of a reader or some other little blurb of like nature. Now Wally Butler, manager of Warner Bros. San Bernardino Theatre, has some other ideas on this subject, Wally sends the Club a clipping from the local paper which carries a two column box at the head with his by-line. A two column article with Wally's photo follows.

In the box at the head of the article it is noted by the editor that "the following is the third of a series of keeping San Bernardino dollars in San Bernardino, and at the same time stimulating city-wide interest in Civic Importance." Wally's by-line and his title of resident manager of house is featured here.

In succeeding paragraphs Wally proceeds to set forth his reasons why people should buy at home. We are sure that most managers can think up good reasons of their own as to why people should patronize local enterprise, but, if they want some help along this line we are sure that Wally will send along the entire series for the edification of Club members.

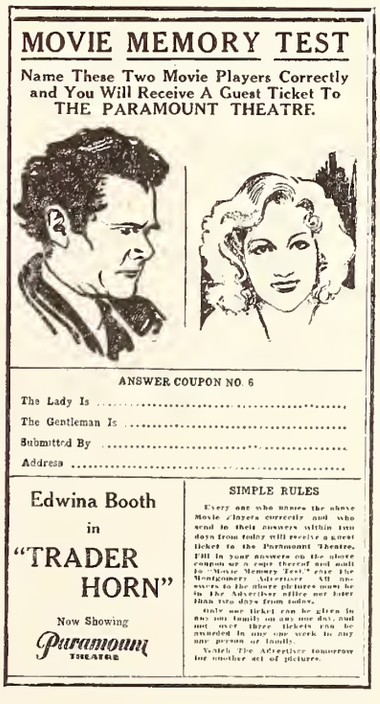
What we wish to call attention to is this: Wally does not "talk shop" in the series. Not one word about his theatre. But think over the value of having his photograph and name published in connection with the article. Without a taint of the regular run-o'-mine, canned material which some managers think the last word in the way of bringing public attention to their house, Butler builds prestige for the theatre and himself by another and more subtle method. Good stuff, Wally, and much obliged for sending it in. Any man who can sell an editor these kind of ideas must have some other gags up his sleeve. Keep the Club posted.

DAVID C. MacSWEENEY says:

"Your MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB furnishes me the incentive to 'produce'—for when I read what others are doing, I want to go them one better."

Manager, Paramount Theatre, Needham, Mass.

SELLING THE "COOL" IDEA!



This is the attractive ballyhoo truck employed by Harold Kopplin last year to sell the "cool" Capitol in Miami, Fla., to the prospective theatre patrons. Does it register cool atmosphere? We think so.

Similar ballyhoos would be mighty appropriate this summer and we heartily recommend them. Try to make yours as fine looking as Kopplin's. It will mean more to those who see it. And it will mean money to you.

R. M. Kennedy Now In Montgomery, Ala., Using 2 Good Gags

Although busy as the proverbial one-armed paper hanger adapting himself to the management of a new house, R. M. Kennedy, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., finds time to contribute a couple of interesting newspaper gags and let the Club know that he is no longer with the Rialto Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

Kennedy is having considerable success with a "Movie Memory" contest in the Montgomery Advertiser, a leading paper in the South. Readers will note that the accompanying cut carries reproduced drawings of faces of two well known film players at the top portion. Underneath is space for filling in the names of the stars, mention of the current attraction at the theatre and rules governing the contest. At the bottom of the ad is a list of those who have sent in the correct answers and they are directed to call at the circulation department of the paper to receive their award of tickets.

SIMPLE RULES

Every one who names the above Movie Players correctly and who send in their answers within two days from today will receive a guest ticket to the Paramount Theatre. Fill in your answers on the above coupon or a copy thereof and mail to "Movie Memory Test," care the Montgomery Advertiser. All answers to the above pictures must be in the Advertiser office not later than two days from today.

Only one ticket can be given to any one family on any one day, and not over three tickets can be awarded in any one week to any one person or family.

Watch The Advertiser tomorrow for another set of pictures.

With another paper in his city, the Montgomery Journal, Kennedy is working a corking publicity stunt. Two local people are photographed and the cut is reproduced in the paper. A heavy black circle is drawn around each face and the caption directs them to call at the Journal office and receive passes to any performance of the current picture.

Kennedy tells us that both of these gags are getting good results, and we can well believe him. When you get settled down in Montgomery we will expect to hear from you again.

If you run across Frank Woodruff anywhere in your rounds please give him our very best regards. He was formerly at the Empire.

Newspaper Ads That ARE Different!

Chalk up another one for Pete Smith, publicity impresario r M-G-M out at Culver City, Cal., for his ingenuity when comes to creating something that IS radically different in wspaper advertising.

Pete tells us that the old dyed-in-the-wool formulas were sse as far as blaise Los Angeles was concerned, so he just AD to dope out something that would not only be different, t box-office as well. How he succeeded we let you judge r yourself.

The beauty of this type of advertising is that YOU, and OU and YOU can utilize the same thought for your own use regardless of where you are located. A snap-shot of ur local popular traffic cop; a photo of the man at the projection machine; two ushers smilingly whispering to each other; a patron shaking the manager's hand, etc., etc., all work right in with the idea. Such photos plus a newspaper cut and you can frame your text accordingly. The text on Pete's ads may suggest what you want, or on the other hand you can work it out to suit yourself.

This is advertising with a real original twist and we would welcome a lot more like it. Perhaps some of our members and readers have worked out a novel ad once in a while that would help their brother showmen. If so, be a sport and send it along. If not, start now and see if you can't inject plenty of new ideas into your newspaper ads. They sell the show and there is no getting away from it. What do YOU say?

Personal Contact Effective B. O. Aid, Says Roy Sterrett

To those managers whose drive for patronage is more or less confined to the immediate neighborhood of their theatres, we'd like to call attention to the activities of Roy Sterrett, a newly elected member of the Club and the manager of the Iris Theatre, Belle Fourche, N. Dak.

We gather from Roy's letter that he can be classed as a "tourist manager." A considerable portion of trade, he states, comes from the rural districts, and a part of his campaigns consists of a hand-shaking trip into surrounding territory. These trips are made quite often, Sterrett tells us, and in addition to personal contact generous use is made of window cards and stickers.

Roy sends us examples of stickers used on "Rango" and "Fighting Caravans" and also a window display on the latter named film. It's a corking display and we guess that this manager has the good will of the local merchants. Note the large amount of space donated by the merchant on the hat tie-up. Sterrett also tells us he used the pseudo "season pass" gag with "Byrd at the South Pole." You know how it goes—first line on the card reads, "Don't let the—then the next line, "Season Pass" (in large bold type) "without seeing such and such a picture" follows. Then the name of the theatre and "when you have seen it you will," with the next line in large bold type reading "Admit Two," and the card then goes on to praise the picture.

Roy admits that none of the above gags are original, that he found them in past issues of the Club, but that they served their purpose admirably, and takes this occasion to thank fellow members for bringing them to his attention through the Club medium.

Oke, Roy! The Club acknowledges your thanks and hopes that other tips will prove useful. You can further reciprocate by regularly keeping us posted on what you are doing out in Belle Fourche. More than anything else at this writing, we wanted to let those managers, who scarcely ever stray from their theatre, know what a lot of effort some fellows have to put forth to garner patrons.

Lobby And Contest Play Important Part For Johnnie McKenna

Who is this guy Johnny McKenna? Seems as though he injects his personality and showmanship into a lot of interesting stuff lately. But don't stay in the dark too long dear readers (as the tabloid would say), we'll tip you off to the fact that McKenna is the District Advertising Manager for the Publix-Saenger Division.

Along with Art Cunningham, manager of the Majestic Theatre in Shreveport, La., he put over a most unusual campaign for "Skippy" in that town. Here is as much of the dope as we could cram into limited space. But it should be quite sufficient to convince you that this team handed out one swell layout.

In the lobby was a piano box which was made over to represent Skippy's club house. On it was eccentric lettered copy. The club house also contained an old rusty stove pipe for chimney, tow sack for door mat and cutout of Skippy from the 3-sheet sitting at the entrance to this house.

A bicycle display was also in the lobby—using the following copy written on a card attached to the handle bars: "Pop . . . Thank you for the bicycle, but I'd rather have 30c to get Sook's dog, Penny, out of the dog pound. Kin I sell the bicycle to get the money? Skippy."

A complete built-in front represented a high board fence on which appeared eccentric lettered copy, cast, title as well as cut-outs from the 1, 3-sheets, and insert cards; also hand-picked stills.

A "Skippy" cartoon contest with the "Times" appeared for four days. The Majestic Manager, Mr. Glover, stated that this was the first time this paper has co-operated in staging a contest of this kind. The contest consisted of the showing of an old comic strip of "Skippy" leaving out the conversation in the balloons; the conversation to be filled in by the contestant. Five persons submitted the most appropriate copy each received one guest ticket to see the picture.

On the street was a small boy who was dressed to resemble Skippy. The boy paraded the streets, leading a dog and passing out heralds. On the dog's haunches was attached an old auto license plate. On front of the boy was a sign reading, "They told me I had to have a license for my dog. Well, he has one now." On his (the boy's) back, the card read, "Skippy—Majestic Theatre."

Amos Ties Up With Laundry For Heavy Plug on "Unfaithful"

Charlie Amos effected a tie-up with a prominent laundry concern that helped immeasurably in putting over Ruth Chatterton in "Unfaithful" playing at the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

The Laundry Co. paid for a 30-inch ad in which appeared a cut of Ruth Chatterton and copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. This ad also used for its caption, "To be Well Dressed as Ruth Chatterton." And then followed copy about the laundry.

Also incorporated in the 30-inch ad were details about a contest to win tickets to the Paramount. All that was necessary was to write a letter stating why you prefer your laundry and dry cleaning being sent to the Ideal Laundry. The letters were to be as brief as possible and much counting on neatness. First prize was four tickets and the next 10 winners each received two tickets each.

Amos also got out a unique herald. It was an idea suggested for a lobby display—a cut-out of Ruth Chatterton with copy lettered on it. Only, the herald was small. To enhance the selling value of the herald a "gold" wedding ring was put around Ruth's neck. Copy read: "Her Wedding Ring transformed into a Band of Deceit! A yoke around her neck forcing her to endure her husband's treachery!" And then followed copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. Two thousand of these heralds were mailed to a selective list of married women.

Charlie Amos needs no introduction on these pages. His activities have always been one of our highlights and we know they will continue to be so, just so long as he keeps up his fine work.

INTRODUCING MORE NEW MEMBERS!

DICK WILLIAMS is house manager of the Fox California Theatre, San Bernardino, Calif. Glad to know you, Dick, and the Club would like to hear from you often as to how you are putting shows over in your town. How about a photo of yourself for our files?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE PANKA is in charge of the Metropolitan Theatre, Prairie du Chien, and is another Wisconsin member of this organization of showmen. George, the Club welcomes you and expects that you will become a regular contributor to these pages. Next time you write let us hear about some worthwhile stunt you put over in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FLOYD W. HIRES is the assistant manager of the Glory B Theatre, Miami, Okla., and he, too, joins the ranks of the many assistant managers listed in the Round Table Club. Step along Floyd with a lot of live showmanship so we may soon record your name among the full-fledged managers. And let us know what you are doing to help sell shows for the Glory B.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOE W. HUNTER is in charge of the Malco Capitol Theatre, Newport, Ark., and it will not be long before fellow members are going to hear how Joe is putting his shows over the top in Newport. It's an obligation, now that you've become a Club member Joe, so we are going to look forward to hearing from you soon. And how about a photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. S. KELSEY is the manager of the Ruby Theatre, Chelan, Wash., and the Club extends its welcome to this new member from the Northwest. He has the letters Dr. attached to his name and he may be doing double duty both as theatre man and life saver, or, it may stand for Director. Anyway, we believe he's going to have time to contribute to these pages. How about this, Doc?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES MICHELSTETTER is the manager of the Tower Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., and is hereby listed as a member of the big army of west coast managers numbered in this organization. There's lots of live Round Tablers out your way, Charles, and we are going to count on tacking your name up along side the rest. Don't forget to keep the Club posted. And how about a photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DON NICHOLS is in charge of the Warner Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., and the Club extends its welcome to this new member from Dixieland. We've had samples of showmanship from your town, Don, and now that you've become a member, the Club will look forward to hearing more about your work. Remember us to brother showmen in Charlotte.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WAYNE T. JENKINS is the manager of the Dickinson Theatre, Osage City, Kan., and is hereby elected to become a member of the Kansas wing of this Club. Now that you've heeded the call not to be left out of this organization let us remind you that you are expected to become a regular contributor to these columns. Send us a story on what you've been doing in the way of selling shows out your way. And why not include a photo of yourself?

LAFAYETTE MOORE is in charge of the Trenton Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., and along with his application for membership admits that he's been a gag stealer from this department. He will continue to pilfer in the future but will also find time to repay his fellow members by making some contribution of his own, we believe. At any rate, Moore has had a lot of experience in show busines and we know his brand of showmanship will find its place among these pages. Before leaving for Lynchburg Moore was associated with Walter Morris in Baltimore, whose name has appeared more than once in Round Table activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BILL PRESTON is the manager of the Merchant Theatre in Quincy, Mass., and he now becomes a member of the Massachusetts wing of this great organization of showmen. Bill, the foremost rule of this Club is that members must let others know what they're doing in the way of selling shows, so be sure to let us hear from you regularly. How about a photo of yourself for future use on these pages?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PHILLIP F. ENGEL is in charge of the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., and Phil not only sends his membership application but also makes a contribution of a recently used show-selling stunt. That's the proper spirit, Phil, and we are from you on Perth Amboy showmanship.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NAT BLANK is the manager of the Fox-Fond du Lac Theatre, Fond du Lac, Wisc., and is proposed for membership in this Club by J. C. Jenkins, the "Herald Man" whose picture you see on a page in the back of this book. You will have to make good with an account of how you are putting shows over in your city, Nat, or J. C. is going to hear from us right away. And we don't mean maybe.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. E. LIEBERMAN is the owner-manager of the Twin Theatres, Capitol and Victory, independently operated in Lowell, Mass., and this organization is glad to welcome him as a new member. In addition to forwarding his membership application he also includes a gift card which is his own idea of what a card of this kind should be. More about this in another issue. The Club will count upon you, F. E., for future contributions. Thanks for your avowed interest in these pages.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOM CARRICK is in charge of the Grove Talkies 'way down in Johannesburg, South Africa, and to our way of thinking it won't be long before Club members will be reading some interesting yarns about how they go about this business in Tom's territory. So don't disappoint the boys, Tom. Send along some African show gags next time you write. And how about a photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ERNEST C. PEARSON is the manager of the Spa Theatre, Hot Springs National Park, Ark., and therefore the Club is going to look forward to receiving some hot show tips from this new member. Next time you write, Ernest, don't forget to let us know what's doing out your way. And why not include your photo?

GEORGE F. MONROE is the manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Beatrice, Neb., and thus another Publix man announces his intention of becoming a regular contributor to these columns. The Club lists many brother showmen out your way, George, and your territory has been productive of many a good stunt. Need we say more? Include a photo next time we hear from you so the rest of the members will know what you look like.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

IZZET DJEMALI is the managing director of three theatres in Istanbul, Turkey, all equipped with the latest in sound projection. He sends his application along with a request for a Club emblem and also announces that he will do his best to tell America how shows are put over a la Turkish fashion. So do not forget, Izzet, the Club will await your further letters with much interest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK WRIGHT is in charge of the Grand Theatre, Fort Stockton, Texas, a house which bears the "OK" brand. Jack admits that he's been reading Round Table pages for some time and just had to obey that impulse to become a member. And he goes one better by both requesting a Club pin and sending in a sample of some recent work. That's the spirit, Jack, and we'll be looking to hear from you again in the near future. Why not include a photo next time you write?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARVEY C. BUCHANAN is a partner-manager of the Palace Theatre, Superior, Wisc., and his application is forwarded to the Club by his and our friend Gus Carlson, a member whom most of you are already acquainted with through reading his contributions. Members are also acquainted with Harvey's show-selling angles and this is just a reminder to him that the Club expects him to do his duty in the future.

Sol Strauss

Born and educated in Germany, Sol Strauss came to these United States of America at an early age and by the time he reached the twentieth milestone the show bug stung him. He's only 24 years old at this writing, but records point to extensive experience in show business.

Strauss began his amusement business career in September, 1927, at the Big U exchange, which, as most showmen know, is the New York Universal sales office. In January, 1929, he went to Racine, Wis., where he assumed management of the Rialto and Venetian theatres, and in July of the same year became a special representative of the Broadway Theatre, Santa Ana, Cal. From California he migrated to Seattle, where he successively became manager of the Madrona Garden and Portola Theatres. He then turned eastward again and is at present supervising the Alcyon and Pearl Theatres in Highland Park, Ill.

Strauss is a Mason, is unmarried and should you ask him if he intends sticking to this business he will undoubtedly say yes.

W. H. Hall

The distribution end of the picture business was W. H. Hall's choice when he entered the game but constant contact with theatres inoculated him with the show business germ and after a period spent in the peddling end he switched to active participation in theatre management.

His first post after leaving a Dallas, Texas, exchange, was assistant manager of the Melba Theatre in that city. He later was promoted to manage this house and also managed the Majestic in Dallas. Other managerships held by Hall include that of the Columbia, in Baton Rouge, and the Saenger, Pine Bluffs. In connection with the above positions he was associated with Loews, Inc., the Interstate Amusement Co. and Saenger.

Hall was born in De Leon, Texas, September, 1898, and in addition to a course at High School was educated in a private academy and A. & M. College. He entered show business at 23 years of age because—as he frankly states—he loves it. He'd choose it again were he to start all over and he emphatically denies any intention of ever leaving it for another field.

John J. Madden

A veteran showman is the title we'll have to pin on John J. Madden, and to any one who has followed show business over an extended period his name will be familiarly associated with many a smart example of showmanship.

Madden was born in the city of Norfolk, Va., in the year 1880 (we're not telling tales, are we John?) and was educated in St. Mary's Male Academy in that city. Show business captured his fancy at the age of 15 and from the bottom of the ladder he rapidly acquired experience necessary to the theatre executive. With the well known Wells and Wilmer and Vincent circuits he has held the positions of manager, advertising agent and treasurer and has been associated with the Wells, Granby, Academy and Colonial theatres of Norfolk. He is at present city manager for Loew's in Norfolk.

Madden went into show business because he liked the game. After spending 36 years in it there's no use asking a man if he has any intention of leaving. He's a member of the Elks and K. of C. and is a bachelor.

R. V. McGinnis

Its wide field for advancement and a special liking for the theatre brought R. V. McGinnis into the amusement business at the age of 22 years and from all accounts he's in to stay.

McGinnis was born in Nettleton, Ark., on September 17, 1905, and his first theatre connection was as manager of the Swan Theatre, Walnut Ridge, Ark. From this post he won a promotion to that of exploitation manager for the Tri-State Theatre Company. While with Tri-State he had state-wide handling of "King of Kings" during its first run in the state and hung up an enviable record on this production. He later went with the Malco chain at Newport, Ark., and handled two houses in this town. Then, to the B. & B. Theatres, Inc., as a manager of several houses for that company and subsequently to his present position as manager of the Dunlap Theatre, Clarksville, Ark.

McGinnis is married and is a member of the Masons, Lions and a Scoutmaster of the Boy Scouts of America. He has no intention of ever leaving show business.

Edward I. Selette

After completing courses at the John Winthrop Grammar School and the Roxbury Evening Commercial School, Edward I. Selette entered show business at the age of 20 years. His reasons for picking out the amusement business were that he found public contact interesting and that his brother-in-law, Louis E. Walters, now a New England booker, was then established as an agent. Selette has been connected with both circuit and independent houses, serving as assistant manager with Publix and in the capacity of manager of the Franklin Theatre, an independent house in Springfield, Conn. He is at present installed as manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H.

Selette was born in the city of Boston, February 16, 1901. He endeavored to enlist when the late war was declared, but was turned down at the recruiting office on account of one eye being defective. Ask him if he would again pick show business as a profession, were he to start all over again, and he will answer in the affirmative.

Paul W. Kunze

There's no telling just how early in life Paul Kunze came to a decision to make show business his vocation for he admits being intensely interested in motion pictures when a youngster. However, it was after graduating from High School before this interest manifested itself in a theatre job. Since that time Kunze has been active in all branches of theatre management, ranging from the bottom of the ladder to owner-manager. He even holds a special projectionist license issued to him under the state laws of Massachusetts.

Kunze has owned and managed his own theatres and has also been associated with the Interstate Circuit of New England and independently owned houses. Included among the above positions are those of manager and district manager. He is well versed in music, having attended the New England Conservatory of Music and Boston University. He has also had considerable experience with accounting, advertising and exploitation. For the past three years he has been associated with Interstate at the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass. He will answer "certainly" if you ask him whether he'd enter show business again.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed acording to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such infortion as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

About Radical Friends

THE coming of a new movement in behalf of the arts, including conspicuously the motion picture, by the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, as related in a dispatch in this issue from Mr. Francis L. Burt, the HERALD'S Washington correspondent, promises valuable contribution to the creation of a wholesome public state of mind toward the un-Americanism of the professional and perennial agitators who make careers out of a program of heckling and hampering expression.

An important element of the movement, aside from its direct works, is the alignment with the cause of many famous creative names from the world of literature and the drama. Mr. Burt makes observation that the American Civil Liberties Union, from which the new Council is sprung, is "unfortunately viewed with alarm in conservative quarters because of its somewhat radical tinge." It may be observed that it would be an abnormal world in which there was no radical element, and it likely would be an unhealthy one. The motion picture art can suffer no harm from this friendship. Also the radicals of one generation are the conservatives of the next.

Sane Sunday Thoughts

PRESUMABLY as long as there is a Sunday in the week there will be occasional recrudescences of the agitation against the Sunday showing of motion pictures. It is a part of the ancient curse on the theatre to which the motion picture is heir and successor. The Milwaukee Sentinel in a recent issue remarks:

> Milwaukee ministers, considering the subject of Sunday laws, listened gravely to suggestions about getting up amendments to the present laws which will render them enforceable before the sons of Anak get started on another effort to repeal them.
> Putting a stop to Sunday ball games, movies and other entertainment would deprive a great many people of their only opportunity to enjoy those forms of recreation. And many who devote Sunday afternoon to recreation of that kind have dutifully attended church in the morning. The public sentiment that resents interference with one's individual right to play golf on Sunday will, we believe, equally resent interference with one's individual desire to attend a movie on Sunday. If people see no wrong in enjoying themselves decently and decorously on Sunday they will oppose and disobey a law which says they shall not.

Someway, as history shows, the public will eventually prevails in such matters. It has been a long time since it has been widely considered immoral to be happy or entertained on Sunday.

A Plea for Mr. Colman

MR. RONALD COLMAN, an actor said to come from England, who from time to time has appeared in what were otherwise talking pictures, has added interestingly to his American dossier, as recorded by Mr. George Shaffer who writes a Hollywood column for The Chicago Tribune. Says Mr. Shaffer:

> Ronald Colman bragged to listeners on the United Artists lot, where he is starring in "The Unholy Garden," that "whenever I am invited to attend a dinner or a social function in Hollywood I ask the hostess to let me see a list of the guests before I accept," Asked why, Colman said: "Because I am afraid that some persons from the press might be present. I never go where there is any one from the American press."

This editorial is a plea to the American press to be fully considerate of Mr. Colman's desires and delicately retiring disposition. One shudders, too, to think what he must have suffered out there in Hollywood when here in gauche New York the largest sign on Broadway proclaimed his name, in letters some eight English yards high, before the unhallowed gaze of the horde of commoners who frequent the cinemas. We offer comfort to him, however, in the assurance that he is most unlikely ever to be interviewed unless he deliberately puts himself into the hands of an interpreter from the Court of St. James's or the British Foreign Office. Thus far, what he may have endeavored to say from the talking screen remains largely a safe secret between Mr. Colman and the author of the lines.

Selling America Short

TOUCHING on the subject of the tedious timidity and pessimism which appears to so pervade some of the high places, and many of the lesser ones, in American finance today, the Wall Street Journal in an editorial the other day remarked:

> "Is there not a limit to reasonable price deflation? And is not that limit exceeded when the market appraises as valueless plants, costing millions, organizations built up to a point of high efficiency, patents and good names that cannot be duplicated?
> "Without opinion as to whether prices may go lower than in early June, realizing that industrial profits may remain at ebb for a protracted period, The Wall Street Journal presents herewith a few examples of companies which recently sold at such levels.
> "Each share of Westinghouse Electric common now represents $37 of net current assets, one and one-half shares of Radio Corp. with a market value of $18 at recent lows, making a total of $55 against a recent low on the stock exchange of 56⅛. This means that Westinghouse's plants, patents and miscellaneous investments were being valued by the market at approximately $1.12 a share, although these assets produced earnings of $4.46 a share in the depression year of 1930, and had a depreciated book value of $29 a share.
> "Put another way, the market valuation of Westinghouse stocks at recent levels was $152,446,000, or $5,153,000 less than the combined net current assets and investments in wholly-owned subsidiary and associated companies. The company's lands, factories, service stations, office buildings, etc., carried on the balance sheet at a depreciated value of $72,272,128, are thus appraised as valueless by the market place. Similarly its patents and processes, the outcome of the lifetime work of scores of scientists and millions spent on research, are considered without market value.
> "If Westinghouse were to shut up shop, dispose of its investments and current assets and offer its plants and patents for sale, current prices for the stock would obviously be absurdly low. Can it be that the stock market thinks that Westinghouse is entering a prolonged period of deficit operations which will dissipate current assets? Is such an outlook justified? . . ."

In the unhappinesses of the moment it is to be feared that too many motion picture minds have been influenced in a like manner. It should be extremely obvious that the motion picture won its position of dominance as the entertainment of the millions against the entrenched older arts and competitors. It should also be reasonably obvious that the American public will continue to desire entertainment. The question is not at all whether there will be business done—the question merely is as to who will do it. It will be by those who believe in it.

INSIDERS' OUTLOOK

KARL K. KITCHEN, in his column in the New York Sun, records:

Apropos of P. G. Wodehouse's remarks about Hollywood methods he stated that he was paid $104,000 over a period of a year for doing nothing. I heard an amusing story about another playwright's experience in that gelatin suburb.

A. E. Thomas took a play to a playreader, who greeted him most effusively.

"You didn't need a note from our president—I know you well," said the playreader.

"Your face is familiar, too," came back Thomas, "but I'll have to admit I can't place it. Were you in the theatrical business in New York?"

"Oh, no," replied the playreader, adding, "I was the assistant purser on the Leviathan."

"But how did you get into this business?" asked the astonished playwright.

"Oh, Mr. So and So (mentioning the name of the film company's chief executive) crossed with me several times and took a fancy to me. One day I told him I would like to be in the movies and he gave me a contract. When I got out here there wasn't anything for me to do, so he made me head of the play department."

Animals On Demand!

There are a flock of actors out Hollywood way, who are all under one management. Two of them were recently selected by Paramount for the film, "Silence." They were Paint Pot and Calico—cats. J. H. Kerr is the manager, owner and everything else. His business is to supply studios with animals when and if required. His menagerie of business includes 35 dogs, 30 cats, two bears, a puma, skunk, civet cat, fox, wolf, hogs, monkeys, hawks, eagles, owls, crows, ducks, geese, chickens, peacocks, pheasants, parrots, raccoons and so on and so forth. Business, says Kerr, was not so good during the first year of sound, but it has picked up remarkably in recent months. He's been training animals for films for nine years, and has seven men working for him. His latest development is teaching four wolves to howl on signal and demand. What price, wolf howls!

Yes—So Far

A one-time important production executive who nods in a pigeonhole in a Hollywood plant these days secretly believes that the silent picture, in which he was something of a triumph, will return one of these days and that the talking screen will be just a blurred memory like a bad dream. Which is reminiscent of those days of a decade and a half ago when William A. Brady and others of the stage were forecasting the early demise of the motion picture as a form of entertainment. The yellowing files of Motion Picture World now in the archives of Quigley Publications contain many a reprint of newspaper editorials with titles like: "Has the Movie Come to Stay?" The answer 20 years later is "Yes—so far."

THERE has been a deal of speculation about why a certain one-time famous executive of this industry, after suffering deposition, market losses and whatnot, should recently have been given a curiously unsuitable post at $500 a week with one of the big production concerns. The seeping facts appear to be that for some time two influentially employed executives who had been carrying the man concerned, an old friend, out of their personal pockets for some time, decided to transfer the burden to the company.

Bringin' in the Marines

Incident to a retrenchment and economy campaign recently launched by one of the larger concerns the political makeup of the complex home office has been considerably disturbed with many whimsical consequences, among them that the initiators of the movement by removing one personage of power have unwittingly spilled it into other hands as little to their liking as the status quo ante. The whole picture has in miniature all of the better aspects of a first class banana republic intrigue, save for the uniforms. Which brings one to the notion that nothing but a detachment of U. S. Marines will ever be able to put a final peace on this particular sector of movieland.

Double Check!

They do not have the old fashioned school roll call at Hollywood studio, but they have the next thing to it. The twelve hundred employees who come through the front office every morning, whether they are high and mighty directors or script clerks, have to check in. And at night they have to check out. The studio has to know where its employees are at all times. A battery of young men check the name of every person who passes the gate. For those thousands who punch a time clock the record is kept automatically.

Studios are mighty careful to know who is on and who is off the lot at all times. Aside from it being vastly important so they can tell a visitor at once whether or not the person he is calling on is on the lot, it is a safety check. In case of any emergency, studios have an immediate check of those on the lot. It might not happen in a lifetime, but suppose there should be a catastrophe. At a minute's notice they can tell where each and every one of their employees is.

WISCONSIN MPTO QUITS ALLIED; DROPS PLEDGE TO NATIONAL FUND

NOW IS THE TIME!

Right here and now the motion picture exhibitor is in the best buying position that he has enjoyed for many and many a season. Also never before has there been a time when the exhibitor's dollar could more effectively contribute to the well-being of the industry in which he must live and hope to prosper.

"Buy now" comes this week as urgent advice from two important organizations, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

Not a few of the long headed showmen of the industry have already assured themselves of the flow of screen product to meet their basic requirements of the season and face the future with the confidence which lets them pay attention to other important and immediate aspects of their business.

Interruption of the flow of the normal course of the business cannot but react unfavorably on the whole structure of the business from studio to screen. A reasonable confidence expressed now by the exhibitor will encourage a performance in the machine of industry back of him that should come to flower at his own box office. Now is the time when the exhibitor's buying power can best serve him and the industry upon which he depends. And now is the time he can buy right.

Dix and Radio Just Can't Agree

Richard Dix's future picture activities are expected to shape up by way of his own independent unit.

Dix and RKO, after lengthy negotiations, have been unable to reach an agreement. Dix said he "was given to understand by Joseph I. Schnitzer that the deal is cold." No new offer will be made by RKO following the refusal of Dix to consider current propositions to remain on the Radio lot, it is understood.

"So far as Dix is concerned, negotiations are off," stated Frank Joyce, Dix's agent, who said "We rejected the company proposal and Dix now is in a position to consider other offers. We must have a new deal, a new offer."

Although Radio, on the Coast, says that Dix will remain there, it is not believed they will meet his demands for a 100% salary tilt.

Goldstone Stays with Tiffany

Following months of wrangling with Tiffany and Educational chiefs, Phil Goldstone has decided to remain as Tiffany production head on the Coast, abandoning his plan to re-enter the independent field as a producer.

Projectionists Voluntarily Vote to Take Wage Cuts

New Orleans projectionists have voluntarily signified their willingness to take a five per cent cut in all wages over $50 a week, and seven per cent on those over $60. The move, it is said, is at the suggestion of William Canavan, I. A. head.

This cut will effect only the leading houses, such as Paramount's Saenger, Strand, Tudor and Globe, RKO's Orpheum and Loew's State. For the neighborhood houses, however, the union previously voted to permit one man to a booth.

New Kansas Organization Will Fight Sunday Closing

Liberal minded people of Kansas are organizing for the purpose of seeking elimination of the state's blue law. All members will contribute to a fund which will be used for experimental purposes in five towns.

M. P. T. O. of Kansas and western Missouri has endorsed the plan.

Cuts Building Mortgage

Paramount Broadway Corporation, Paramount-Publix subsidiary has delivered for cancellation to the trustee, Chemical Bank and Trust Company, $125,000 par value of its first mortgage 5½ per cent bonds secured by mortgage on the New York Paramount building.

Resolution Charges Lack of Cooperation

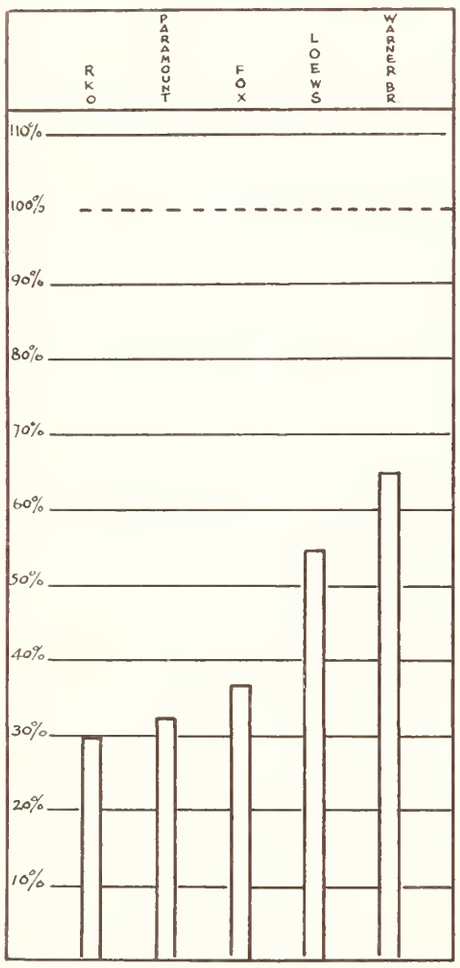
Parent Organization Aided Rival Group, State Unit Asserts at Milwaukee Convention

The Wisconsin M. P. T. O. withdrew from Allied States by unanimous vote, at its 20th annual convention in Milwaukee. The Wisconsin unit charged lack of promised cooperation and guidance, asserting Allied fostered and aided a competitive exhibitors' organization in Wisconsin.

The action abrogates part of Wisconsin's financial pledge of $5,000 made at the Chicago Allied convention, $3,000 of which has already been paid. This action came as amendment proposed by Charles Trampe, exhibitor and president of the Milwaukee Film Board.

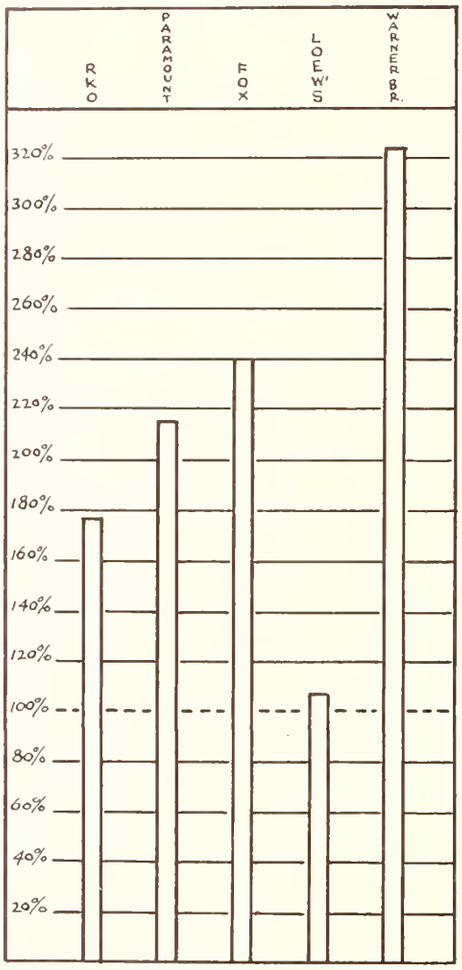
The withdrawal is effective until such time, the resolution states, as the Allied organization "is ready to cooperate" with the state association.

The convention also voted not to permit its members to belong to any other Wisconsin exhibitor organization, and adopted a resolution to oppose sponsored or concealed advertising in films. At the same time, Pete Harrison was criticized for bringing the subject to the attention of newspapers, it being regarded as better to settle the matter within the industry. The convention also condemned salacious and misrepresentative advertising and instructed the advertising committee to combat it.



Zoning Issue Sidetracked

A zoning and protection resolution was sidetracked by Trampe, who succeeded in having it left to the board of directors for future action. The membership indicated, however, that it favored a zoning plan, though not that of the Film Board. No standard zoning and protection plan in force in the state now. Both exhibitors and exchanges were charged with violating and evading past protection systems by President Fred Meyer.



The convention voted to create department of public relations with a salaried head to visit and speak to clubs and civic organizations throughout the state in an effort to propagandize the industry, create better understanding in the industry and forestall injurious agitation and legislation. This move is considered highly important, particularly if copied by other state associations. A "Buy Film Now" proposal, recommended in the president's report, was tabled, with the convention not going on record either way, though being opposed to any policy injurious to the prosperity of the industry. The convention ruled Columbia's "Dirigible" not handled as roadshow, as defined in Columbia's contract, and that

STATUS OF THE INVESTOR'S DOLLAR IN FIVE MAJOR PICTURE COMPANIES

RATIO OF NET WORKING CAPITAL TO MARKET VALUE

RATIO OF BOOK VALUE TO MARKET VALUE

RATIO OF OPERATING PROFIT TO MARKET VALUE

On the three charts the 100% (- - -) line represents the current market price of the total outstanding shares as shown in the latest available figures for five of the major film companies. The vertical represent net working capital, book value and operating income respectively.

A study of these charts shows that every dollar invested at the market price in RKO represents approximately 30 cents in net working capital and $1.76 in book value, while the current market price is slightly under ten times the operating income for the year 1930.

The market price for Paramount shows that for every dollar invested the net working capital is approximately 32½ cents while the book value equals $2.15 and the stock is selling about four times its earnings for 1930.

For every dollar invested in Fox Film Corporation the net working capital is approximately 40 cents and the book value $2.39. The stock is now selling about four and one-half times the earnings for last year.

Loew's, Inc., shows for every dollar of market value 55 cents in net working capital and $1.07 book value and is selling at a price under four times its earnings last year.

Warner Brothers shows for every dollar at the market value 65 cents for net working capital and $3.23 book value. Warner Brothers having no profits in current periods there can be no calculation of the ratio of earnings to market value.

Cinema's Suit vs. Warner May Wait Until October

H. J. Yates' Cinema Patents suit against Warner Brothers, which charges patent infringement, did not go to trial this week as was expected, and it is unlikely that it will be heard in U. S. District court, at Brooklyn, until the October term. A heavy court calendar caused a hold-up.

Yates this week obtained the services of Melville Church, well-known patent attorney, to head his legal battery which includes Henry T. Hornidge, of Kiddle, Margeson & Hornidge, who will be aided by Herbert A. Huebner, Cinema vice president, and a patent attorney. Sam Darby, Jr., represents Warners in the suit, outcome of which may alter the structure of the laboratory field.

Carl Laemmle Leaves East For Studio with Carl, Jr.

Carl Laemmle, president, and Carl Laemmle, Jr., general manager of production of Universal, left New York last week for the Coast.

Accompanying them were Maurice Fleckles, Harry Zehner, Jack Ross and Dave Bader.

Brown Borrows Six Millions For RKO Pathe

RKO Pathe has arranged a loan of $6,000,000 from Chemical National Bank, to be applied to new production and immediate cash requirements. Hiram Brown's successful deal for the additional financing is considered an achievement in financial circles, in view of prevalent economic conditions and the resultant tight money market.

Speculation in the industry over the necessity of securing additional financing at RKO, which is considered in healthy condition, centered around the reports of the requirements of RKO Pathe, and the demands which it has made on RKO's resources.

Low inventory, markedly increased operating costs of the newsreel under the new regime, and payments from income to Pathe Exchange, Inc., has made it necessary for RKO Pathe to get additional working capital.

Herman Zohbel, treasurer of RKO, and Lee Marcus, RKO Pathe president, admitted that the subsidiary company has placed this burden on RKO's financial coffers, but they pointed out that this was anticipated, in view of there being but two company-owned features available to date from which rentals can be obtained. They expect August 15 to mark the change from red to black operation.

Studio costs are above $100,000 weekly at RKO Pathe, although Zohbel and Marcus both denied that the weekly red figure reaches $50,000, as reported. Zohbel said that RKO Pathe is losing less than $40,000 a month, or a total of $200,000 since RKO purchased the Pathe assets. This indicates that RKO will have placed on the line at least $10,000,000 before any net may appear on the expected date in August.

"Lonely Wives" and Constance Bennett's "Born to Love," both purchased from Pathe Exchange, are the only two features released by RKO Pathe to date, although six have been completed for the new schedule. Some exhibitors, principally independents, have been fighting the company since the merger on the grounds that both initial releases should be included on the old Pathe contract.

French Circuit To Rival Natan

It is reported Leon Brezillon, former president of the managers' association, plans to add some 60 "super" theatres to his present list of 18. Considerable financial strength is understood to be behind the expansion.

This move will make Brezillon second only to the Pathe Natan circuit in France.

By Their Clothes—

By their clothes, some comedians are known to the world.

The horn-rimmed glasses of Harold Lloyd, the entire Charles Chaplin costume, the pancake hat and bat-wing collar of Buster Keaton are all identified with these stars.

To this small list are added Groucho, Harpo and Chico Marx. For years, on the vaudeville and musical comedy stage, they always appeared in the same garb, while Zeppo, the straight man of the quartet, hustled from change to change.

Today, for the third consecutive picture, the three comics are dressed in their familiar garb in "Monkey Business."

Mark Ostrer, New Gaumont Official, Replaces Brother

Isadore Ostrer has resigned the chairmanship of Gaumont British and PCT, with headquarters in London, and becomes president of both companies, according to a special dispatch from MOTION PICTURE HERALD's London bureau today.

Mark Ostrer becomes chairman and joint managing director with C. M. Woolf. Arthur Jarratt and H. A. McKlem have been elected to the directorate of PCT, and W. J. Gell and Michael Balcom have joined the board of Denman. Jeffrey Bernerd has been named a director of General Theatres. PCT, Denman, and General Theatres are all Gaumont Theatre subsidiaries.

Ruth Will Act, But For Whom?

There is considerable doubt on the Coast, according to The Hollywood Herald, as to whether Paramount or Warners are going to make Ruth Chatterton's pictures in the future. Warners' Coast office puts the matter up to the home office, and Paramount claims Ruth will act at its studios.

When the star left Paramount for Warners a few months ago, the latter offered her a reported $675,000, and gave her a cash retainer of $35,000. Following the flurry over "raiding," Ruth returned to Paramount.

But now, it seems, her Warner contract is non-negotiable, and Miss Chatterton has the legal right to remain with Warners. Paramount is understood to be not overenthusiastic about meeting that Warner contract figure.

Committee of Writers Views Picture

Controversy in "American Tragedy" Threatens Suit Over Treatment Of Author's Theme

Developments of the week indicate that the controversy between Theodore Dreiser and Paramount over the screen treatment of his celebrated novel, "An American Tragedy," is definitely headed for the courts.

The issue may be summarized thus:

MR. DREISER wrote a novel which is an indictment of society. His central figure was portrayed as a creature of circumstance and environment, a victim of the forces of which we are all a part.

While the contention is:

PARAMOUNT produced a picture, presenting the same patterns of happenings, but making a contemptible and willful, weak miscreant of the central figure, and thereby entirely justifying society and the fate of the victim.

Never before in the history of the art and industry of the motion picture has the issue between the author and the industry been so clearly defined and brought to bar. This controversy promises to become a landmark in the annals of the motion picture.

Committee Views Film

Tuesday afternoon a committee of writers and publishers, presumably nominated by Mr. Dreiser and his counsel, Arthur Garfield Hays, who is also attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, viewed the picture at the Paramount offices in Times Square, and the following day there was a conference, or perhaps only a conversation between Mr. Dreiser and Jesse Lasky of Paramount.

Said Mr. Lasky: "I had a most pleasant talk with Mr. Dreiser and found him a most interesting person. There was nothing controversial in the conversation. The picture is, I think, one of Paramount's greatest. There will be some retakes—just the customary and ordinary retakes incident to the finishing of a production. The picture is not definitely dated for release. It will not be offered before the early autumn."

Said Mr. Dreiser: "The lines have been drawn, but what is to happen I do not know. If the picture has been brought into line with my story I have not been so informed, and if there is any intent to bring it into line I have not been informed of that, either."

Literary Lights in Group

Among the members of the committee which viewed the picture as experts in Mr. Dreiser's behalf Tuesday were Harrison Smith, Harry Hansen, Burton Rascoe, Carl Van Doren, Ray Long and Ernest Boyd. The full committee previously announced also included George Jean Nathan, J. D. Mooney (of General Motors), Herman S. Oelrichs, Dr. A. A. Brill, Fannie Hurst,

AD COPY HELD 90 PER CENT CLEANER THAN IN 1930 BY ENFORCING CODE

Few Remaining Radicals Are Being Converted

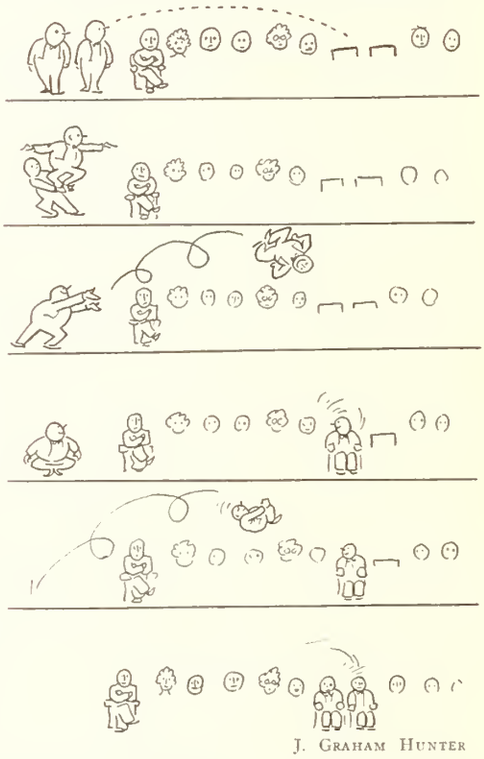
Over-Exaggeration Next in Line of Fire—Problem Raised by Studio Changes After Issuing Stills

The motion picture industry has practically completed the job of cleansing its theatre advertising and "paper" of salaciousness, the MPPDA feels. Within a year, distributors, circuit operators and theatre owners are said to have succeeded in bettering ad copy to the extent of 90 per cent over its status as of 12 months ago.

Occasionally, some "smart Alec" goes in for "hot" copy, but the pressure which is brought to bear immediately following is understood to be of sufficient strength to convert the few remaining radicals.

The big bosses of the picture business have been quietly tightening the screws on "dirt" copy, and managers of distributor-controlled houses, together with home office staffs, now find themselves on the spot for deviating from the Advertising Code which the Hays organization developed some months ago. The executives laid down an ultimatum soon after the Code's adoption, insisting upon clean copy.

Higher-ups in the business are understood to be of the firm opinion that off-color material not only degrades the company whose product it sells, but also degrades the entire industry, giving reformers and anti-industry fanatics an opportunity to blacken the eye of motion pictures.



There has been little or no "bucking the Code." Two companies taking a considerable loss by junking, completely, all paper and press books on two pictures, material which the Hays organization ruled was distasteful.

As a result, the heavy newspaper and ministerial fusillade against pictures, which existed in pre-Code days, has faded.

However, it is pointed out that there remains one more factor which must be revamped before film chiefs and the Hays organization complete the job. And that is misrepresenting the facts in billboard, newspaper and other advertising intended for public reading. Over-exaggerated statements are next in line for elimination. Display captions such as "The greatest motion picture ever produced or ever will be produced," which was used recently by one company, are held to be uncalled for and weakened respect for the industry.

Many phases of misrepresentation are unintentional, particularly those which emanate from the desk of New York ad directors, who rush a campaign on an uncompleted film. Usually, they receive a set of stills from the Coast, and taking these with the feature's title, build up copy around something of which they know but little. In many instances, initial ad copy discusses a picture as being of a certain type, but changes are made in production.

THE SUPER-COURTEOUS TUMBLER TWINS ATTEND THE MOVIES

J. GRAHAM HUNTER

Mr. J. Graham Hunter is a whimsically minded young artist of Broadway and Vineland down in New Jersey. He comes to Broadway to look and goes back to Vineland to muse and draw. He is well-known for his contributions to Life, Judge, the Saturday Evening Post and many other national publications. From time to time when he gets amusing notions about the motion picture industry they will be presented in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Fox Board Realignment Called Bankers Tryout in Wall Street

The shift in the Fox Film directorate to include only two active company executives and 10 representing large banks and industrial houses outside the industry, is looked upon by The New York Times, as a "bankers' tryout in Wall Street."

The paper goes on, "Wall Street observers are prepared to watch the progress of the corporation with keen interest on account of the variance in opinion among film executives and bankers generally as to what constituted necessary expense in motion picture production."

Financing of New U Films Assured; Bank Loans Paid

Universal is now clear of bank obligations and a statement to that effect is in preparation. At the same time the company has built up sufficient surplus to guarantee the financing of production for the new season, by increase of sales as well as retrenchment.

Carl Laemmle is constructing a theatre on the West Coast which, it is expected, will be leased to Hughes-Franklin.

Allied Sifts Report Congress Will Get Admission Tax Bill

Allied States has begun investigation of reports that an attempt will be made at the next session of Congress to levy an admission tax with the law including motion picture theatres. Congressman Wood of Indiana is understood to have expressed himself in favor of such a measure.

Allied States' analysis of the various exhibition contracts being used by distributors will be ready shortly for circulation among members, according to word from the organization's Washington headquarters. Practices differing from those agreed upon at the 5-5-5 conference will receive special comment. It is also announced that Allied is holding up its plan to issue a newsreel containing advertising elements pending comment on the project from its state units, which have been asked for their opinion.

Defends Ad Reels Despite Circuit Ban

Action of the larger circuits rejecting sponsored reels will not materially affect the plans of companies which have adopted the screen as an advertising medium, the film group of the Advertising Federation of America, in convention in New York, was told by W. D. Canaday, vice-president of Lehn & Fink, manufacturing chemists.

"Only 18 per cent of the country's 13,000 sound picture theatres are connected with circuits," he said, "and any harm which may have been done by the circuits is only of a temporary nature."

Stating that advertisers, who he said had been using the screen for 20 years, would continue to use it in the form of talking pictures, Canaday told the group that the threat to successful advertising with sound films lies in criticism that would come because of poorly made reels.

He declared the most successful sponsored films to be short, humorous sketches, romantic skits and travelogues.

Educational Stock Jumps

Educational stock on the New York Curb Exchange last Monday showed a net gain of 19 1-4 points, closing at 42. Financial circles attributed the rise to anticipated earnings for the second quarter to June 30, first half of the company's fiscal year.

Shubert Defaults Interest

The Shubert Theatre Corporation has announced the interest due on the six per cent debentures of the company, will not be paid. Due June 15, 1942, the debentures outstanding are in the amount of $6,450,000.

YATES' DOMINANCE OF LABORATORY FIELD IN MOTION PICTURES FADES

Printing Done by Major Companies

Companies doing their own laboratory work print in the neighborhood of more than a half-billion feet of film a year. An estimate follows:

Warner Brothers	100 to 120,000,000
Fox	150 to 175,000,000
Paramount	150 to 175,000,000
Pathe	150,000,000

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which has part of its work done through Consolidated, uses 125,000,000 feet, and RKO Radio 120,000,000.

Yates started his rise in the laboratory field with a small plant which he operated at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, 10 years ago.

Active Now in Other Enterprises

Buttons, Oil, Banks, Records and Color Are Enterprises in Which He Is Interested

With the expansion of Consolidated Film Industries into fields remote from the laboratory business, there is an indication that H. J. Yates' dream of dominance in this one particular branch of the motion picture industry is fading.

Today Yates, or, reversing the name, Setay, which is the parent company, is a considerable investor in phonograph records, electrical transcription, buttons, bakelite, banks, oil, real estate, financing, color photography, laboratories, and what have you.

Building of their own laboratories by the major companies, a proceedure not contemplated in the earlier days of production, is given by observers as the cause for the narrowing down of the laboratory field. Warner Brothers, Fox, Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Pathe are among the companies having their own plants.

Consolidated does a part of the M-G-M laboratory work; all of RKO's; it has just signed a new contract with United Artists; and it prints for Universal.

RKO, it has been announced, is to build its own plant.

In discussing the situation, a man close to Yates said, on inquiry by Motion Picture Herald:

"Through Cinema Patents we own the patents on laboratory equipment, and the companies making their own prints must pay us a royalty. We still get the revenue without the responsibility. These patents were acquired in April, 1930. We are in a better condition today than we were two years ago."

Warner Brothers and Fox, however, have refused to pay the royalties on laboratory equipment. An infringement suit is pending against Warners, and Fox has been notified that suit will be started.

Yates Warns Meyer-Reiger, Komp of Patent Violation

H. A. Huebner, vice-president of Cinema Patents (Consolidated Film Industries), of which H. J. Yates is chief, yesterday issued warnings to Meyer-Reiger Laboratory and Komp Laboratory, claiming infringement of patents used in the laboratory field.

"We demand that you promptly discontinue the infringements," both laboratories were told, "and that you account and pay over to us all profits which you may have derived from the infringing acts, as well as all damages which we have sustained thereby.

Cinema is also suing the laboratory divisions of major companies and certain independent laboratories, charging them with violations of Cinema patents.

COMPROMISE ENDS FOX-SHEEHAN SUIT

Court Action Recalls Estrangement In Fight for Control After Close Association of Many Years

In the Fox-Sheehan suit there is recalled a close association of many years. A little more than a year ago these two men became estranged during the battle for control of Fox Film Corporation, which eventually passed to Harley L. Clarke.

The suit, which was settled out of court, was not spectacular—for it never went before a jury. Two juries were selected, but neither had the satisfaction of sitting on the case. In each instance there were postponements, until the final decision to compromise.

It is understood that the original claim of Winfield Sheehan, general manager and vice president of Fox Film, was for $310,000. Settlement was made, it is understood from the attorneys, for a quarter million. Samuel Untermyer was attorney for Fox, while Nathan Burkan was Sheehan's legal advisory.

In commenting on the suit, Alvin Untermyer said:

"Mr. Fox retains (as against the $250,000 paid by him) 6,850 shares of preferred stock of Bankers' Securities Corporation of a market value of $140,000, besides dividends of $55,000 on this stock. Mr. Fox is of the opinion that the Bankers' Securities stock (which he claimed belonged to Mr. Sheehan) is alone worth more than the amount paid by Mr. Fox in the settlement."

From Fox Film came the following statement regarding the case:

"The lawsuit brought by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, against William Fox, was settled today, just as a jury had been chosen and the parties were about to proceed to trial before Mr. Justice Peter Schmuck in the Supreme Court.

"Sheehan claimed that Fox owed him $310,000, that being the proceeds of certain stock which Sheehan had placed in Fox's hands for sale.

"Fox claimed that he had invested the proceeds on Sheehan's behalf and that the investment had resulted in a loss, and he counterclaimed against Sheehan for $190,000.

"It is understood that Sheehan's claim was settled for upwards of a quarter of a million dollars, that certain stocks were turned over to him and that Fox's counterclaim was entirely withdrawn."

Curtail Costs, Orders Sam Katz

Sam Katz, vice-president of Paramount-Publix has announced to the circuit house managers that control of expenditure has been shifted from the home office to the field with 70 percent outside, contrasted with 30 percent outside last year.

The manager, said Katz, "must make every effort to intelligently curtail every possible cost in every account under his immediate jurisdiction."

House Passes Operator Bill; Capone Lobby Charged

The Illinois bill requiring a projectionist for each projector in the theatres of the state, passed the House last Thursday by a vote of 77 to 34. Senator Daniel Serritella, cousin of Al Capone and Representative Roland Libonatti, Capone attorney, lobbied strongly for the measure.

Confer on Next Headline

STOCKS RESPOND TO NEW BUYING

Steady Undertone Shown Throughout List—RKO Statement of Quarter's Earnings Is Favorable Note

By THE ANALYST

Although no spectacular gains were made and minor setbacks were recorded in individual shares, the steady undertone in the group of motion picture stocks during the past week gave further evidence of a change in speculative sentiment regarding shares of the leading companies in the industry.

A lot of uncertainty about the affairs of several of these companies—doubts that led to heavy selling of their shares in the general market reaction of April and May—has been cleared up and the stocks are responding to renewed buying as well as to improvement in the general list.

Most of the expected bad news in the way of reduced dividends, lowered earnings and prospective refinancing turned out to be much better than was looked for in many quarters and, with the rumor-mongers quieted for the nonce, some of the picture stocks' old friends apparently are accumulating shares.

Coming in the face of a seasonal decline in earnings, the better tone in the film group was attributed largely to realization of the fact that, based on their 1930 performances, the motion picture companies can always make money if they turn out good pictures, regardless of general business conditions.

The week was not without a dash of favorable news, notably the RKO statement of earnings for the first quarter of the current year, which were reported at $1,013,218, a comparatively slight decrease from the $1,607,622 reported for the corresponding period of 1930. On top of this was the removal of doubt regarding the company's financial status, rumors to the effect that the company had been having difficulty procuring additional cash being hushed by a statement that $6,000,000 had been advanced in a private transaction and the company was now set to go ahead for the next two years. The stock did nothing spectacular, fluctuating between 13 and 14 in light trading.

Warner Brothers was the outstanding feature of the week in the matter of turnover, encountering a demand that was brisk, the quiet general market being considered, and crossing 9 in the early part of the week, compared with its recent low of 4¾. One of the most thoroughly deflated of the picture stocks in the erstwhile bear market, Warners is responding with a strengthened technical position to a better sentiment toward the company in speculative quarters.

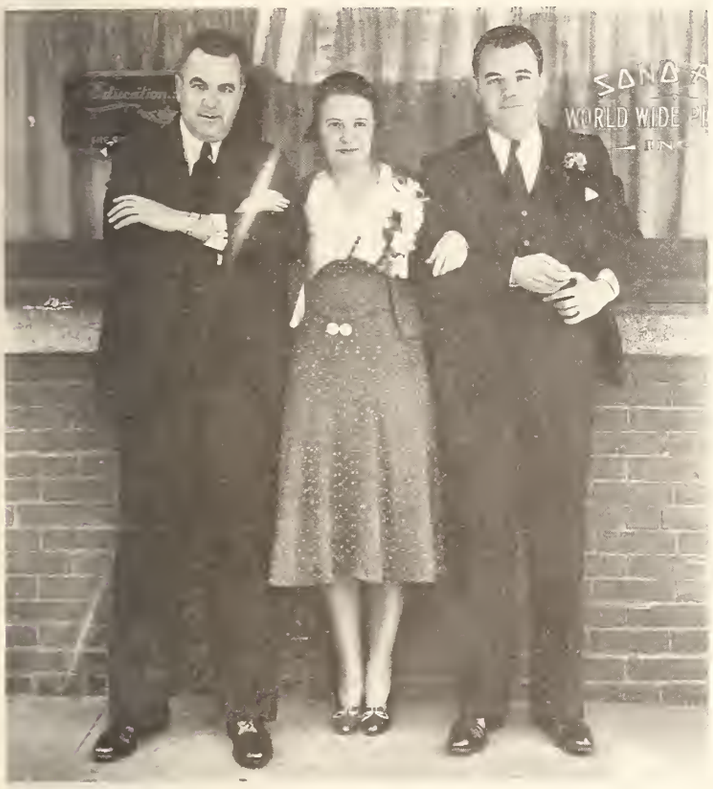
Rising to above 20, Fox held generally in a narrow range throughout the week, while General Theatres was well taken at small advances, which were reflected over on the bond market by a sharp rise in the company's 6 per cent convertible debentures from a low of 39 to above 47, from which, however, they later sold off under realizing.

Paramount, MGM preferred and Consolidated Film shares gained on the week, while Loew's issues, the best actors in the group during the depression, turned heavy, but losses were confined to comparatively narrow limits. Eastman Kodak rose brisky in the early sessions but later receded to around last week's closing levels.

Appearance on the curb exchange tape of Educational Pictures preferred, a thinly-traded issue which ran up more than 19 points to a new high on a turnover of 350 shares, featured operations in picture stocks on the "little board." General Theatres preferred reflected the action of the common shares into which it is convertible and gained more than 3 points, while minor price fluctuations took place in Technicolor and Trans-Lux.

Activity and strength in Warner Brothers convertible 6s, which made the best showing of any stock privilege issue on the stock exchange's bond list, reflected renewed accumulation of the common stock. Paramount bonds maintained the wide gains made last week. Announcement was made that Paramount Broadway Corporation cancelled $125,000 par value of the 5½s under the sinking fund provisions of the indenture.

Pathe 7s ran up about 4 points in a general rise in amusement bonds, while Loew's 6s were unaffected by the comparative heaviness in the stock.



Prexy (Perhaps) Rogers

England has taken Will Rogers gag nomination for the presidency in a most serious vein, as evidenced by the following yarn which appeared in a London motion picture trade paper:

"A boom to nominate Will Rogers for the Presidency of the United States was seriously launched last week-end by the motion picture industry. He belongs neither to the Republicans nor to the Democrats, but he is very popular nationally, and also a millionaire.

"America's fourth greatest industry, the films, could finance the campaign, and it is believed the Oklahoma Democrats would be prepared to present Rogers to the National Convention as the State's favorite son. Not since the days of Lincoln, it is commented, has the White House been occupied by a humorist."

BACK AGAIN. Back again in the U. S. A., having just come from Havana, Walter Camp and his wife, the former Ruth Elder, famous aviatrix, find themselves—er—back again in Havana, or so it seems as they visit Evelyn Brent and Charles Bickford on a set for Columbia's "Pagan Lady."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

EDITORS and publishers of the company's leading newspaper (many of which have at various times devoted considerable space to verbal flings at the industry and at the morals of some of its celebrities) behaved (?) in true convention style at the annual meeting this week of the Advertising Federation, in New York. . . . There ain't no justice!

Believe it or not, Maurice (Thrifty) Chevalier has given $1,500 to Actors' Equity for application to the needs of the sick, disabled and infirm members of the theatrical profession. . . .

Equity, incidentally, now has assets of nearly one-half million. . . . Although in its past fiscal year, the association grossed $155,255 and spent $175,000. . . . Red!

Just for the record: . . . That $500,000 annual payment to William Fox by Fox Film-General Theatres is not salary . . . but represents the time-payment manner in which Fox Film acquired his interests, totaling $18,500,000, in the Fox organizations. . . . The payments will be made over a period of five years. . . .

It is unlikely that the industry will spend, through the Hays organization, $1,000,000 in an elaborate goodwill campaign for the picture business. . . . The plan, which would utilize newspapers and billboards, still is in the preliminary discussion stage . . . where it will remain. . . .

Daily Mirror* Laemmle article, and belittling the research work done by Dave Bader on Carl Laemmle's autobiog, is J. J. Geller, . . . who several years ago was personal representative of Laemmle, from which capacity he was discharged for coloring statements by Laemmle in connection with the life history of Carl, Sr., which appeared in the Satevepost. . . . And for which that Curtis publication became quite heated at Laemmle, even threatening to expose the incident, which eventually was patched up . . . Ax-grinding? . . .

Allied States Association of exhibitors says it "is now battling for:

"Lower trailer costs.

"Better contract conditions."

The name of a mysterious "Mr. Forbes" is mentioned in connection with negotiations now being held at Chicago from which, it is reported, there will emanate a powerful production-distributor-exhibition organization. . . . William K. Saxton, Baltimore city manager of Loew houses, made a bet with R. H. Cherry, treasurer of the Century in that town, that Cherry could not make small purchases in local stores with $5,000 and $10,000 bills if he was dressed poorly, was unshaven and bedraggled. . . . Cherry tried it at a five-and-ten, was promptly arrested and haled into police court where he was fined $1 and costs. . . .

A Universal press sheet attempts to impress exhibitors withe fact that "Up for Murder!" "Is NOT a gangster picture!" . . . And "It is NOT a Newspaper picture—do not play it up as such." . . . Which would be perfectly okay provided the same publicity did not contain a description of a story in which are involved a cub reporter, a newspaper editor, a fight and the inevitable murder which is followed by the shadows of that sinister looking electric chair.

A few paragraphs back, details of a tieup between RKO and Telechron clock interests was revealed. . . . The deal, by terms of which RKO guaranteed Telechron free "plugs" in RKO pictures, in return for publicizing of RKO product by Telechron, is now dead and here's why: . . . . RKO completed elaborate plans for a big campaign with Telechron and then initial pictures in which the clocks appeared were previewed. . . . They were seen about the walls and in most conspicuous corners of offices and homes, but in all instances they were big ones and not of the small desk and mantel variety which RKO agreed would be used. . . . So the clock people balked because plans went awry and the deal was called off.

When Bobby Jones arrived home at Atlanta this week from Hollywood he stated that never again would he appear in films. . . . But a "peek" in Bobby's bank book reveals an entry of a quarter of a million smackers as his share from Warners for that series of golf shorts. . . . Which leaves us wondering what Jones would do if Warners visited him at Atlanta with the offer of another $250,000 for a second series. . . . You guessed it! . . .

FEW are aware that the now famous stock market crash of '29 is directly responsible for Universal still being interested in 119 theatres. . . . The company originally had 300 scattered throughout the country, but, unlike others, soon realized that making pictures and running theatres do not jibe always. . . . So, wisely relieving itself of a terrific headache, 150 were disposed of and then another group of 30. . . . which deals were followed by negotiations with Warners for the remaining 119. . . . The Laemmle-Warner interests could not get together, so Paramount entered the picture and successfully made a deal to take over what was left of the "U" circuit. . . . Contracts were practically ready for delivery, Paramount agreeing to pay part in cash and the remainder in stock which it guaranteed to buy back in two years at a figure approximately 20 points higher than the current late '29 market quotation. . . . But, alas, dynamite exploded in Wall Strasse, values went tumbling and before anything could be done about it, Paramount's stock, part of which it had intended to deliver to Laemmle, reached such a low figure, like all others on the big board, that nothing else could be done but call off the deal. . . . And Universal still is looking for a buyer. . . . Which should set at rest those far-fetched yarns crediting Universal executives with having arrived at the decision to build up a new nationwide theatre circuit! . . .

Kinemacolor was about to revolutionize the industry with color films, with Charles Urban sponsoring the move. . . . Andrews Pictures (London) haughtily announced to the trade that it had "been granted some exclusive positions for cinematographing Their British Majesties' Coronation Procession." . . . NEW FEDERAL FIGHT ON CENSORSHIP FOLLOWS "PRESS GAG" LAW DEFEAT

Courts Make Issue Of Copyright Law In Holdover Cases

Conflicting decisions have finally made the copyright law as it has been applied to the unauthorized showing of motion pictures, an issue which will probably have to be decided by the U. S. supreme court.

In two suits brought in Massachusetts against the Bijou Theatre Company, one by Metro and the other by Educational, Judge James M. Blanton, Jr., has decided that there is no provision in the copyright statute covering pictures, and that even if an unauthorized showing were a violation, it would be inequitable to allow the distributor to bring suit under the copyright law for "what is really a violation of contract."

On the other hand, a decision by Judge William C. Coleman of the Maryland district, coincides with previous rulings ordering exhibitors to pay damages under the copyright law. In Tiffany, et al, versus Dowing, et al, he ruled that Section 1 of the copyright law includes motion pictures.

Southeastern Exhibitors Decide on MPTOA Hookup

Decision to maintain affiliation with the MPTOA was made at the convention of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association Tuesday and Wednesday at Atlanta.

Oscar Lam of Rome, Ga., was chosen president of the regional organization. Hugh Manning of Teowah is vice-president and Love B. Farrell is secretary and treasurer.

Speakers at the convention included M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, Dave Palfreyman, Ed Kuykendall and Carter Barron.

Quigley Trophy for Ball League

The winning team of the Motion Picture Athletic Association's baseball league will be presented with a trophy offered by the Quigley Publications. New York Home offices of major distributors are represented by teams in the league.

Tom Wiley, Film Daily, Jack Moss, Joe Cicato, Variety, Lord Thomas & Logan and Jack Baker also have offered cups and trophies.

Milking America Dry

It is not news that American companies now have in London agents who are on a theatre buying rampage, but the London Film Review has unearthed a new tribe of Britishers who build picture palaces purely on speculation for the express purpose of unloading them to the U. S. distributor-circuits.

Tom Mix Rides Back

Tom Mix is back. And so is Tony, his horse.

Mix will star in six talking Westerns for Universal, the contract having been signed in Mix's dressing room at the Sells-Floto Circus, Bridgeport, Conn. Mix will finish his circus engagement before he goes to Universal City. The signing of Tom Mix marks the return of Universal to the field of the Western. In announcing the move Carl Laemmle said:

Tom Mix

"It may occur to some that it is significant that Universal is returning to a field in which it was formerly pre-eminent but which it entirely abandoned last year. It is significant.. We discovered to our amazement that the field for Western pictures is a very great one, a very necessary one for exhibitors."

Schenck Confirms MGM's Stand Against Wage Cuts

Decision of Loew's and M-G-M against salary reductions, as announced at a meeting of directors by Nicholas M. Schenck, president of the two organizations, and previously reported, is in line with the announced policies of Columbia, Radio and Fox, and is considered to reflect the general attitude of the industry as opposed to wage slashing. The decision also parallels the Hoover administration stand.

Picquet, Kincey and "Taxation Battler" Buchanan in Town

Charles Picquet, H. F. Kincey and Harry Buchanan, all of the North Carolina theatre field, arrived in New York this week for a brief visit. Buchanan, an independent, is credited with having done the most for the industry in its recent successful battle to beat the proposed North Carolina admission tax.

Baker Leaves First National

Warners has purchased the unexpired term of Graham Baker, production executive on the Coast, who will retire from the company.

Repeal of Fight Film Ban Is Opening Demand

Council on Freedom Launching Attack at Washington and in States, Citing Freak Actions

By FRANCIS L. BURT

Heartened by the recent decision of the United States supreme court holding unconstitutional the Minnesota "press gag" law, the National Council of Freedom is preparing to invade Washington next winter with a view to having legislation enacted doing away with motion picture, periodical, radio, book and play censorship, it has been learned.

Coincidentally with the campaign in Washington, similar fights will be started at the various State capitols and in the larger cities, where the police and the vice societies now exercise censorship powers.

Efforts in Washington will be directed at the elimination of book and radio censorship. In the states, however, the fight will be largely against film and play control, the former as exercised by the various boards of censorship with their fantastic, illogical and often contradictory requirements.

Ridiculous Cuts Cited

The National Council on Freedom from Censorship was formed recently by the American Civil Liberties Union, which, unfortunately, has been viewed with alarm in conservative quarters because of its somewhat radical tinge, but the new body contains in its membership the names of so many authors and playwrights of prominence as to obtain for it a respectful hearing at any time.

Among those who are listed as leaders of the movement against censorship are such well-known writers as Fannie Hurst, James Branch Cabell, Rupert Hughes, Inez Haynes Irwin, H. L. Mencken, George Jean Nathan, Eugene O'Neill, Stewart Edward White and Harry Leon Wilson, to name only a few.

The attack on film censorship will be predicated on the often ridiculous cuts made by the censor boards. Thus, it is pointed out, "Maryland bars a kiss on the neck, but winks at a drinking scene. Kansas cen-

Buy Now, Says Meyer

"Buy right, but buy now."

That was the message of Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin, to 150 exhibitors in convention at Milwaukee this week .

This is the time to close contracts, in order to keep the industry in a prosperous condition, Meyer declared.

The Man of the Week in Finance

William Fox, who rolled $750 invested in a nickelodeon into the Fox Film Corp., one of the leading factors in the motion picture industry, broke into the financial spotlight this week when he was dropped from the board of the company he founded. Fox lost control of his enterprise early last year when financing difficultics forced him to sell out to the Harley L. Clarke-General Theatres Equipment interests. His friends say that he has no immediate plans for the future despite rumors linking him with other movie companies.

Dr. Becker Named Directing Officer Of Kuchenmeister

Dr. Rudolph Becker, one of the leading financiers in the film industry in Germany and managing director of Asfi (Associated Sound Film Industries), at Wembley, England, has been named managing director of Kuchenmeister, which controls, Klangfilm, Tobis, Asfi, and subsidiaries.

Dr. Becker has been a foremost figure in the leading producing and distributing companies in Germany. He was at one time an executive of Ufa.

Hollywood Pictures Signs Goldberg To Produce Eight

Hollywood Pictures Corporation has signed Jesse J. Goldberg to produce eight special features for release in 1931-32. Films will be released in New York and Northern New Jersey, by the company's own exchanges, and by independent exchanges over the country.

General to Press Patent Fight in Other Districts

Contending that the decisions thus far handed down in the General Talking Pictures-Stanley litigation over the Ries patent have concerned only one jurisdiction, M. A. Schlesinger, president of General, declares that the fight will be taken to other jurisdictions.

The U. S. supreme court recently refused to review a decision of the court of appeals adverse to General Talking Pictures' suit to have the Western Electric equipment in Stanley theatres declared an infringement of the former's patents.

"Enchanted Child" Like Any Babbitt— Except Different

Lal Chand Mehra!

Perfect Sanskrit euphony. Suggests incense, Oriental mystery, Vedic ethics—the sublime planes of Karma and Nirvana!

Translated, the term means "The Enchanted Child." It is the name of Hollywood's leading authority on Oriental and East Indian affairs.

Lal Chand Mehra has agreed to do double duty on RKO-Radio Pictures' "The Sphinx Has Spoken"—to act as technical adviser and enact the role of a Sikh non-commissioned officer.

Aside from two intense dark eyes, blue-black hair and a centuries-old sun-tan, Lal Chand Mehra is very much like any Mr. Babbitt from Zenith. That is, he wears latest styles and belongs to the usual clubs and lodges of the realm. He lectures at Philomathean Clubs and real estate banquets. He speaks better English than the average American, boasts a couple of American college degrees, and is principally interested in a screen career. This career, long ago, gained considerable momentum and singled him out as the leading technical adviser on Oriental matters.

Lal Chand Mehra believes in monogamy. "Plural wives are for a very rich few in India. Polygamy is not generally practiced," he says. "In fact, no Hindu has more than one wife at a time."

Most books written about Mother India, he says, are based on Indian conditions years ago.

When he has learned film-making thoroughly, Dal Chand Mehra is going back to India and direct educational films that will tend to bring the Old World closer to the New.

But he balks at American food. He cooks his own when he cannot obtain Hindu help. His feasts of spicy meats, rice and curry sauce are the talk and envy of Celluloidia.

Lal Chand Mehra wrote many titles for "The King of Kings." He conducts classes in the Extension Division of the University of California. He was technical adviser for "The Green Goddess," "Kismet," "East of Borneo," "What a Widow," and other features.

MPTOA Declares Circuits Are Frightened by Weak Business

The MPTOA has declared that circuits are calling for the establishment of "some fair method" of zoning, because they are frightened by the depression and slackness in business.

They are demanding, according to the organization, "terrific protection." The MPTOA advocates reassembling of the zoning committees.

Drastic Film Stock Deflation Is Seen in Current Bear Market

Wall Street Paper Analyzes Relative Financial Positions of Leading Companies

Declaring that none of the common stocks of the leading film companies were selling at more than three and a half times their 1930 earnings, the Wall Street Journal sees in the current bear market an unusually drastic deflation of these securities. A number of companies are cited.

"Paramount Publix," it is stated, "now on a $2.50 basis against its former rate of $4, earned approximately $3,510,000, or $1.12 a share on 3,128,873 shares outstanding in the first quarter, and in the second quarter probably will earn 75 to 80 cents a share. Although summer earnings are likely to be poor, the last half of the year usually is the most profitable, so that it now seems possible that Paramount will show from $3.50 to $4 a share this year.

"Loew's reported a net profit of $6,879,960 in the 28 weeks ended March 31, 1931, corresponding to the first half of the current fiscal year, and it is probable that net for the year will be in excess of $6 a share for the common stock."

Prophesying further reduction in admission prices, the article declares that a recent survey of admission price trends made by the Film Boards of Trade "indicates that in the near future average admission prices will be about 30 cents against a former average of 35 cents, making a decline of about 15 per cent."

It is pointed out, however, that this need not mean further reduction in the profits of film companies, since "in the last analysis, salaries of stars and of other film producing personnel are determined by the box office value of their pictures, and if this is reduced, obviously a reduction in salaries will follow." It is further pointed out that other economy measures may be expected to follow.

Buy Now, Says MPTOA

"Buy now—

"If the contract offered to you is satisfactory, if it is fair, and if it is at terms which allow you a fair percentage of profit."

"That's the dictum," says the MPTOA Bulletin, "which has gone forth from the headquarters of the MPTOA in response to many requests asking advice from President M. A. Lightman on the buying of '31-'32 product.

"If, however, deals are held to be unreasonable, if they do not seem to be fair—then it is up to each theatre owner to delay buying until the prices do come down to more reasonable terms.

"Each case is different, but a general rule as given above can be adhered to.

"It is imperative that exhibitors buy on a reasonable basis. Otherwise they should wait until prices are right.

"Buying at a fair figure now means that product can be played when it is new, but this advantage is offset if the deals are at exorbitant figures.

"The situation demands intelligence.

"Each exhibitor must stand on his own rights, but in all cases the element of fairness is essential."

System of Bargaining Is Blow to Production

Independents Crippled From Making Special Pictures and Must Depend on Large Circuits

By W. H. MOORING, London

Those who talk glibly about the stranglehold of America upon the British film industry would be able to find an entirely new slogan if they were to look at the British producing combines themselves. For it is these who fix a stranglehold upon initiative and set the pace at which the whole industry in this country must move.

That pace has been woefully apparent in the post-talker sprint which the motion picture progress of the world has had to run since the Warners made their bold move.

British pictures have made progress: their producers could not very well avoid it. Improvement can come by force of experience as well (though not so creditably) as by sheer effort. And that to a large extent has accounted for the improvement made in British films since the first of the talkers came over from America.

Protected by quota law, British picture-making in the hands of men of courage, foresight, and creative ability, could have taken the world by storm. The investing public of Britain, realizing this, stood by ready to finance a new industry which looked as if it could not fail to return golden dividends.

A Protected Industry

The British motion picture business became what the financiers of old England love out of the depths of their conservative hearts: it became a protected industry. So long as in the old days it had been a competitive undertaking, and a speculative one at that, they were not thrilled. But the moment the quota came, film stocks seemed to take on gilt-edged appearances.

That was the signal for the company riggers. Some were in the running merely to feather their own nests. We can forget them, for the law lets them free and they will need masks of concrete before they ever again can face the investors of Britain.

Others were genuinely persuaded that the great day of the British film had dawned, that they had a real opportunity to help make pictures that could find ready acceptance in the markets of the world.

But they did not reckon with the producer-distributor-circuit powers of Great Britain. They may have realized that they had to look to the native market to cover their production costs. They did not realize that, irrespective of whether they made pictures or mere quota tripe, they were to be the victims of a bargaining system so ruthlessly unfair as to force them untimely out of the business again.

Yet with the exception of a few of the

So far as may be discovered this committee has made no formal report or findings, and interrogation of some of its members indicates a considerable difference of opinion about the merits of the picture and its fidelity to "An American Tragedy" as Mr. Dreiser wrote it.

Preview reports on the production received from Hollywood by MOTION PICTURE HERALD indicated a highly favorable impression of the picture as a picture, without an expression of opinion as to its relation to the novel. Friends of Mr. Dreiser point out, however, that his contention is not as to the merit of the production as a picture, but as to its merits as a screen transcription of his work.

sturdiest, who have managed thus far to scrape along, they have been frozen out. And today, however forceful the enthusiasm and ability of an independent producer in this country, it is nearly impossible for him to make pictures profitably.

Invariably from a single enterprise they emerge thoroughly crippled financially—unless they happen to own their own studios, which is rarely the case—and they must then hope for the best at the hands of the combines.

It is the fact that some of the best films made here have been the product of independents who, however, have made no real business progress because the results of their successes have been plundered by those holding the pick of the British theatres.

It is to this vicious system that the British film industry has been brought largely through protection, which has assured a market here through legal compulsion, where an open market would have insured that merit had a proper hand in the selling of the pictures to the public.

Distributor-members of the Kinematograph Renters' Society and the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association are outlining plans for a conference at which existing difficulties between both branches of the British industry will be ironed out.

Managers Launch Bridge Matinees, Meeting in Houses, With Idea of Building Steady Attendance

Feeling that woman patronage is as essential to the theatre as is child attendance, Fox theatres, to be followed by others, is going out to win the feminine contingent in a big way, employing special campaigns if necessary. In a number of instances Fox theatres have adopted special matinees designed to bring in the women. In all campaigns the circuit is aiming to build up a steady woman patronage for its houses rather than get them in on especial occasions to benefit by special attractions.

In several of the houses managers have inaugurated bridge matinees, and other features for women. Houses will be used as meeting places, in some cases.

Often the picture will lend itself to getting in the women, but even then exploitation must be employed. In the case of a Brooklyn theatre, the manager conducted a nationality contest with "Women of All Nations" and 12 different nationalities were represented in the feminine attendance. The picture, the circuit holds, is a man's picture, but with the aid of an exploitable title a campaign of this kind real results can be obtained, though it can be employed only occasionally.

As in the case of juvenile attendance, the circuit is attempting to get the women to come in at matinees. Matinee business in the neighborhoods is mostly attended by women, as a rule, but Fox feels that attendance can be increased if certain advantages are available to the women.

Members were asked to bring their copyright difficulties to the association before turning them over to an attorney. The organization voiced its opposition to the copyright law and pledged its aid in bringing about an amendment or abolition of it.

A total of 131 registrations, with 100 exhibitors, gives the M. P. T. O. the balance of exhibitor strength in the state and augurs well for the future of the organization, despite the schism.

All officers were re-elected, with Meyer as president, A. C. Gutenburg as vice-president, James Boden as secretary, Ernie Langemack as treasurer, Steve Bauer as business manager, and L. M. National Council Launches Attack Against Censors sors can't stand the sight of a whisky bottle, but kisses on the neck are entertaining. In Virginia all passion must be blessed by a marriage ceremony. Ohio doesn't like pictures dealing with jailbreaks and considers an actress in her underwear as 'indecent,' though lingerie advertisements in the newspapers are not. New York, of all places, bars scenes showing a policeman or an official accepting graft. Pennsylvania, the strictest state board of all, is likely to bar anything."

For the purpose of setting a national precedent, however, the organization will seek repeal of the federal law* prohibiting the interstate shipment of fight films, the only Government picture censorship except that of the customs service with respect to imported films, the latter to be cared for through legislation barring both the Post Office Department and the Customs Service from exercising any censorship whatever.

Radio censorship is of a different type, hiding behind broadcasting station policies. "Three major considerations must be met by any program aimed at making radio free from censorship and firm in its rightful place as a constructive educational medium," it is asserted.

"First, it must prevent a continuation of selective censorship at the stations, now greatly in evidence. Secondly, it must prevent domination of the industry by two or three large groups. Thirdly, it must protect public interests in free speech against discrimination in issuing licenses."

A Simple Platform

The platform of the organization is simple—"that selection of themes for books, plays and pictures should be left to the industries themselves." Laws still exist in all the states as a threat to commercial pornography, it is pointed out, and in cases where good taste alone is involved the public can make its verdict felt in the most sensitive place—the cash register.

"Censorship," it is declared, "is a futile and absurd business. It exists primarily to protect the morals of children by shielding them from certain aspects of life. But children, like the rest of us, can't avoid them. No censorship is complete enough—or can be complete enough—to conceal essential facts, or forbid their dramatization. Books and plays reflect conditions that exist all around us—and racketeers and prostitutes are part of the picture.

"So censorship, in barring these reflections of life, directs itself, not to the causes of immorality, but to its results. Furthermore, censorship feeds the growth of immorality by advertising it with a label, and putting a premium on it with the sign 'Censored.'

*(The Federal law mentioned is the somewhat antique Sims bill of 1912, the real purpose of which was to satisfy the insistence of certain sectional and political interests that motion pictures of the triumph of John Arthur Johnson (Lil Artha'), a Negro pugilist, over a white man be kept from the American screen. The law has been on the whole somewhat ineffective, continuously subject to evasions, the source of some scandals, and in general a non-constructive irritation.—The Editor).

Every exhibitor, every audience will get a great kick out of them. You sure do have to hand it to Hal Roach. His comedies are in a class by themselves."

Here's a sample of what newspapers are writing:

ED JACOBS, Cleveland News: "Clear the way for a new comedy team. No longer will Marie Dressler and Polly Moran hold their practically undisputed leadership in the fun market."

W. WARD MARSH, Cleveland Plain Dealer: "Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd step into the first rank of comedy players."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The "Current Week" brought only nine new lows as against 17 for the "Previous Week." And again only one new high was registered. This new high gross was made by "Daddy Long Legs" at the Apollo theatre in Indianapolis, Ind.

Business generally showed a slightly upward tre with many theatres gaining noticeably over a week a In New York, the Roxy jumped $26,000, and likewise t picture was the same as the Apollo attraction, "Dad Long Legs."

"Daddy Long Legs" a Wow In Baltimore

BALTIMORE—The New theatre owing "Daddy Long Legs," came near the record mark for its 1,600 seats by taking in a gross of $13,000. Its average is $8,000.

Audiences were enthusiastic in praise of this picture and the crowds were tremendous. They loved Janet Gaynor in this.

Next for high was Loew's Stanley, where Joan Crawford appeared in "Laughing Sinners." The gross went to $20,500, which is excellent for this house but not up to some of the records Miss Crawford has run up there previously.

Loew's Century just went about average with a gross of $19,000 on "Up Pops the Devil," with the Loew-Capitol stage show, "Breezing Along."

Estimated takings for the week ending June 11:

"WHITE SHOULDERS" (Radio) KEITH'S—(2,500), 6 days plus a Sunday midnight showing. Gross: $6,000. (Average, $5,500.)

Week Ending June 12

"LOVER COME BACK" (Col.) RIVOLI—(1,982), 25c-50c, 6 days. Gross: $6,000. (Average, $7,500.)

"THE PUBLIC ENEMY" (Warners) WARNERS' METROPOLITAN—(1,300), 15c-50c, 6 days. Gross: $5,700. (Average, $4,500.)

Week Ending June 13:

"PORT" (Ufa) LITTLE—(267), 35c-50c, 6 days. Gross: $900. (Average, $850.)

"UP POPS THE DEVIL" (Para.) LOEW'S CENTURY—(3,076), 25c-60c, 6 days. Gross: (Average, $19,000.) (Shown uptown after one week downtown at Loew's Stanley.)

"INDISCREET" (U. A.) LOEW'S PARKWAY—(987) 15c-35c, 6 days. Gross: $4,200. (Average, $3,500.)

"Long Legs" Is Charlotte Top Notcher

CHARLOTTE—Favorable publicity in the local newspapers and good weather sent the box-office receipts for "Daddy Long Legs" soaring at the Carolina, making it the week's leader. However, "Iron Man" at the Carolina also topped the average by $1,500.

Estimated takings for the week ending June 13:

"IRON MAN" (Univ.) BROADWAY—(1,167), 25c-35c-50c, 3 days. Gross: $5,000. (Average, $3,500.)

"PARTY HUSBAND" (F. N.) BROADWAY—(1,167), 25c-35c-50c, 3 days. Gross: $3,000. (Average, $3,500.)

"LAUGHING SINNERS" (M-G-M) CAROLINA—(1,441), 40c-50c, 3 days. Gross: $6,000. (Average, $5,500.)

"DADDY LONG LEGS" (Fox) CAROLINA—(1,441), 40c-50c, 3 days. Gross: $7,000. (Average, $5,500.)

Gaynor Film Best of Year At Ind. House

INDIANAPOLIS—Janet Gaynor drew 'em at the Apollo, where "Daddy Long Legs" nearly doubled the average and got the best business of the year at $10,000, proving that good pictures can get money. Among the other houses, the Indiana was the only one at par, Brooke Johns being given part of the credit. The Gaynor film is being held over.

Estimated takings for the week ending June 13:

"DADDY LONG LEGS" (Fox) APOLLO—(1,100), 25c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $10,000. (Average, $5,500.)

"DONOVAN'S KID" (RKO) CIRCLE—(2,600), 25-... $6,500. (Aver...

"Daddy Long Legs" Panics Buffalo Runs

BUFFALO—With the weather cold and drizzling rain at the start of the week, the $27,900 chalked up by "Daddy Long Legs" at the Great Lakes was sensational. That's better than $5,000 above average and the best business since "Trader Horn," which got the same figure. The picture garnered most of the business in town, for other houses were away off.

Estimated takings for the week ending June 12:

"DADDY LONG LEGS" (Fox) GREAT LAKES—(3,000), 25c-60c, 7 days. Loew stage show. Gross: $27,900. (Average, $22,500.)

TO THEATRES LOOKING FOR A TONIC

During the last two years no short subjects whatever have been distributed by the Fox Film Corporation. It has confined its activities to feature productions and sound news reels.

Now we change back to short subjects because we have something really new and exclusive to offer.

From every civilized country and from some that are not so civilized have been assembled the actual sounds and pictures for twenty-six one-reel subjects now completed and ready for release. Twenty-six more are in preparation to provide weekly releases.

These, the Magic Carpets of Movietone, are exactly what they seem to be. When you hear an elephant grunt, he grunts — in India — not off-stage in Hollywood. When you hear a Chinese song, it's the real thing, not Chinatown, New York. Japanese temple bells, the cries of wild birds in the Siamese jungle, the sounds of the world at prayer in every religion, the boom of the surf at Hawaii— this is the realism that is rivaled only by actual travel.

The subjects already shown have been received with as much attention as many feature productions.

I am satisfied they will soon become the biggest box-office draw in the short subject field.

Vice President in charge of Distribution,
FOX FILM CORPORATION

SAY REVIEWERS

"PERFECTLY SWELL"

"We sat through eight numbers of the 'Magic Carpet' and had a perfectly swell time . . . Subjects are splendid . . . Full of color and interest . . . As fine an eight minute subject as any showman might want to grace his screen." —"Red" Kann, Motion Picture Daily

"THERE'LL BE PLENTIFUL PLAY DATES"

"If they hold to this standard there'll be plentiful play dates . . . Acceptable anywhere . . . Sound is not dubbed but strictly on the level." —Sid Silverman, Variety

"WONDERFUL PICTURES"

"Giants of the Jungle . . . should encourage exhibitors to exploit the subject in a feature manner . . . Aside from wonderful elephant pictures the magic of interposing beautiful and fitting music over the natural sound adds a hard-to-explain thrill." —Film Daily

"FASCINATING"

"A fascinating series . . . Varied as they are interesting and unusual. The idea is Truman Talley's and editing Louis De Rochemont's. Both deserve a lot of credit for a fine series of short subjects." —Motion Picture Herald

"VITALLY ALIVE"

"Something unique in travel films; something vitally alive . . . If 'Giants of the Jungle' is any indication of the quality of those to follow they may be real rival to newsreel program itself . . . Heartily recommended." —New York Sun

"WORTHY"

"Adroitly photographed . . . Worthy addition to regular program." —New York Times

"THRILLING"

"Giants of the Jungle is thrilling . . . Packed full of interest." —New York Morning Telegraph

"HARD TO DUPLICATE"

"Wild West Today a piece of work that for beauty and thrilling subject matter hard to duplicate in either shorts or features." —Film Daily

"UNUSU[illegible]NE"

"The King s Armada is unusually fine." —Film Daily

"DIFFERENT"

"Happy Days in the Tyrol is different from usual run of shorts and most interesting to anyone." —Motion Picture Herald

"FASCINATING"

"Giants of the Jungle is a fascinating subject." —New York American

"STRIKING"

"The World at Prayer is striking and decidedly worth playing." —Motion Picture Herald

A TIFFANY

VERSUS LUST

OF LIFE IN THE ROUGH!

NELL"

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

The soul of woman laid bare in the foul slums! She went through hell to reach the heaven of her man's love!

An absorbing human drama of passion in the dark . . . A picture aimed for the heart interest of both sexes, all ages and all classes.

IT WAS A GREAT PLAY!
IT'S A GREATER PICTURE!

MACK SENNETT ANDY CLYDE COMEDIES

The very humanness of Andy Clyde's "Pop Martin" characterizations has won a new and unique place for this Sennett ace. His name is on more marquees every week. It should be on yours—as the biggest comedy star name attraction of the season.

MACK SENNETT COMEDY Featurettes

"Match Play!" "He Trumped Her Ace!" "Hollywood Theme Song!" Pictures that the whole industry recognizes as short subjects of real feature merit, both as entertainment and as ticket sellers! Now here is a whole series of them.

MACK SENNETT COMEDIES

With Harry Gribbon, Patsy O'Leary and other equally well-known stars, this series will carry on the Sennett tradition. Then, too, there will be new stars. When you say "Mack Sennett Comedies" in your lights your public knows you are inviting it to a treat.

VANITY COMEDIES
AL CHRISTIE PRODUCTIONS

Their bright stories, the attraction value of such stars as Buster and John West and Glenn Tryon, and the masterly Christie production, have built up for Vanity Comedies a popularity that makes this series a vital factor in your program for next season.

IDEAL COMEDIES

Audiences want more like "Crashing Hollywood," depicting the studioland capers of the Ideal Comedy Sensations, those "Hollywood Girls." Ideal Comedies will provide more of this popular type as well as other sure-fire pictures starring some of the biggest names in stage and screen comedy.

MERMAID COMEDIES

For more than a decade the name "Mermaid" has been synonymous with high speed and laughter. There is vigorous action in every Mermaid Comedy that peps up any audience. They're mighty hard to equal for laughing purposes.

TORCHY COMEDIES

TORCHY IS BACK! The popular Sewell Ford stories promise one of the most delightfully entertaining comedy series of the season. And Ray Cooke is a "Torchy" who might have stepped right out of the pages of Ford's stories of irrepressible youth. Produced by C. C. Burr at Educational Studios.

PASSING IN REVIEW

This department does not attempt to predict the public's reactions to pictures. It does, instead, present detailed and accurate information on product, together with the frank and honest opinion of the reporter.

The Viking

(J. D. Williams)

Drama

Against a thrilling background of ice, sea and seals, Varick Frissell has intertwined the story of the love of two Newfoundland seal hunters for the same girl.

The picture takes its name from that of the boat which later blew up, taking the producer and 25 members of his crew to their deaths in Labrador waters when the expedition had returned to the original scene of the picture for additional shots.

The story is built around the annual Newfoundland seal drive, when thousands of hunters gather from all over the island to launch their kill. Graphic scenes of The Viking plowing through the ice, the imprisonment of the ship in the pack-ice and the descent on the seals by the crew, over the floes, represent the highlights of the picture.

At the opening of the film last Tuesday night at the Central Park theatre, New York, many of the shots elicited spontaneous applause and a pronounced buzz of comment from the premiere audience.

The drama in the picture is to be found in its graphic portrayal of the grim reality of the seal hunt and the battle put up by the crew to carry out its appointed job. The story concerns one girl, a villain and the weakling who comes out with colors flying at the close.

The dramatic direction is credited to George Melford.

Produced by Varick Frissell and Roy P. Gates. Distributed by J. D. Williams. Directed by George Melford. Photographed by Maurice Kellerman and Alfred Gandolfi. Running time, 72 minutes.

Lover Come Back

(Columbia)

Drama

Jack Mulhall, Constance Cummings and Betty Bronson share the lead in this drama based on the eternal triangle theme. A small audience at the New York Globe registered but little enthusiasm for the film as a whole.

The story concerns Jack Mulhall as the general manager of a concern, in love with the secretary to the president, played by Constance Cummings. Betty Bronson, as a young flirt, comes on the scene, and proceeds to occupy all the attentions of Mulhall, replacing Constance Cummings in his affections, apparently.

The organization's president had previously taken more than a single look at his secretary, and with Mulhall at least temporarily out of the way, takes advantage of the situation. Mulhall marries Miss Bronson and then is called away on a business trip. During his absence, his wife carries on some sort of an affair with the concern's head, and Miss Cummings again loses out.

Returning to discover the infidelity of his wife, Mulhall returns to his first love, Constance Cummings, for the concluding sequence.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Story by Robert Shannon. Adaptation and dialogue by Dorothy Howell. Directed by Erle C. Kenton. Cameraman, Joseph Walker. Sound engineer, Edward Bernds. Film editor, Gene Havelick. Art director, Stephen Gooson. Technical director, Edward Shulter. Release date, June 6, 1931. Running time, 63 minutes.

SHORTS

Trouble From a Broad

(Radio)

Comedy

A comedy number centering about the reunion of a group of former army officers, and Fifi, French girl who is accidentally told to use a room in the hotel. In adjacent rooms, with their wives, the men make an attempt to get rid of Fifi, but the wives discover her. Ford Sterling and Lucien Littlefield take the leading roles.—Running time, 10 minutes.

On the Spot

(Radio)

Novelty

Number 12 of the Humanette novelty series, being the story of the reporter sent out to get a great story and then telephoning it to the wrong paper. The heads are made to co-ordinate in movement with the miniature costumes. Eddie Border has supplied the dialogue for the short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

She Snoops to Conquer

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy

In this number Daphne Pollard, comedy player, joins the police force, and makes a bold attempt to end all vice in the city. After a few rather awkward attempts at policing, Daphne very suddenly terminated her connection with the police department.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Splash

(M-G-M)

Novelty

Numerous expert divers indicate how it is done in this short. Accompanying dialogue was written by Joe Farnham. Photography in both regular and slow motion presents the divers in a detailed study of the form involved in performing the various diving stunts.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Bandmaster

(Universal)

Cartoon

Oswald, the rabbit, leads a German band, which shifts from music to humorous lines. The audience seemed to enjoy the number.—Running time, 6 minutes.

In Old Cheyenne

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Western

A Western feature, being one of this company's series of "Thrill-O-Drama" productions. Rex Lease is starred, with Dorothy Gulliver playing opposite as the feminine lead. Lease plays the part of Cheyenne, a stranger on the ranch owned by a friend of his father.

To Rex is assigned the job of clearing up the mystery which surrounds the unwonted disappearance of horses from the ranch. The culprit is finally revealed by Lease as the foreman of the outfit.

A rather unusual idea presented is that of a white horse, which is itself a horse thief, having been trained to lure horses from the corral without human assistance.

There is much hard, fast riding in the film, and numerous scenes depicting the Western mountain scenery. Harry Todd plays the role of Cheyenne's partner. Stuart Paton directed the picture. The audience at a New York house, seemed pleased with the film.

Produced and distributed by Sono Art. Presented by George W. Weeks. Directed by Stuart Paton. Story by Sennett Cohn. Photography by William Nobles. Supervised by Webb-Douglas. Continuity and dialogue by Betty Burbridge. Release date, May 25, 1931. Running time, 62 minutes.

THE CAST

Jim ..... Rex Lease
Helen Sutter ..... Dorothy Gulliver
Frank Sutter ..... Jay Hunt
Winslow ..... Harry Wood
Ben ..... Harry Todd

The Ridin' Fool

(Tiffany)

Western

Abounding in rough riding and fighting, this Western has a number of thrills. It is the story of Bob Steele and his pal, Ted Adams, who are rivals in love, but pals always.

Adams is falsely accused of murder and Bob helps him make his getaway. Then Bob goes to their mutual love to flash his bankroll, but his pal comes into the picture. While they are battling over the money, the girl's sweetheart steals it and departs.

The pals meet again in another city and again fall in love with the same girl. When the girl's brother holds up the stage, they submit to arrest rather than let the girl know the truth. They escape jail and put up a real fight when cornered. The brother then plans to confess but his accomplice shoots him. His dying confession frees the pals and Steele wins the girl.

Running time, 64 minutes. Release date, May 25, 1931.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany. From the story by Wellyn Totman. Adaptation by Wellyn Totman. Edited by Charles Hunt. Directed by J. P. McCarthy. Photographed by Archie Stout.

Staking Russian General to Square Meal for Gold Medal Starts Prosperous Business in Renting

Out of the woes of disillusioned foreign war veterans, diplomats and court attaches, has sprung a prosperous Hollywood business with a monthly turnover of several thousand dollars.

This business is the medal-renting industry, which came into being several years ago when A. W. Hazelton, a numismatist, staked a Russian major-general to his first square meal in months and became the owner of a gold medal as thanks.

Since then, dozens of former Balkan, Russian, German and Austrian officers have visited Hazelton and left with negotiable coin in exchange for medals of honor.

Today this charity has prospered into a paying business. More than 2,000 medals of every description line Hazelton's shelves in a dazzling display of gold and silver.

Rents at $5 to $75 a Week

These he rents to motion picture studios at prices ranging from $5 to $75 a week.

Because it is possible to purchase as many Croix de Guerres as he wants from destitute heroes at $2.50 each, this type of decoration is more or less of a drug on the market, renting for the paltry sum of approximately $1.25 a week, depending on the quantities used and length of production.

The most costly of medals is the British army's Victoria Cross, which sells for $875 at auction and rents for $50, plus a deposit of $500.

Once Hazelton received as high as $300 a week for medals worn by a single actor. This record price was paid by Radio for Lowell Sherman's medals in "The Royal Bed." Sherman wore eight decorations, one of which was the Bulgarian Order of Civil Merit, which cost $150 to buy and rented for $40 a week. It is interesting to note that this medal came from a pawnshop where it had been left by a former Bulgarian officer.

No one can buy American medals, Hazelton said, since there is a law which prohibits commercial traffic in army and navy decorations. The Medal of Honor, if it were purchasable, would fetch $1,000 and rent for $75 a week, plus insurance and deposit.

Special Permission Needed

Before a Medal of Honor can be used for picture purposes, special permission must be obtained from the War Department. Then the decoration must be returned to its owner at the end of each day's use. Any violation of this ruling is punishable by a heavy fine.

There is an interesting story in this connection. A studio needed a Medal of Honor and appealed to the War Department. The department telegraphed that the nearest available one belonged to a Filipino stationed with the battle fleet in Los Angeles harbor.

The admiral of the fleet granted the studio's request on condition that the studio pay the Filipino's expenses to and from the studio nightly and see that the medal was returned to the boy after each scene was filmed! The order was complied with to the letter. The admiral commissioned a lieutenant to see to it.

The Russian Order of St. Alexander Nevski and the Russian White Eagle rent for $25 weekly. These are the two most popular decorations used in pictures. German Iron Crosses, which can be purchased here by the bushel from doughboys who brought them back as souvenirs of the late war, rent for $5 each.

The Russian major-general once visited Hazelton and offered to sell him fourteen decorations for $100. The numismatist refused to become a partner in such a deal and loaned the aristocrat money instead. A week later the medals reached him by parcel post, with a gracious letter of thanks.

All Types of Medal

Every conceivable type of medal reposes on Hazelton's shelves. One of these is a French striking, given to the parents of twenty children. Another was given to a French officer whose duty it was to distribute medals.

The most beautiful decoration of all, Hazelton believes, is the Grecian Croix de Guerre. The plainest are the American strikings.

Though the governments will not traffic in legitimate medals, it is possible to purchase an exact imitation of every known decoration from a French concern which manufactures them for replacement purposes.

The English take the most pride in their decorations, Hazelton asserts, while the Russians are the least interested. This he attributes to the disillusionment brought about by the Russian revolution, which has outlawed all Czaristic emblems.

America and France, he says, are the only two countries which do not stamp the names of their heroes on decorations.

Unions Ask Full Pay With An Offer to Refund Cut in Cash

Suggestion has been made by certain of the projectionists', stage hands' and other unions, that major circuits pay salaries in full, with the union men returning the amount of a cut in cash.

No definite action has been taken on the suggestion as yet, it is understood.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

On Stratification

I HAVE JUST READ YOUR EDITORIAL on "Stratification" and agree with you absolutely, although I like the word "Classification" better. The quicker the producer and exhibitor bring about this classification, just so much sooner will the box-office function properly.

I am also impressed with the Jeannette Stratton Porter article, "Rebelling Against Pictures." I've just shown three pictures in a row that tend to drive more people away from our houses in a week than "Skippy" can pull back in a year. I am no reformer crank, and fight censorship just as hard as I know how, yet I believe there are some things that should be changed within the industry.—E. VAN HYNING, Kelley Theatre, Iola, Kan.

Asking Too Much

"ROYAL FAMILY OF BROADWAY": This is strictly not a small town picture, too sophisticated and Fredric March is terrible as Tony, overacting and altogether a silly impossible role as a temperamental movie star. This one should have been left in the can and not released except in the de luxe theatre, where they may have appreciated it but it is poison in a small town house.

Marion Davies in "Wise Child": For some reason this picture failed to click. A bad title for one thing. They did not go for it at all.

Evidently from the prices being quoted on film from the salesmen who have called, they do not know the depression is on. Some are asking an increase over last year and expect to get it according to their firmness in refusing a contract at lower prices which must come if the small town stays in business.

I note that the circuits that buy the other product have warned their managers that prices must be shaved to the lowest, and yet they come in and ask for more rental than last year. Or as much. Business in this town is fully forty per cent below 1930 for the first four months and it is largely the quality of the product. When you sting them with two or three poor shows, they stay away and do not come back.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Small Town Comment

FOLLOWING ARE SOME OF THE PICtures played by us with comment for small town exhibitors.

"BACHELOR APARTMENT" (Radio). A poor picture for small towns. No box-office for big ones. One of the deluge of mediocre sex-sophisticate stuff coming from Hollywood.

"CRACKED NUTS" (Radio). Terrific drop from standards of previous Wheeler and Wolsey stuff. Radio has been turning out unique pictures with these excellent comedians, pictures that have not gotten the praise and appreciation that they were entitled to by the trade press.

"TOM SAWYER" (Paramount). A small town exhibitor says that this is a poor picture and that kids like Westerns better. It broke all known records in the history of this city for children's attendance. It and "Skippy" are films so good that they are far better works of art than the ones that the young ladies who write criticisms for the newspapers and magazines go into hysterics over.

"VIRTUOUS SIN" (Paramount). Sold originally as "The General," any small town exhibitor in the world could have told Paramount before they made it that it would flop.

"LAUGH AND GET RICH" (Radio). A pip of a picture for small towns, only a little crook stuff. The crime stuff is merely a flash, and this picture should play on your Sundays at your top price, and be well advertised.

I pay more attention to an exhibitor in Squawk Center than to any of the comic sisters and brothers that write criticisms.

On the other hand, the small town exhibitor is closer to values, more independent, far more of a sportsman, and has a keener sense of real worth than any other source of comment I can find.—HERMAN J. BROWN, The New Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho.

Liked and Disliked

THE PASSING OF "WHAT THE PICture Did for Me" was a sad blow to us little guys. That particular department was the heart of your excellent periodical. I note Phil Rand would like to see it in print again and I'll bet 99 per cent of the fraternity are of the same mind. Think it over.

The following pictures were very good: "In Gay Madrid," Novarro, Metro; "Billy the Kid," John Mack Brown, Metro; "Our Blushing Brides," Metro; "The Big House," Metro; "Third Alarm," Tiffany; "Raffles," United Artists; "Let Us Be Gay," Metro, and "Remote Control," Metro.

These were fair: "Command Performance," Tiffany; "She Got What She Wanted," Tiffany; "Men of the North," Metro; "Those Three French Girls," Metro; "Caught Cheating," Tiffany; "Fighting Thru," Tiffany; "Call of the Flesh," Metro.

"Journey's End" was a good picture, of its type, but no action and too tragic. Did not click.

"Way for a Sailor" was an entertaining picture, but too many offensive spots in it.

Tiffany Chimps are good if you don't play them too often. Tiffany Hurst series of two-reelers are not so hot. "Oswald" and "Strange As It Seems" are good.—FRANK E. SABIN, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont.

NBC Head Predicts Home Television in Near Future

Home television within "a reasonably short time" was forecast this week in New York by M. H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company.

The first general use of television will embrace close-ups of radio stars, he said, but he predicted that some time television would bring whole scenes of plays through the air. NBC will establish transmitters in New York and on the West Coast within a short time, he said.

Police Hunting Assailants Of Columbus, Ohio, Showman

Columbus, Ohio, police are still searching for the two men who kidnaped J. Real Neth, head of a local theatre circuit, and threw him from an automobile 50 miles from the city after beating and robbing him.

One of the detectives assigned to the case, has expressed the belief that Neth was "taken for a ride" with designs on his life, for a reason he refused to divulge.

Projectionists Sue

Alex Polin and Charles Schneider, Brooklyn projectionists, have asked the court of appeals to determine whether their expulsion from the union was legal. The appellants state that they were expelled because they criticized the president, Sam Kaplan.

"The Herald is the only trade paper I read at all. In its pages can be found practically everything one needs to keep up with the times. It is the only paper in the field that thoroughly covers the entire industry."

Spanish Talkers Lack Traits of Latin Americans

Commenting on the alleged unsuccessful attempts of Hollywood to produce Spanish talkers for South American consumption, Fortunio Bonanova, the Spanish actor, claims that Spanish productions should be under personal supervision of only one man —one who is a Spaniard, and who has been in America long enough to get our point of view. This individual must possess a knowledge of the various South American countries, and thoroughly understand their point of view and psychology. Productions made for South American consumption, as a whole, should be originals, he says. There are very few American stories adaptable for the Spanish mind.

Musical comedies and revues are always popular with South American audiences. says Bonanova. But they should possess a mixed cast in order to fit the various republics where they will be shown. Chilians, Peruvians, Argentinians, Cubans and Mexicans should all be represented. They all have their own peculiar ways and mannerisms, and these would be instantly recognized and appreciated by the various nationals.

The Spanish field is tremendous, states Bonanova, but until American producers grasp all these fundamentals, and seriously endeavor to incorporate them in their Spanish talkers, they will never make any headway. Of prime importance is the selection of a Spanish director, an artist himself, who thoroughly appreciates these essentials. Hollywood producers have not attempted such a production, which makes the failure of their Spanish product perfectly understandable to every Spanish mind, says Bonanova.

Ike Marks Dead

A veteran projectionist passed in the death of Ike Marks, 73-year-old San Francisco operator. Marks was chairman of the board of trustees of the San Francisco Theatrical Mutual Association, and also treasurer of the Theatrical State Employes' Union. He was associated with the Gary theatre.

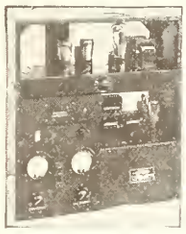
Substitution Clauses Unfair, Exhibitors Say



Use of substitution clauses in current contracts constitutes a violation of the trade practice conference's stand on that policy, according to a resolution passed by the MPTO of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The exhibitors branded as coercive the clause now being used. The meeting also protested against holding out pictures for road-showing when new contracts at increased rentals are demanded.

Changed Fire Law Is More Liberal

Mayor Walker of New York signed the new city ordinance allowing for a complete new system of handling film in theatres, laboratories and studios, rather than "paralyze a great industry by closing the studios and theatres, increase the unemployment situation and deprive the public of a great entertainment."

The law allows 50,000 feet of film to be stored in theatres, drapes on theatre walls and more liberal regulations governing the handling of film. It automatically removes existing violations and eliminates the danger of houses being closed.

The TOCC worked for 15 months framing the bill, and its sponsors believe it will result in reduction of fire insurance rates. It also wipes out litigation faced by Warners and Paramount for local studio violations.

12 of Fox's 1931 Films to Be Finished When Season Starts

Twelve of the 48 pictures on the 1931-32 Fox program will be completed before beginning of the new season on August 9. New improvements at the Fox Studios have enabled work to progress at greater speed than ever before.

"Young As You Feel" and "The Plutocrat," both starring Will Rogers, are two of the 12.

Others are "Transatlantic," with Edmund Lowe, Lois Moran, Greta Nissen and Myrna Loy; "Merely Mary Ann," with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell; "Wicked," with Elissa Landi, Victor McLaglen and Allan Dinehart; "She Wanted a Millionaire"; "Over the Hill," with Mae Marsh; "The Brat," with Sally O'Neill; "Sob Sister"; "Riders of the Purple Sage"; "Skyline," with Thomas Meighan, Maureen OSullivan and Hardie Albright, and "Bad Girl," with Sally Eilers and James Dunn.

Oliver Hinsdell in Charge Of M-G-M's Acting School

Oliver Hinsdell, for eight years director of the Little theatre in Dallas, one of the nation's leading acting groups, has arrived in Culver City, to take charge of the newly established M-G-M acting school. He will be assisted by Ben Piazza, formerly manager of the Orpheum in New Orleans, where Hinsdell was once director of La Petite Theatre du Vieux Carre.

Ruggerio Wins Studio Golf Tournament for Second Time

Gene Ruggiero, Coast film cutter, last week repeated last year's performance by capturing the annual golf tournament of the M-G-M studios at the Fox Hills Country Club, under the auspices of Harry Rapf, producer.

William Snyder, cameraman, took second place and Les Ebert, technician, third. Low score for actors went to Buster Keaton, for directors to Sam Wood and for writers to John Meehan.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 82

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 87—(A) Is all sound film interchangeable, in the sense that all may be reproduced and projected with the same equipment? (B) Explain, in full detail, just why it is especially important that sound reproduction and projection equipment be handled intelligently, adjusted with fine correctness and kept in a perfect state of repair. I think we will let it go at that this time, as that last will require some space to set forth fully.

The question was: (A) Describe the process of adjusting a Western Electric exciting lamp in its bracket so that it will be ready for immediate use. (B) Tell us just what the slit is. Describe it and set forth its dimensions. (C) Name one prime requisite if variable density sound recording is to be picked up correctly. (D) Why is the slit assembly sealed in position and tell us what would be the result if the slit assembly be not set in exactly the right position.

It might be remarked that in this series of questions the same thing may be required to be answered several times. We make no apology for that fact. The same point may be raised indirectly in different questions and then finally raised as a direct question. Some times this results in good, as different minor points are thus brought out.

Incidentally, what is the matter with a lot of you chaps. I know that the men reading this "school" are numbered in the thousands, yet only 600 to 800 answer regularly. I say "600 to 800" for the reason that the weekly Bluebook School answers vary between these figures, with an occasional spurt, which has, however, never reached a thousand. Perhaps I should be thankful you don't all send in answers, however, as even now the number received imposes a very hard task in examination. But just the same, I feel the possibility for good is largely enhanced if a man actually writes out his answer and sends it in. He will certainly remember the thing then.

Those answering correctly this week are: Herman B. Billings, Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, William D. Hotaling, Dan L. Graves, Peter Danielson, N. D. Garling, Richard Singleton, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Robert Lester, James Devoy, James Ledbetter, G. E. Doe, Charles Kane, Robert L. Banning, N. D. Garling, William Gibson, Andy F. Boe, George Thompson, Bill Doe, "Chicago," James Pendone, P. L. Toeping, John Williams, Alex Tipping, H. D. Cole, L. D. Lansaw, D. T. Wyley, Thos. Peters, Harry Lidding, R. D. James, Peter Cermak, John D. Day, Alonzo Zerach, Paul Danning, T. T. Tittling, James McGuire, S. Kay, William Bogert, William G. Samuels, Lory Wright, B. G. Anden, Leroy Bates, R. B. Whithath, Tom Turk, D. Fausett, Pat O'Brien, D. Johnson, George Morgan, Nic Granby, Seymour Carroll, Frank D. Broyce, Lester Daniels, Alexander Tilson, L. Jameson, L. R. Sanders, Ben D. Grimes and R. Channing.

The answers of Herman Billings, Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, Tom Turk, Richard Singleton, Nic Granby, James McGuire, Pat O'Brien and G. L. Doe were essentially equal in excellence in so far as concerns correctness. On the whole, however, the reply of G. L. Doe is best gotten up, in so far as has to do with publication requirements, hence since a selection must be made somehow, it is given preference. It reads:

"(A) To so adjust the Western Electric exciting lamp in its socket that it will be ready for immediate use, first place the bracket upon its supporting pins in the sound head, then place the lamp in its socket, with its filament exactly at right angles with the optical axis of the sound optical system. Tighten lamp in place. If it be deemed more convenient, the lamp may be placed in its socket before mounting the bracket in the sound head, though of course if this be done the filament must be adjusted as above, before the lamp is finally tightened in place in its socket.

"After having proceeded as above the lamp must be adjusted vertically (moved up or down) until the image of the filament is centered exactly vertically upon the slit, which latter may, of course, be viewed through the window located in the side of the tube. When this operation is completed, set the clamping screw controlling this movement up tightly.

"Next the sidewise adjustment must be made. Having loosened the clamp screw controlling this movement, by means of the adjusting screw provided, move the bracket sidewise in the direction regional to bring the filament image into exactly central position sidewise upon the slit. Set up the clamping screw tightly when this has been done.

"The next operation is bringing the filament image into correct focus at the slit. Having loosened the clamp screw controlling the forward and back movement of the lamp, move the lamp forward or back until the image is as sharp as possible at the slit, then tighten the clamp screw.

"These various adjustments may and should now be checked by holding a white card in front of the sound head aperture. If everything is as it should be there will be an oval spot of light, free from all shadows appearing on the card.

"(B) The slit is a narrow opening placed in horizontal position. It is located about half way between the condenser and the slit-assembly objective lens. Both the slit and objective lens are located in a sealed tube. The slit is formed by two knife edges of steel located precisely parallel to each other, separated from each other one and one-half thousandths of an inch. The slit is three-sixteenths of an inch in length.

"(C) If variable density recording is to be reproduced perfectly one prime requisite is that the thin line of light from the slit be in exact horizontal register with the lines upon the film sound track; also they must not be appreciably thicker than was the line of light by means of which the original recording was made upon the film. I might perhaps be allowed to say that this of course demands that what I may term the slit image be sharply focused at the film sound track plane.

"(D) If the slit assembly be not in exactly the right position, the results in sound reproduction could not possibly be perfect. If it be rotated so that the slit be out of horizontal alignment with the lines upon the sound track, then of course portions of the sound track carrying slightly different sound impressions would be illuminated at the same instant of time, with result that the sound would be blurred and imperfect. If the assembly be located too far forward or back, then the whole thing would be thrown out of optical balance and it would be impossible to so line things up that perfect results would be had.

"In fact, these adjustments must be so finely made that a microscope is required for the job. That is why the whole unit is sealed into correct position and may not be moved by the projectionist, who is ordinarily equipped with neither the microscope or the ability to make such an adjustment. If this adjustment be not made exactly right, then both volume and tonal purity would suffer."

A NEW CAMERA

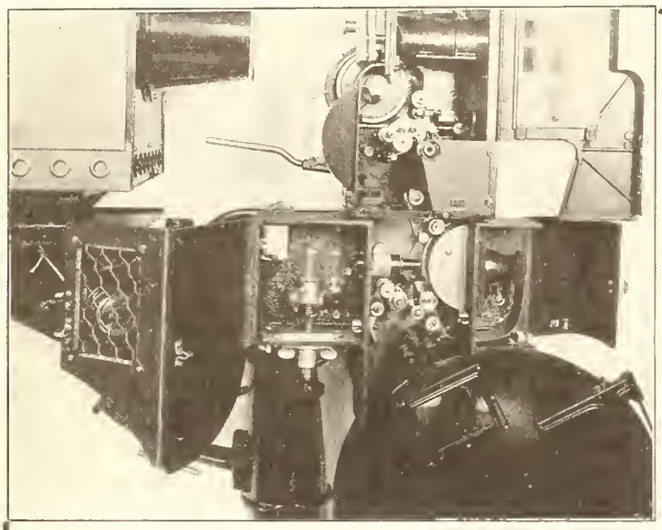
Recently I was down at the new offices of the International Projector Corporation, talking with my friend Walter Green, vice-president of International. While there Green showed me what seems to be about the most clever thing I have, through all the years, seen. It is a miniature (16 m/m) motion picture camera. The camera is about five inches square; something like one and a quarter inches thick; weighs two pounds, eight ounces. The convenience of the thing is rather astonishing. In any Eastman store you may purchase 50 feet of film enclosed in a light-tight metallic magazine. This film is all threaded ready for use. You merely pull back a metal flap on the camera and shove the magazine in. It has a gear which automatically meshes with the camera gears and is ready for use. When the film is all "shot" you just pull this magazine out and send it in for processing.

That's all there is to it, but permit me to advise you that it is some considerable stunt. My compliments to its designer and to International Projector Corporation. This camera seems to have just about everything I have seen in or on a miniature motion picture camera. Its motive power is a spring, the key of which forms an ornament on the outside of the camera. You just pull the key up, wind it, shove it (the key) down, and that's that.

This, of course, has nothing particularly to do with projection, but it nevertheless is a mighty interesting thing and one in which I am sure all our readers will be interested. This camera was designed by our old friend E. S. Porter, head of the now defunct Precision Machine Company, formerly manufacturers of Simplex projectors.

With this little device you may take pictures of interesting events, and later find great enjoyment in their projection on a little screen.

And while I am talking about the International, let me say that they have just fitted up new and very nice offices. You won't know the place when you next visit 90 Gold street. When I visited Herb Griffin's office I could actually hear the buttons on his vest pop from the strain of pride in his new quarters. Well, he's a good scout, and so are all the rest of them, so I am mighty glad they have such comfortable places in which to do their work.



TEN FOOT TELEVISION

It is reported that one U. S. Sanabria, Chicago, is able to fill a screen 10 feet wide with a television picture, though how bright the illumination or how excellent the picture may be is not yet apparent. However, if the report be true and those two items be even reasonably good, it is evidence that strides are really being made in the matter of increased illumination of television scenes. And that, to date, has been and is the one big problem in television, at least insofar as concerns the theatre.

Westinghouse Defendant in Delaware Infringement Suit

A bill of complaint has been filed by the Nakken Patents Corporation in Wilmington, Del., district court against Westinghouse Electric Supply Company, Westinghouse subsidiary, charging patent infringement on a means for transforming light impulses into electric current impulses.

The bill states that among the corporations licensed by the Nakken Patents Corporation to use the invention are Warner Brothers, Inc., the Vitaphone Corporation and the French Telegraph and Cable Company, Inc. Enjoinment and accounting of profits is asked by Nakken Corporation.

New Sound Apparatus

New Photophone For Small House Sells at $1,600

RCA Photophone will market another AC apparatus for theatres up to 500 seats, at $1,600.

New terms have been arranged. The equipment may be acquired by the down-payment of $100 and weekly payments of $25 for two years.

Weekly payment includes rental, insurance, finance charges and service at the rate of one call monthly which, under this plan, fixes the service charges at $32.50 per month. At the expiration of the two-year period, the exhibitor may continue service.

The new special size sound head is of the new belt driven design with AC operated exciter lamp. Having a cubical content up to 75,000 cubic feet, Photophone engineers have designed an amplifier that is 24 inches wide, 11 inches high and eight inches deep.

The apparatus is operated with 110 volt, 60 cycle and 50 cycle AC and 115 volt DC power supply, with slight increased cost for Powers projectors or DC power supply. No batteries or motor generators are required.

DEALERS WANTED

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

OSHKOSH, WIS.

DEAR HERALD:

This is the town made famous by old Chief Oshkosh and Uncle Carl, although we think Uncle Carl had more to do with it than the Chief did.

Every time we come here we like the town better. There is something about the place that impresses you as being a very nice place to live, and besides that, Lake Winnebago comes right up to the corporate limits and it is said to be a good place to fish, and now if they have a good golf course we can see no reason for having anything else.

Perhaps one reason we like the town is because of a number of friends we met here, among them being Lou Folk, manager of the Oshkosh theatre; Arthur Shonborn, manager of the Strand theatre, and Jimmie Hart and Will Shields, projectionists at the Strand. These boys took extra pains to make our visit pleasant and they succeeded beyond our expectations, and we now have Oshkosh on our calling list permanently.

Mr. Folk impressed us as being a man who knows the show business from John Bunny and Flora Finch to Clara Bow, and he is as full of stunts to put his shows over as Al Christie's airedale is of fleas. Not only that but he stands ace high in this community, and that means a lot in the show business, a position a great many chain managers do not occupy for seven or eight good reasons which are not necessary to mention here.

It is none of our doggone business what the Fox organization does about their managers, but we will venture the prediction that if they ever change managers of the Oshkosh theatre they will not better matters any, with chances of doing a whole lot worse.

Around the World on Skates

You have no doubt heard of "Tree sitters," "Pole sitters," "Marathon dancers" and "Altitude endurance records" and all that kind of stuff, but we found the king pin of all of them here at the Oshkosh theatre tonight.

On April 2, 1928 there were 632 people who entered a contest at Hollywood which was being sponsored by Dr. G. E. Thompson, some of the contestants being girls. The rules of the contest were that they were to cover the United States and Europe on roller skates, except when they had to cross the water, then they were required to skate eight hours each day on the deck of the steamer. When they came to sand or mud where they couldn't skate they were to jump a rope until they could use their skates. They were not allowed to use liquor or tobacco in any form nor associate with women (NOTE: There's one contest we will never be in). They were not allowed to sleep in a bed and must launder their own clothes and they were required to take a bath in a lake or river every day, winter or summer. They could play a three-day engagement at theatres not to exceed a total of $10 for the three days, and with this money they were to pay all their expenses.

Out of the 632 that started in the contest only three remain. Some were killed in automobile accidents, some died from exposure, one was killed by a boa constrictor in South America and the balance have withdrawn.

Frank Fielding, one of the contestants we met here, is responsible for the foregoing story of this contest. He says he and two others have covered South America and have about finished this country and will soon start for Europe. The contest is to end on April 2, 1936 at Hollywood.

The winner of the contest is to receive $70,000, with compound interest at 6% from April 2, 1928. Fielding claims he has already traveled 33,000 miles on roller skates and visited 21,005 theatres. He does a rope and roller skate act on the stage that is very clever. He carries an ordinary sized grip equipped with a battery, a head light, a tail light, a parking light, a bell and horn as a ballyhoo on the street and he attracts a lot of attention. He also has a sign announcing the attraction at the theatre. We saw him walk behind a couple of girls on the sidewalk and he squawked his horn and they jumped about 6 feet high, for it sounds just like an automobile horn.

Columbus discovered America, Lindy discovered Paris, Byrd discovered the South Pole. El Brendel made a round trip to Mars, Volstead started the cellar breweries, and these three boys are going to cover the world on roller skates, and now, what next? If this thing keeps up we are liable to start voting the Democratic ticket and after that you can look for anything to happen. We are not vouching for the truthfulness of the foregoing statement, and you can believe it or not, that's what we are doing.

All "Hanging" Together

Some woman writer says that married men should be required to wear some kind of a badge to distinguish them from single men. Good gosh, that won't help matters any. These women would chase 'em anyhow. They've just about got us run ragged now. Married men don't need badges. Anyone can tell a married man by the woebegone, henpecked expression on his face. We can tell 'em as far as we can see 'em. What we married men should have is a law to protect us from these designing women. As it is now we are sunk. We haven't a chance in the world. Boys, we've GOT to hang together for mutual protection.

"ILLICIT." This is another film that should have been soaked overnight in sheepdip before they released it. This is another case where the old "triangle" theme comes in except that this girl had seven or eight lovers. Number seven and number eight were the two lovers who furnished most of the agony during the first six reels.

We don't know whether this one was intended as an argument for companionate marriage or not, but the girl and lover number eight took about five reels to determine whether they should get married or live just so-so. "So-so" won up to the sixth reel and then they called in the preacher and papa.

We understand that Mae Tinee gave this one a 3-star rating, but we would rate it nothing plus, for the title means nothing and the picture means less, which is another instance where great minds differ, with chances that neither of us know very much about it. This might be considered a good picture if you don't weaken, but we were in utter collapse.

Just a Bad Memory

We are plumb, thoroughly disgusted with our memory. We met the manager of the Fox theatres in Fond Du Lac and we failed to set his name down and now we can't remember it. We are sorry for this, for he is sure one swell fellow and showed us every consideration and we want him to know that we appreciate it. He called up Mr. Ainsworth of the Garrick theatre and told him we were coming over to call on him, and what do you think that guy Ainsworth did? He took about 50 copies of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and set them around on the office furniture so that when we got there these copies stared us in the face everywhere we looked. He had them stuck everywhere except on the ceiling. He did this so we would know that it wasn't necessary to ask him to renew his subscription. That Ainsworth fellow is a mighty smart chap.

Charlie Thrasher lives right on the bank of Green Lake, and Green Lake is said to be full of walleyed pike and black bass. When we called on Charlie he was out hoeing in the garden, and there is something wrong with a man's head when he will work in a garden within a stone's throw of where a lot of pike are suffering for someone to throw in a hook. The authorities ought to look after Charlie. He takes the HERALD but that isn't sufficient; it Covers the Field Like An April Shower, but it don't cover the lakes and fishing.

We have something important to tell you about our two very good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Eckhart, who own the two theatres at Wisconsin Rapids, but that will have to wait until next week, for our space is full, and when we send in more than enough to fill the space George Schutz has three or four fits and Jay has to give him castor oil. But speaking of castor oil. That guy Ainsworth had a bottle of it sitting on his desk, and when we asked him what it was for he said, "Well, you see all these HERALDS around here, what else would you recommend. Gee whiz, wasn't that a slam on a perfectly good magazine?

Show Advertising Economic Force, Hoover Advises

In a White House message read by Gilbert T. Hodges, president of the Advertising Federation of America, at the organization's annual convention in New York this week, President Hoover said:

"It seems to me most appropriate that at your annual convention you propose to clarify the function of advertising as an economic force, so that its benefits may be better advertising not only by those who employ it, but by the public to which in the aggregate it renders its greatest service.

"Advertising has played an important part in raising our standard of living, in stimulating invention, and in maintaining competition. By promoting production and distribution it has brought within the reach of many the comforts and conveniences previously enjoyed by the few.

"The theme of your convention is especially timely because of the part that sound, constructive advertising is bound to play in accelerating the return of normal business activity."

Other speakers were Governor Roosevelt, Mayor Walker and Charles E. Murphy, president of the Advertising Club of New York.

Murphy asserted that wages must not be cut, and this was a forecast of the keynote speech of Hodges, who flatly condemned any remedies for depression which include lowering wages, prices or standards, and said: "We must stop advertising bad times."

Master of Ceremonies Now Is Dance Producer

Teddy Joyce, one of Loew's popular m.c.'s, has for the past six months been training a line of six boy dancers and six girl dancers, who are known as the Teddy Joyce Rhythm Dancers. These line dancers, two separate acts, are now working together in the "Crazy Rhythm" unit, which Joyce is m.c'ing around the Loew deluxe circuit. Incidentally Joyce had not been working for Loew's for some time but is again under his old boss, Louis K. Sidney.

UNION PUSHES "CANNED MUSIC" FIGHT

Continues 2 Per Cent. Tax To Support Fight

Federation Votes to Initiate "Living Music Week" — Weber Is Re-elected President 32d Time

The musicians' attack on "canned music" is to be continued and even emphasized, as a result of action taken by the American Federation of Musicians at its 36th annual convention in Chattanooga, Tenn.

In the face of efforts in the convention to end the advertising campaign which the union has been conducting on a nation-wide scale, appealing to the public to demand actual musicians in talking picture theatres, the delegates voted to continue the campaign and the 2 per cent tax on members that supports it.

In addition, the convention approved a proposal to have a certain week designated as "Living Music Week" during which the musicians' interests will be exploited in various special ways. Determination of what week this will be was left to President Joseph W. Weber, whom the convention re-elected for the thirty-second time.

President Weber was unopposed for re-election, as were H. E. Brenton of Boston, treasurer, and G. B. Henderson of Toronto, Canadian executive committeeman.

In the election of officers for other posts, Charles L. Bagley of California defeated James C. Petrillo, head of the Chicago organization, for vice-president; and W. J. Kerngood of Newark, secretary for the past 12 years, was re-elected, defeating P. Ringius of St. Paul. Elected to the executive board from the United States were C. A. Weaver of Des Moines, F. W. Birnbach of Minneapolis, A. A. Greenbaum of San Francisco, and A. C. Hayden of Washington.

The 1932 convention will be held in Los Angeles.

HARRY BLAIR

Organists who have dealt with Mr. Blair, manager of the organ and slide department of Shapiro, Bernstein and Company, have been after us for the past six months to mention this ever-genial and hard-working fellow—and at last our efforts to obtain his photo have been successful.

Born in Syracuse, N. Y., some time ago, he found at the age of 7 that he had a singing voice. His folks decided that a choir boy he should be—and he was for five years. At this early age he got a hankering to see the "big city" so eventually hied himself to New York, where after working at many different positions he finally broke into the show business.

He toured the country in a piano and harmony singing act, known as the Curtis Trio, and then made a name for himself with the blackface act known as Feiro and Blair. Traveling the country and never having a permanent home finally forced him to give up this wanderer's life and enter the music business. He is now thoroughly familiar with every department.

Five Weddings in Week

During the week beginning Monday, June 15, five genuine weddings were performed on the stage of the Mastbaum theatre, Philadelphia, with all the beauty and dignity of church ceremonies. There were a score of bridesmaids and appropriate wedding music. Each couple was the recipient of valuable wedding gifts, including a honeymoon trip to Atlantic City for one week, wedding rings and bridal gowns and radios.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending June 18

Featured in the Fred Evans-Publix stage-show "On Ze Boulevard" are Libby Holman and Rudy Vallee, with Vallee and the colored boys sharing about equally in the honors. Show opens to a scene showing the Eiffel Tower, in front of which Vallee, Bruce and an unintroduced man introduce the show with song. The Evans-Bines Girls follow with a "horsey" routine while the pit band plays "King's Horses." Sonny, Teddy and Ray, three colored hoofers, received a lot of applause for their rhythm dancing much of which was new steps. They are followed by the Rodion Dancers, two girls and a man, who first do a graceful ballroom waltz routine and later on close the show with an adagio routine. Rudy Vallee, for his spot, sings, "Moonlight Saving Time," "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver" and then gives his impression of Chevalier, singing an American song in his French dialect. This was the outstanding bit of the show. The Evans-Bines Girls follow with a well-performed toe routine. Libby Holman, torch singer, who has been singing in musical shows for the past two years seemingly forgot that this house is as large as it is, her voice reaching part way back but not far enough for all to hear. The two numbers, "Body and Soul" and "Moanin' Low," that have been associated with her, of course were in her program, but there was something lacking in her delivery of them, something that fell short of this audience's expectations.

Eddie Bruce, comedian, held up his end with comedy-hokum and a burlesque hypnotism bit that was very laughable.

No overture this week, due to long stage-show. Crawford organ solo, reported on Organ Solo section.

Feature picture this week, "I Take this Woman," but the main attraction is the stage-show.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending June 10

A feature of the Mickey Mouse convention held in Milwaukee June 6 was Fanchon & Marco's "Mickey Mouse" Idea. The Idea is preceded by a number by the orchestra under the direction of Don Wilkins, which gives its various members an opportunity to engage in solo bits. The feature of the prelude is the singing by Tom Kelly, Harvard Glee club tenor, who sings "One Alone" from "The Desert Song."

The Idea proper opens with the chorus attired in summery green and yellow costumes carrying miniatures of Mickey Mouse, doing their stuff. They give way to Helen Petch, who carries on a patter with Chrissie Dale, attired as Bozo, the educated dog. Miss Petch winds up the episode with a bit of snappy dancing.

Three Rolling Stones entertain with a bit of nonsense and wind up with a slow motion fight, with the one member of the trio serving as referee. The chorus of sixteen Sunkist Beauties again makes its appearance attired in Mickey Mouse costumes.

They step into the background as Minnie Mouse appears in the form of a cyclist who performs in a snappy manner and there is an acrobat who walks up a group of stairs on his hands and keeps time with the music.

Louis and Cherie, two trapeze artists, wind up the final episode, while the chorus performs on swings in the background. The entire Idea is staged for the purpose of appealing to the children and does so successfully. The Silly Symphony is also incorporated into the idea and grotesque figures perform against a darkened background and stage, and meet with hearty approval from the kiddies. Toots Novelle depicts Mickey Mouse and is much in evidence through the Idea.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending June 17

Walt Roesner and the Fox Concert Orchestra offer an inspiring prelude to the stage show this week with selections from "La Boheme" woven into a symphonic poem. Joaquin Guaray, tenor, pleases with "Dream a Little Dream of Me," and accommodates with an encore.

The Fanchon and Marco offering is "Tomorrow's Stars," a galaxy of headliner talent from which more is to be heard in the field of entertainment. The act is really a vaudeville performance, but is very neatly tied together and is presented with an exquisite setting of blue in which stars form the principal decoration.

A curtain covered with portraits of stars is in sight a moment and when this goes up the orchestra is revealed on the stage, with the star performers in position. The artists introduce themselves in song, telling their specialties. Selma starts the ball rolling by doing a tap dance on her toes and getting a good round of applause.

Dorothy Welch, introduced as the little girl with the big voice and tomorrow's Galli Curci, sings an air by Victor Herbert, and Chiyo Kadomatcu, a Japanese beauty, follows with an Oriental dance and some patter in her native tongue.

Helen Ireland, "one of the few girls, outside Rudy Vallee, who plays the saxophone," does her bit on this intrument, and Buddy and Gretel give a whirlwind exhibition of ballroom dancing. Harry Stockwell sings a sentimental ballad while Wanda Allen dances.

An impersonation of familiar figures in talking pictures is offered by Fern Dale, who takes off Marie Dressler and Will Rogers in killing style. Mary Miles, acrobatic dancer, offers some refreshingly different steps and stunts and seems equally at home on hands or feet.

Anderson and Allen, featured as "Barons of Balance," might just as well have been dubbed kings, as they proved topnotchers. As a contrast to their feats of strength and balance, Theal Nelson gives an exhibition of breath taking tumbling.

In between the acts there are short comedy skits by Bernie, Veronica and Walker, with more impersonations of famous screen stars.

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending June 18

The Paramount Pit Orchestra, ably led by Rubinoff, the dynamic conductor, presented an overture of "Maurice Chevalier Songs." This consisted of songs that the French star has been instrumental in making famous. Rubinoff pleased as usual with his rendition on his violin. Elsie Thompson organ solo followed the Paramount News Reel (Organ solo report on Organ solo section).

The "Collegiate Rhythm" unit, prepared especially for this house, proved to be a peppy and entertaining affair and featured Ethel Merman and Charlie Davis; Ethel, as guest artist who made debut in this house, taking the main honors.

Show opens to simple but artistic scene in which Charlie Davis and his gang, mixed in with the ballet sing "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," accompany Frankie Parrish, band tenor in a rendition of "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "Betty Co-ed." After the singing of "Betty Co-ed" and some comedy stunts with Phil (Tubby) Davis, the ballet dancers perform a snappy rhythm routine and then a calisthenic routine. The Lassiter Bros. seem to be spotted wrong in this unit, their comedy acrobatic dancing routine usually earning them much more applause than they received at show caught. Charlie Davis and his gang (15 real musicians) entertain again this week with a routine of songs, comedy and fine playing. Though all of these boys do bits each week, the members outstanding in their offerings are, Charlie Davis, Frankie Parrish, Phil Davis, "Dizzy" Wiliford and Carl Vandiwalle. Individually they are good performers and collectively this band is one of the best.

Reis and Dunn, radio stars presented a cycle of their own comedy songs which they have made famous over the air and earned themselves a great reception.

The band next offered a comedy number, "Minnie the Moocher," with the boys all accompanying "Dizzy" Wiliford in that weird "Harlem Singing." Davis then made a most flattering introduction to Ethel Merman, who won a flock of new friends with her singing of "Smile Darn Ya Smile," "I Surrender Dear" and "I Got Rhythm." She earned an encore of the last named number, and was also forced to sing it for the finale, in which the entire company participated.

With the acquiring of Earl Burtnett and his orchestra, station WGN has added another of the country's famous dance bands to its already long roster of noted dance aggregations. Out on the Pacific Coast, where they hail from, Earl Burtnett and his orchestra are recognized as the outstanding band of the West and it is predicted they will become a national institution when the Midwest becomes acquainted with them through WGN, which is taking their music several times nightly from the famous Lincoln Tavern where they are filling their first engagement outside of California. Burtnett's is a large orchestra and the motion picture fans will remember it as being in "Broadway Melody," "Gold Diggers of Broadway" and "Reaching for the Moon." Not a minor part of the organization's fame rests on Burtnett's Biltmore Trio, the boys with the high sweet voices whose harmony blends so beautifully.

Baby Rose Marie is losing her tonsils. The six-year-old trouper will desert the microphone and the footlights for a six-weeks engagement in a hospital, and at home, during which time the juvenile Sophie Tucker will forget she can sing, and remain very, very quiet. She has cancelled NBC and vaudeville contracts for the period of recuperation. At an age when most children are just learning their A B C's, Rose Marie is a radio star and her name flashes in theatre bright lights.

Herbie Kay engaged in something like a class reunion when he went on the air from the Trianon ballroom on June 2nd. Herbie's theme song is his fraternity song, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon "Violets." As usual this song was used to open his first broadcast for WGN and attracted the attention of two former classmates in widely separated parts of the country. Both sent him telegrams of congratulations, one from far-off Arizona and the other from Ohio.

Del Owen and Allan Grant in their double piano concerts are proving a popular twice-a-week divertissement . . . Gail Bandell, the original "Sunshine Girl" of radio and a pioneer in the radio field is on WGN twice weekly with her own particular brand of songs and chatter . . . J. Fred Coots, composer, radio and vaudeville star, and Francis Uptown of the Follies, have formed a partnership for radio and vaudeville appearances.

Fred Waldner, popular young NBC tenor, will soon be able to add "call letters" to his name. Fred, who is now a possessor of a bachelor of arts degree, is a graduate of Northwestern University.

ORGAN SOLOS

CON MAFFIE (New York City Paradise) the new guest organist at this house who is billed as "Wizard of the Keys" lived up to all expectations of this audience by giving them personality, showmanship and good organ playing. His first novelty is that old solo called, "A Lesson in Applause" and this reviewer, who has heard and seen this same solo presented many times, was surprised to see the way in which a known mediocre solo could really be "sold" if it is presented correctly. This old stunt is the applause getting solo in which the pictures of Lincoln, Lindbergh and the American Flag are inflicted on the audience to get the organist applause for himself, but Maffie presented in a manner, wholly different and legitimately getting applause for himself nevertheless. He used, as his singing number, a special for the boys and girls to the tune, "London Bridge," "Springtime in the Rockies," and "Blue Heaven." There are a number of organists who think that songs must be played in the same combinations all of the time, but not this fellow Maffie. He changes, not only once in one song but often two or three times, giving the organ a new tone for every tune played.

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill, L. I., RKO) presented as his midweek solo a combination community-sing and classic novelty entitled "Faithfully Yours." Opening with the song, one chorus regular, one special, he proves his faithfulness by playing bits from numerous requests which he had received. A classic, Chopin's Opus 64, No. 2, was ably played as a straight spot solo, beautifully colored effect slides enhancing the presentation. "Rocky Mountain Lullaby," played as a ballad, and "Dream a Little Dream," played "hot," finished up this entertaining solo.

IRIS WILKINS (Milwaukee Fox's Wisconsin) offers for her organ number, "News Notes." Selections played include "Ninety-nine Out of a Hundred," "Please Don't Talk About Me," "When I Take My Sugar to Tea,' "I Surrender," and "Smile, Darn You, Smile." Miss Wilkins has a pleasing personality and gauges her playing according to her audiences, so that she has a healthy songfest at each performance.

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) offered his usual organ concert of three numbers this week and, as usual, received a good reception for it. A title slide first announced "Prelude in C Sharp Minor" which Crawford played with pleasing combinations. Following this, he played, "The Rosary," using word slides as a blue spot lit up the organ. For closing he played in his own inimitable style, the Finale from the ballad, "Dance of the Hours."

C. SHARPE MINOR (Brooklyn Strand) did well with another of his entertainingly different organ solos this week. This one opens with an oral announcement by Minor, via mike, words of which appear to be spoken from a motion picture of him on the screen, to the effect that he would first play a medley of Victor Herbert's masterpieces: "Ah Sweet Mystery of Life" and "Kiss Me Again" were then played in combinations rarely heard in organ solos these days. These two numbers were, of course, played in a straight spot light.

Following this with a chorus each of "Southern Melodies," namely: "My Old Kentucky Home," "Way Down Yonder," "Swance River," "Oh, Suzanna" and a final chorus of "Dixie Land" for the audience to sing. Surprisingly, this audience lustily sang all of these numbers, even better than they sing new popular numbers.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Hello Everybody

It is pretty generally known that the instrumental piano and teaching piece, "A Mother's Prayer," published 32 years ago in the little Grand St. Music Shop of Theodore Lohr, ultimately reached a sale of over a million copies. . . . It did not have to be plugged or pushed. The natural beauty of the simple and beautiful melody took hold of its own accord and thousands of teachers and pianists used it in their daily work of education, recreation or entertainment. . . . Inspired by the fine thought of the melody, L. Wolfe Gilbert has written English lyrics to the same and for the first time the song will be published with a frontispiece, complete words and music as a vocal composition at a popular price. . . . Mr. Gilbert's publisher, Edward B. Marks Music Company, succeeded in making an arrangement to this effect with the original composer, I. B. Arnstein. . . .

"One More Time" continues to reign as one of the hottest tunes of the season. . . . Written by Buddy DeSylva, Lew Brown and Ray Henderson and published by the company bearing the boys' names, this swell number adapts itself to the "moanin' low," "Get hot" and "Harlem singin'" style connected with the "shoutin' of the blues." Other recent songs by the boys are "Come to Me" and "If You Haven't Got Love." . . . Both of these numbers are from Gloria Swanson's latest picture, "Indiscreet." . . . Looks like another banner year for Buddy, Lew and Ray and also for the firm of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc. . . .

Lester Santly is back, looking fit as a fiddle after a successful (in a business sense) trip abroad. Les has a lot of interesting things to say, so look forward to the next issue in which these things will be. . . . Al Sherman, Sid Clare and Charlie Tobias have had accepted by Santly's their latest tune, title of which is sure appropriate for this month. . . . It is "June Time Is Love Time" and it is one of the few songs that are selling. Harry Link and Dorothy Dick have just composed a song called "The Kiss that You Forgot" that looks like it has "it"! . . . Now that Jimmy Clark is back on the job in the organ and slide department of Witmark's, we-all have to take his publicity with a grain of salt—Jimmy is a great fellow but he is a little too enthusiastic about everything . . . but then, it is much better to be enthusiastic than not to be. . . . Mitzi and Valenti, originators of the "Dracula Dance" and formerly featured with the Hungarian Imperial Ballet, are now breaking in their new Dracula routine for picture houses. . . . They just closed an engagement at Loew's Orpheum, this city. . . . Armand Valenti, the male member of the team, just returned from Hollywood where he took part in a number of pictures. He is well known on the West Coast for his style of character dances. . . . C. Sharpe Minor, w. k. organist who has been featured at the Warner-Strand, Brooklyn, is now at the Warner Beacon, New York City, for an indefinite engagement. . . . Adolph Goebel is now at the Valencia, Jamaica, after a month's engagement at the Loew's Pitkin, Brooklyn. . . . Johnny Perkins, rotund comedian and m.c. at the Warner Stanley, Jersey City, has his gang together again and is knocking them over at that theatre.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

WE are wondering whether the circuit starting a school for managers is making the move to improve the efficiency of the theatres or to save money by putting in graduate-thirty-per men to replace the present men who are getting much more money. You know, it's hard to figure out what prompts some of those super-execs when they start to get "hot."

* * * *

Opposition managers in smaller towns and cities ought to learn that this business, or any business, has no room for those who can't play the game clean.

Knocking each other's theatre through the medium of their daily newspaper ads is far from a healthy practice and can only bring ridicule down on both of them, not only from within the industry, but from the local playgoers as well.

* * * *

Believe it or not, but Arthur Abeles of the Century Circuit insists that he flew from coast to coast faster than Lindbergh. (He mentioned later that the big event took place down at Panama.)

* * * *

Winning one of the foursome prizes at the recent Film Golf Tournament is not near as much a matter of golfing skill as tossing a coin. Ask Hank Linet if you doubt that one. And for good sportsmanship, Wynne-Jones ought to get the best prize of all.

* * * *

One showman widely advertised that his patrons should bring Mom to theatre on Mothers' Day. Then he incorporated lines like this in his ad: "Mad Moments of Surrender Devouring Every Pleasure Life Offers." Also: "Nothing Quite So Daring, So Outspoken, Ever In . . . . Before."

One of our members, commenting on the ad, asked whether we thought a picture with such an appeal, was quite proper for Mom. . . . ???

An exchange-exploiteer registers a kick because the house manager seems to be getting most of the credit for successful exploitation. Says he: "We do all the work and they get the bouquets. 'Tain't fair."

So, sez we, 'salotta applesauce. The exploitation activities of the house manager outnumber the exploiteer about nine hundred and ninety-nine to one. And the chief trouble with most exploiteers (there are exceptions we know about, thank goodness) is that they get into a town and start to lay out a campaign without any idea as to whether such a campaign is good for that particular town.

Last of all, we would tell our complainant, without a good house manager no exploiteer ever got very far, but a house manager with an exploiteer who knows how gets as far as breaking b.o. records.

* * * *

Long, long ago we carried a story about managers who spent too much time in their private offices. Later, we found that article reprinted as a bulletin by a large circuit.

If the advice was good then, it's worth even more now. Managers must get away from the habit of ducking off the floor during the evening when their presence is so necessary, slipping into the office and trying to get some of "tomorrow's" work done in advance.

Your place is around the theatre keeping your eye on the customers and the way the house is running, and that job will never be properly handled by any one but yourself.

* * * *

The theatre advertising series, announced in this issue to start next week, is going to hand you many surprises by reason of the slants injected into some of the articles. Gabe Yorke and Frank Whitbeck fire the opening shots and will be followed up by a host of others all well qualified to discuss the subject.

Hollis Drew Has A Tussle With Local Paper But Wins Out

What can be accomplished in a small town in the matter of breaking down opposition to modern theatre advertising style and bringing a house up to metropolitan standards is strongly emphasized in a letter from Hollis Drew, owner and manager of the New Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mich.

Lowell is a town of approximately 2,000 population and after following the more or less traditional form of small-town advertising methods for many years Drew decided to start the Fall season by absolutely forgetting precedent and further resolved to practice the unusual as far as possible in all display ads.

YOU'LL LAFF AND ROAR

---A New Season---

The Strand begins a new season—an epoch of wonder entertainment! Smashing successes of the screen—Straight from the world's finest theatres! Bringing to Lowell, more than ever, the pageant of progress!

At almost every step he was met by opposition. His newspaper editor did not like the new ideas at all, such as different copy set-ups, trimming of mats, etc. It took extra time and was not worth the effort, he told Drew; in fact, to sum it all up, his impression was that Drew was suffering from some form of insanity to even think of such things.

However, as time went on other advertisers began to sit up and take notice of the changed style, went so far as to adapt it for their own use and the paper took on a decidedly different appearance. Numerous contacts with the newspaper staff brought about a changed attitude and finally developed into whole-hearted co-operation, exemplified by front-page stories, front-page programs, booster plugs, contests, etc., all of which at practically no cost to the theatre.

With samples of Drew's readers and notices in front of our eyes there can be no doubt that present relations between newspaper and this man are on a basis of sound understanding. At present four papers are giving him feature stories and other unbuyable space which will total a considerable number of inches each week. Drew will not use press book copy, he tells the Club, further stating that it will not get by the desk even in a town the size of Lowell. He writes all copy himself and the editor has come to consider it as NEWS. For the benefit of our readers we are reproducing an ad Drew used in connection with "A Connecticut Yankee." Note the institutional copy at the top part of ad. More will follow about this particular brand of copy in a following paragraph.

Aside from newspaper advertising, Drew has made especial effort to interest children in the way of organizing a Kiddie Club, showing of special subjects and matinees. On this page you will find a reproduction of the kind of card he issues to members of the Club and we are sure it will interest those who have not made some similar move in this direction.

A point Drew forcibly brings out in connection with tying up with schools for youngster patronage is that this kind of a tie should never be made with an inferior or unsuitable picture. To break faith with principals or children will create a breach which will not soon be filled. On such subjects as "Lincoln," "Byrd at the Pole" and "Big Trail" his school tie-ups met with complete success and an active mailing list of over 500 names was obtained through the efforts. Drew ventures the opinion that many managers think it too expensive to splurge in this direction, but he firmly believes that it has paid every one who even made the attempt.

We would particularly like to call attention to the layout of Drew's programs. In the first place, they will compare most favorably with those issued by houses in far larger cities. The copy is excellent and take note that here the institutional copy is again used as often as good taste will permit. Drew not only endeavors to sell his wares, but keeps plugging for his house in each issue.

If any of our fellow members are experiencing the same kind of difficulty Drew had with his newspaper editors we advise them to stick it out in the matter of educating them to the modern manner of advertising layout. It may take some time if they are as stubborn as Drew's editors, but if he could accomplish his purpose you also can do the same. Thanks, Hollis, for passing the above along to the Club. We want to hear from you again just as soon as you can find the time. The Club notes that you bill your house as "Michigan's Finest Small Theatre." Tell us something about it.

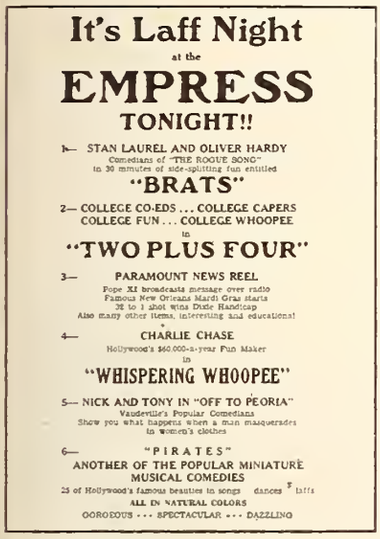
Wheeling, W. Va.

Don't blame us if one of our members goes "poetic." They send us the stuff and we just pass it along. But it came as a distinct surprise to find that good, old "G. B." should be thus affected. However, we won't hold it against him because he's too good a sport. What we would like to know is when and how did he get this way. You answer it yourself "G. B."

When you're up to your hips in trouble
And you figure you're doing your best,
A tough message comes from the D. M.
You sincerely can't take as a jest.
But you battle on, Hot and Bothered,
Riding your pride in close wraps,
Telling yourself on the quiet
They must know conditions—they're not saps.
Comes the Day you bust through for big business,
Though the program you have is a dud,
Then you feel full o' pride——
And you're glad that you tried,
And got out and plugged in the mud.

So it goes Day by Day this tough Season,
You've taken the cut and you're short,
You've worked and You've slaved——
You've skimped and you've saved
To come clean for pride's sake—you're a sport.
Your wife and your kids you see seldom,
THEY visit you—NOT YOU them.
For you're almost a stranger at home, Boys,
With long hours and bookings pro tem,
But after it's all said and done, Boys,
You've to live a long time with yourself,
Tho' the hours are long—do it all with a song,
And Pride won't let you get put on the shelf.



The Show Must Go On! is your slogan,
Come Hell 'n high water—sleet or snow,
If your sound has gone sad—and your film is bad,
You're the Manager, you must give a Show.
Be the Voice of your patrons in person,
If they crave action YOU must know what they mean,
They'll go to the Show—if you'll just let them know
You've better than best on your screen.
Hit the ball—play the game—do not weaken,
The ROUND TABLE'S round the corner for you,
Just check up Back Pages—They're the wealth of the ages,
And maybe you'll not feel so blue.

All things must come to an end, Boys,
Even this doggone cheap rhyme.
But you can bet it's sincere—And we don't have a fear
You've felt it too—'pon a time.
One more word and our story is ended,
Be sincere—Fail not your trust come what may,
Join the ROUND TABLE CLUB—it's no place for a Dub,
And have faith that there'll come a day
When Man Power is a recognized factor,
And your knowledge is worth weight in gold.
You'll get a place in the Sun——
If your spurs have been won
While Prosperity was out in the cold.

If Shorts Are Good Sell Them, Says Don Adler 'Way Up North

From the far-off reaches of Alaska comes an interesting letter from Don Adler, manager of what is known as "America's Farthest North Theatre," the Empress, a link in the Empress circuit of which A. J. Hewitt is general manager. Don's welcome letter indicates that there's still a lot of gold in them thar hills for any showman who will but look for the precious metal. The gelt (Esquimaux also have a word for it) which Don refers to can be mined from an All-Short program. Reading a recent Club dissertation on the short subject furnished inspiration for the contribution. The Club believes his points well taken.

Spotting a short plays a most important part in putting over a show, Adler believes. In other words, a good short can help put over a weak feature; likewise, a poor short can severely damage a very good feature if misplaced on the program. Adler advances a psychological reason for the foregoing: if the short is a good one and played ahead of the feature it invariably leaves the audience in a receptive mood for the feature. Not only will they display keen interest in the entertainment to follow, but they are willing to overlook weak spots in the feature. Adler likens the idea to the old system of getting a buyer in a good frame of mind before really trying to sell him.

On the other hand, Adler continues, your audience has just witnessed a punk short. Along comes the feature, a good one, and you know it. But the audience is skeptical before they find out what it's all about, and the feature is half run off when Mr. and Mrs. finally crawl out of their shell to conclude that they are really enjoying it. Another point which Adler brings out is that if the feature is a bit slow in getting under way as to plot, it is not too much to state that the entire program has been a flop. And this sort of thing does not build for future patronage.

Shea Hires Street Car For Ballyhoo All Over Concord

Take a look at the street car Fletcher Shea, manager of the Star Theatre, Concord, used when exploiting "Criminal Code" and "Charley's Aunt" in his town. Shea had the car run over all Concord routes and on those of surrounding towns within a radius of about ten miles. He tells the Club that the expense attached to a stunt of this kind is but slight outside of the actual material used in making the signs.

That's what we call getting circulation, Fletcher; in fact, it's just like gathering up several 24's and taking them all over the city. And one thing is certain—the banners are of a size that cannot but help being seen and read by all through the covered territory. The Club is under the impression that this is the first time that brother Shea has contributed to these columns. Why not clip that coupon and become enrolled as a full-fledged member of this organization of showmen, Fletcher.

Carden And Slentz Reaping Excellent Results With Co-ops

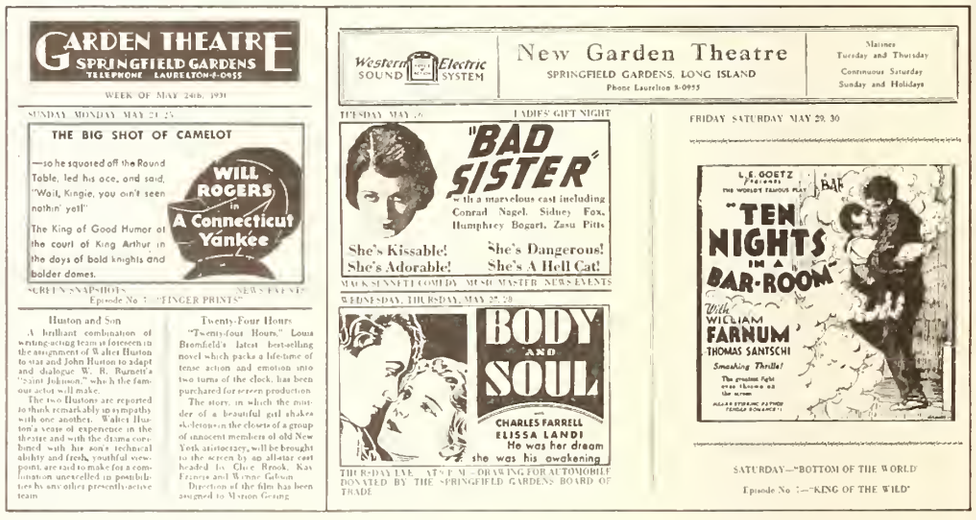
A long lost brother showman is heard from for the first time in several weeks upon receipt by the Club of a letter from C. E. Carden who, with Roy Slentz, sells shows for the Worth Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. Carden is the advertising manager and Slentz the manager. In his letter Carden admits that he has been missing from Club pages for some time so we will have to accept his apology along with his avowed intention never to let it happen again.

Carden and Slentz have had remarkable success for the past several weeks through the running of a series of co-op ads. In addition to regular run of readers and scene cuts these two grabbed 275 column inches of theatre publicity over a period of 16 days. This was accomplished by selling the merchant on the idea of dressing up his ads with a cut of some star appearing in a current attraction at the Worth theatre.

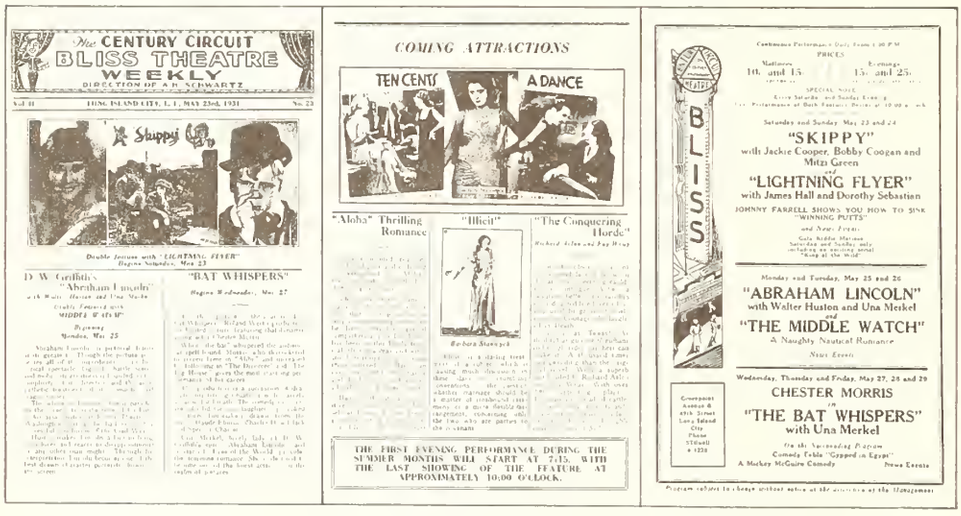
Carden rightly states that everyone knows an ad dressed in this fashion will get more attention than an ordinary one and that the newspaper boys are glad to work along this line as it provides them with a strong lead or sales talk to solicit additional ad space. Glancing over tear sheets which were enclosed with Carden's letter we find some very attractive ad layouts playing up either a star's portrait or a still from the picture. All cuts bear a caption advertising the theatre, or copy to that effect. This is real good stuff, Club members, and we strongly urge any of you who have not tried this out to do so at once. Thanks to both Carden and Slentz, for sending this in. Remember your promise to keep the Club posted.

MORE PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS!

THIS week's selection of house organs covers a wide range insofar as the type of houses are concerned. A small community theatre located in a real rural section of the city, is the Garden Theatre. The Bliss is a link in the Century chain, but here they use an individual program rather than a group affair as they do in the communities where they have a large group of houses. The Madison is one of Albany's "nice" houses and on this occasion were celebrating their second anniversary. The combination of the three offers a wide variety in house organs and will help us to convey to you an idea of how other theatres are making up their programs. We know, from the thousands of programs being received, that many theatres could improve on the make-up and appearance of their programs.



Here are three more programs in our "House Organ Series." Once again we have tried to select them with a view of passing along constructive suggestions on what the other fellow is doing.



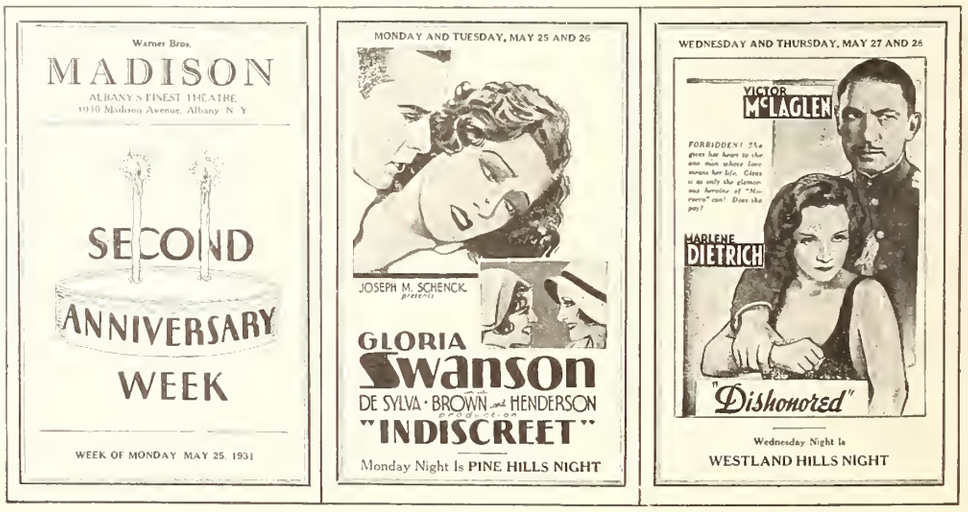
Over sixty members have registered in the Program Exchange to "swap" house organs with their brother showmen. Others wishing to take advantage of this service may do so by writing to the chairman.

Since making up this cut, the Garden has switched their program make-up for a two-week affair featuring a management editorial on the front cover and the inside spread devoted to the program, day by day. However, we are concerned with this particular style and you will note that they carry an exchange cut for their opening attraction on the front cover.

The inside carries the flag of the house and straight cuts on the attractions. This is quite similar to many others of recent issue among the programs being received at Club headquarters. The rear cover was used to announce coming attractions and a form for receiving the program via mail.

But as we said at the beginning of this theatre's program discussion, they now have a far superior looking house organ than this one and we will show it in a future issue. When you see it you will agree that here is a house progressive enough to constantly improve on what they are doing.

The Bliss is another of A. H. Schwartz's famous Century Circuit theatres. In style, this one resembles their combination program in Flatbush, but the inside spread of the Bliss' features cuts, stories about coming attractions and house notes of interest to that particular theatre. The right side of the spread is used for the week's program announcements, which are laid out in a clear manner making reading as easy as possible.



We would like to see the manager's name played up in all of these programs, for several good reasons. One, it affords the patron an opportunity of knowing the name of the man who runs the house in the event they want to talk to him. Just asking for "the manager" is rather cold and sometimes influences a man or woman to pass up the opportunity of making the acquaintance of the manager.

But that has nothing to do with the program. However, it speaks for itself so why add anything to it. Look it over for possible angles to inject into your own program.

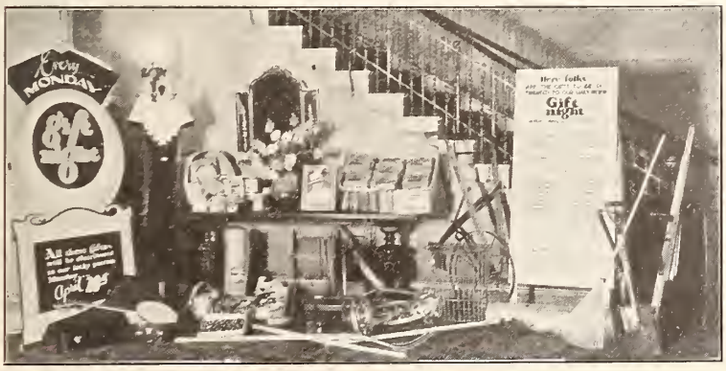
"Albany's Finest Theatre" is the claim the Madison makes right on its front cover, so if there is any basis for disputing that statement some one in Albany will have to do so.

Their program, especially the Anniversary issue, was printed on a fine buff-coated stock and makes an unusually nice appearance. Better than the reproduction itself. As for the contents, they devote all their space to large, flashy cuts of their current week's attractions. Whether the "special" night idea was restricted to the anniversary celebration or a regular feature, we cannot say, but it sounds like a good slant in any community where the population is made up of individual sections.

The rear cover is the same as the inside spread, devoted to cuts on the balance of the week's pictures. No attempt is made anywhere to carry any movie gossip or reading matter of any kind. Apparently, the manager of this house felt that his patrons wanted to know what was playing and anything else would be superfluous.

A Local Reviewing Stunt Proves Big Draw For Solomon

Attraction on the part of the public for writing and seeing their stuff printed in the local daily proved the means of landing a whale of a lot of newspaper space for S. Solomon, manager of the State Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, in connection with a recent showing of "City Streets."



By arrangement with the dramatic editor of the paper it was planned to hold two preview performances whereby readers would be selected to write a review of the picture. All necessary to enter the contest was a letter to the editor, stating why the contestant wished to review the picture, age, sex and occupation. For the best 250-word criticism a suitable award would be made at the close of the run.

Solomon tells the Club that between 500 and 600 letters were sent in to the newspaper, out of which 200 were selected and mailed card invitations entitling the holder to attend the preview. The names of the selected critics were published at the rate of 50 daily and all letters were attractively displayed in the lobby. Before the start of each of the two special screenings Solomon prefaced the showing with a short talk and immediately after screening the local critics, who were drafted from all walks of life, were invited to discuss the picture with him on the mezzanine floor. Replies ran anywhere from one to nine pages in length and many contained real merit. Many reasons were advanced as to why they wished to write the review, among them being the desire of publicity and a chance to see a show free of charge.

As additional ballyhoo for this picture Solomon obtained an old auto from a local dealer and arranged with the traffic chief to park it in front of the theatre after it had been riddled by local police for the try-out of a new 35 calibre cartridge. He received a front page story for this stunt, reporters of both papers attending the event. Other efforts included the showing of special trailers, extensive billing, compo board false fronts using half-life size photos of Sidney and Cooper in illuminated shadow boxes, and other attractive lobby display of stills, etc.

It also happened to be health week and Solomon, as a member of the executive committee, arranged to have a local Marathon start and finish in front of the theatre, the event tying in nicely with the display of the bullet-ridden car. All in all, states Solomon, the whole campaign was not an expensive one and returned most gratifying results.

Along with this yarn we are reproducing photos of the gangster car and of a nicely arranged Gift Nite display. On the latter policy trailers are run each Nite with appropriate copy setting forth the conditions regulating the awards. Another tie-up made recently by Solomon, which is costing him but little, is the printing of 3,000 shirt front cards for use by a local laundry. The laundry pays for and distributes the cards and the theatre has them printed, naturally getting practically all space on the card for house and film ads.

The Club is glad to hear that your Gift Nites are coming along so nicely, S. S., for it has always stressed the importance of institutional selling effort along any legitimate line. It also rejoices in the fact that you cashed in so well with the splendid campaign on "City Streets." It is herewith passed along for the benefit of your brother members. Keep up the good work and let us hear from you often.

ATTENTION, SHOWMEN!!

"The publicity and advertising brains of showbusiness have combined to give you a most important discussion on:

"WHAT IS THE MOST VALUABLE FORM OF THEATRE ADVERTISING—AND WHY!"

This timely series will start in next week's issue of the Round Table Club section and will include, among the contributors, articles from many outstanding personalities all familiar with our present day problems of building up business via the most effective methods.

We would urge every manager in the industry to read these articles throughout the entire series with a view of getting a definite slant on what various forms of advertising are advocated as best for the theatre. Such opinions, especially when expressed by not only the leaders of the advertising forces in exhibition circles, but by practical showmen who are facing, day in and day out, the same situations and conditions that we are all facing, ought to be mighty valuable to those managers who are willing to agree that we must keep pace with the business.

Lynn Smith Fights Trade Depression With Treasure Nite

Although his town was one of the many communities to be hard hit during the recent business depression, the promotion of "Treasure Chest" nights proved an excellent means to boost attendance and publicize his house, writes Lynn Smith, manager of the Crystal and Rialto theatres, Gonzales, Texas.

Merchants are generally easy to approach with this kind of an idea. The gifts set them back, but very little, certainly little when compared with the amount of advertising they receive in connection with distribution of the articles, and it means that they are bringing a customer to their store who will, in all probability, buy something else while there. It has the additional value of perhaps getting the merchant a new customer. As far as the theatre is concerned, as Smith tells us, the nights went over in a big way, the S. R. O. sign being in evidence on the second night. Promotion of this type also is valuable in that it brings the manager in direct contact with the local merchant, thus further cementing profitable business relationship.

Smith divides the gifts, all promoted from local merchants, into two nights, Tuesday and Thursdays. There is everything from a shave and a haircut to a cedar chest included in the list on the circular he sends the Club, about 30 items in all, and articles that have a definite appeal. Those who attend on Tuesdays also have an opportunity to participate in the Thursday Treasure Chest. No free passes are given during the week.

Some of our Club are no doubt casting about for some kind of a tonic to revive a depressed community, so why not give them a dose of Lynn Smith's medicine? Thanks Lynn for letting us know about this one. Keep in touch with us, won't you?

A FOWL STORY!

(Reprinted from Western Edition of "The Last Word.")

"Did you ever stop to think that hard times mean nothing to a hen? She just keeps on digging worms and laying eggs, regardless of what is said about conditions. If the ground is hard, she scratches harder. If it's dry, she digs deeper. If she strikes a rock, she works around it. But always she digs up worms and turns them into hard-shelled profits as well as tender broilers. Did you ever see a pessimistic hen? Did you ever know of one starving to death waiting for worms to dig themselves to the surface? Did you ever hear one cackle because times were hard? Not on your life. She saves her breath for digging and her cackles for eggs."

Falkenburg Grabs Sports Page Space That Sells Shorts

Local interest in two celebrities appearing that week in the Sound News and a "Sportlight" materially aided Francis S. Falkenburg, assistant manager of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla., to swell the receipts of this house.

It happened this way. You see, Tom Mix is a regular winter visitor in this popular southern resort; likewise, Johnny Weismuller, the famous swimmer. Tom happened to be featured in the Paramount News and Johnny was showing his stuff in a Grantland Rice short, "Sink or Swim."

What does Falkenburg do but get his picture taken, flanked on either side by Mix and Weismuller. Then, he crashes the sporting page of the "Miami Herald" for a deep three-column cut with a caption top and bottom. Top read: "Look who's with us at the Olympia Theatre." The bottom caption named the stars, the numbers they were in, and called attention to Falkenburg and the Olympia. Here's the photo, on this page. Give a look.

Good work, F. S. If you keep this kind of work up it won't be long before they'll be dropping the word assistant from your title.

M. Phillips Secures Two Cooperatives On 'It Pays To Advertise'

M. S. Phillips of the Alhambra Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., worked one of the local newspapers for two co-operative ads that helped immeasurably in publicizing "It Pays to Advertise."

The first ad was two columns by 15 inches with this caption, "Help Wanted—Male!" A picture of Carol Lombard appeared and alongside of the picture in a box, "It Pays to Advertise In the Charlotte Observer Want Ad Section If You Desire the Right Man for that Opening, says Carol Lombard, blonde charmer of 'It Pays to Advertise'—a romance of modern go-getters at the Alhambra Wednesday and Thursday."

The other ad, a 34 inch ad appeared the following day on opening of picture. The copy followed along similar channels as the one that appeared the day before.

Both ads were secured at no cost to the theatre other than a few guest tickets, which was quite trivial in comparison to the amount of free space obtained.

The outside front of the lobby was covered with upson board on which was pasted newspaper ads from every leading paper in the country. On this was mounted cut-out lettering of title and stars; also copy panels and stills. All lettering was in flashy colors and since it was against the dead background of newspapers, it provided a very attractive lobby which caused more than the usual amount of favorable comment.

Drumbar Works Fine Tie-Up With Radio Broadcast On "Bat"

Since this story will serve to introduce a new member from the Publix Circuit we are more than anxious to get him started on what we hope will be an interesting and active membership career in the Club. In this, his first Club story, he worked a fine tie-up with the local broadcasting station which netted the Paramount Theatre in Abilene, Texas, and the attraction, "The Bat Whispers," some fine breaks over the air.

Here is how he worked the gag:

Announcements were made well in advance of picture over the local broadcasting station that the Bat Whispers at certain hours. It was also announced that the first 10 persons each day would be given guest tickets to see the picture by correctly sending in the catchline the Bat Whispered.

The catchline pertained to sales copy about the picture as well as name of theatre and playdates.

Need we say more to this brief description? Well, now you other showmen can take a crack at the same idea and see if it nets you the same fine results that it brought W. E. Drumbar.

Welcome into the Club, "W. E." How about a good follow-up so as to keep your membership ball a-rolling? We'll be looking for it soon, too.

Moe Silver Deals Free Show A Blow With A Bosco Club

Faced with the problem of getting kids to attend a Saturday matinee at the Warner Bros. theatre here, when the opposition offered them a free show, M. A. Silver, General Manager of the Warner Pacific Coast theatres called upon Mickey McGuire and his Gang from the Larry Darmour studios and they came down to give the San Pedro kiddies a real show.

A ten cent admission charge did not keep the kids out and the Warner theatre played to 1180 youngsters compared to 93 who went to the free show the opposition offered.

A Bosco club was organized and four kids were picked from the audience to appear with Mickey in his next picture.

It was a real livewire stunt and not only got the children but they paid for the show. Proving that it isn't what you charge for a show, it is what you have to offer that counts.

In the accompanying photo you will note the large-sized gathering in front of the theatre. It was apparently a sure-fire method of stimulating kiddie attendance. Observe that Mickey McGuire and his gang are sitting on the sidewalk as the center of attraction for a group of local citizens, including theatre officials.

A theatre manager—if he works as he should—for any number of hours each day—has little time in which to become acquainted with other co-sufferers of his chosen tribe. The pages of the Round Table Club seem to me to be like a weekly get-together—a sort of a friendly chat with fellows from all over the world. We discuss new angles on exploitation, new phases of publicity, new methods of service—and each week the welcoming of new members into the fold makes us all feel that the Club really means something. As soon as the HERALD arrives I hold my Round Table meeting and pass judgment on all of the campaigns in the pages—selecting those which might be an aid to me at some future date. I suppose all of us do the same thing; if you don't it's a damn good idea to start now, because some days we can't think as well as others and it's kinda nice to look through the sheets and find something to use.

I guess all of us agree that the HERALD is a great magazine. The editorials are swell—the news is real news. But I always look in the back of the magazine first—and you know what's in the back. We think it's the best part of all.

NOVELTY CIRCULARS CLICK!

In response to our recent request for heralds and circulars, our very dependable friend, Urban Anderson of the Warner Theatre in Brookville, Pa., offers this one for laugh purposes only.

It measures eight by twelve inches and was printed on good stock with clown's head and border in green. Lettering in black. Folded twice, the back revealed some good advice which tied right in with the general trend of the circular. It read:

"A Friendly Tip, Be Sure and Take Out a Life Insurance Policy, etc., Before Seeing the Comedy Hit of the Year 'City Lights,' etc."

It was signed by a local representative for a well-known life insurance company through whom this tie-up was effected and apparently at no cost to the theatre. Making it all the more attractive, from the standpoint of business-building at minimum cost.

Several other interesting heralds were received just before this week's issue went to press and will be reproduced in subsequent issues. Those who are turning out business-building printed matter are urged to send samples of them along to us for whatever value they may be to their brother members. Perhaps friend Urban will create something new in the line of heralds and, if so, we know he'll send it in.

Adirondack Spring Here, Says Macris; Tells Club About It

Like the proverbial groundhog, James Macris, manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., comes up for air, sniffs the weather and decides that as long as Spring is here it's time to let brother showmen know what he's doing up in the northern part of New York state. Doing plenty, we should say.

In the first place, Macris tells the Club that he sowed some fertile seeds with the large sized religious faction in his community by closing the Temple all day on Good Friday. The town liked the move so well that all the folk talked about it. Two or three ministers personally told him they thoroughly approved of the policy and the local newspaper gave him a front-page reader expressing its appreciation of the fact that a theatre manager cut possible revenue in order to please a part of the town population.

That was a good gag, Macris, and there's no doubt that it went a long way towards creating that invaluable community asset—Good Will. So we are passing the idea along to other brother members who have to deal with a considerable religious faction. We sincerely believe that a move of this nature will more than pay in the long run.

When the Temple played Charley Chaplin in "City Lights" Macris put on a lot of plain and fancy advertising over an area of 25 miles around Wellsville. Not only did he carry local newspaper display, but used every smaller paper in the neighboring towns. He plugged the idea that everybody could take advantage of the pleasant weather to drive over to Wellsville and see "City Lights." We note by the enclosed readers that all papers heartily supported Macris on the idea. He also made beaverboard cutouts of Chaplin, mounted with window cards and had several of his friends wire them to their cars for circulation about town and neighboring communities.

For the month of May Macris tells the Club that he will try out a new booklet gag and will send along a copy of it when finished. Glad to know this, Mac, and we will look forward to receiving it.

Handkerchiefs Used By Irwin To Boost Sob Picture Gross

Manager George B. Irwin of the Fargo Theatre, Fargo, N. Dak., promoted 750 handkerchiefs to help advertise "East Lynne."

The promoting of the handkerchiefs was in keeping with the sob angle of the picture; the handkerchiefs being promoted from a leading department store.

The kerchiefs were placed in glassine envelopes with appropriate copy on front of envelope in connection with picture and credit line for store furnishing handkerchiefs on back of envelope: "Week with Anne Harding in EAST LYNNE over her romantic struggles with Clive Brook and Conrad Nagel." "Courtesy of Herbst Department Store. You will cry with joy over Herbst's new Spring Fashions."

The handkerchiefs were distributed to the feminine patrons two days in advance and the first day of picture's engagement.

More favorable reaction was received from this distribution than any novelty ever before used, and let us say that the total cost to the theatre was $10.00 and the store's share was $35.00.

What could be sweeter. A merchant tie-up. Plenty of free publicity. Good word-of-mouth advertising. And at a total cost to the theatre of the grand sum of—ten bucks, dollars, iron men, or call 'em what you please.

Georgie, old top, send us more like this one. We are anxious to prove to certain skeptics that show-merchandising need not cost the theatre a young fortune plus a month's profit.

Sell Neighborhood House As Such, Says Kalix of Germantown

J. J. Kalix, managing director of the Oxford Theatre, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., is completely sold on the idea that a theatre being a neighborhood theatre should be sold as such and particular stress laid upon the fact that a good neighborhood theatre is a community asset. Constant plugging of this idea should react most favorably to any house.

And along these lines he has worked out some excellent institutional copy which not only is applicable to his house, but would fit in perfectly with most any other neighborhood theatre. And for the benefit of those who would like to sell their theatre along these lines, we are quoting here from one of his recent programs:

"NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE A COMMUNITY ASSET"

A neighborhood theatre is a community enterprise by an individual who is dependent upon the support of the residents of the immediate vicinity for the success of the venture. It is a neighborhood theatre observed as a meeting place for members of the community. Here they are courteosuly received and made comfortable and served with excellent photoplays and good music, and they each receive individual personal attention and is treated more like a guest than a patron.

(Signed) The Management.

There were quite a few other interesting little chats which Mr. Kalix injected into his program copy, and altogether we like the method in which he handles the entire campaign.

Other neighborhood theatres would do well to profit by his experience and we feel certain that there are many theatres with a situation quite parallel to his Oxford Theatre.

Let's hear some more from you, Mr. Kalix, and be sure and keep us posted on the way you are constantly selling your theatre in your community.

Paramount is to be congratulated on the service they are rendering to managers by incorporating helpful suggestion on "cool" advertising ideas through the medium of their press books.

This information is not tied up with the particular picture being plugged by the press book, but deals in a general way, with such suggestions that a wide-awake manager may care to take advantage of.

The average press book contains so much impossible material that it comes as a distinct relief to find such worth-while stuff as Paramount is passing along in there.

Managers who may not be playing P-P product ought to borrow some of these press books for the "cool" ideas they contain.

Dick Moss Used Club Article To Promote Good Story In Paper

You can take a tip from us that there's no grass growing under the feet of Richard L. Moss, manager of the Orange Theatre, Orange, Calif. Dick is not only a live-wire manager and active member of the Club, but he's a speed artist when it comes to capitalizing on ideas.

Listen to this one. Not only does Dick use and contribute to Club pages, but he uses them to crash his local newspaper for a story. Some other members may want to try out his idea, so we're passing it along. Right now.

Not long ago Dick sent the Club an article stressing the value of newspaper advertising. He nicely set forth points to prove his contention that in addition to being the most valuable medium, a newspaper could be made the most valuable ally theatre could ever hope to have. Need we mention that the article was published?

So when Dick received his copy of the Herald containing his contribution to the Club what does he do but drop around and lay it on his local editor's desk. A natural, of course. As the result, Richard L. received a very nice break in the way of a story and reprint of his article. Fast work, Dick, and good work. We also note that the story mentions the Herald as "that popular movie magazine." Thanks for that, and thanks for bringing it to our attention.

Dick also sends along samples of a nicely gotten up program and newsette of the Orange Theatre, both prosperous looking from a standpoint of advertising. The newsette is used to plug the house and coming attractions. Glad to hear from you, Dick. Let us know what else you are doing out in Orange in the way of selling shows.

Hesse Uses Trailer To Good Advantage On "Dracula" Film

Do you want to inject something real novel into your trailers? Then lend us a willing ear while we tell you about Johnny Hesse of the York Theatre in Athol, Mass.

Johnny worked some special effects with the trailer that certainly enhanced the selling value of "Dracula." Here is how he handled it:

The trailer was first rearranged so as to create the proper effect—a stronger weirdness as it continued. At about the middle of the trailer where title read, "Out of the night came Dracula," the curtain was closed upon which followed a loud report of a photographer's flashlight from the right side of the orchestra pit.

At the same time as the flash, the booth picked up "Dracula" in the reel with a green spot. Lights over the entire house were blinked on and off. Then, Dracula, dressed in a black cape and black hat, quickly ran across the front of the theatre in a crouched position and pausing at intervals. Then made exit to the side door leading to stage.

Just before making exit, Dracula made an outburst with snickering laughter and said: "It's Dracula." Immediately the screen followed with the trailer. It concluded with scene showing girl emerging from coffin.

Let this one sink in real deep, boys, because you can add a lot of spruce to your trailer presentation and at the same time inject much interest in a coming attraction by the use of a little gag like this, plus a bit of the imagination. Send us along more of your stuff, Hesse. We like your style. And we'll bet your b. o. likes it, too.

HISTORY OF "CITY LIGHTS" DISPLAYED!

Manager E. Robbins and Publicity Director W. Merkle of the Plymouth Theatre, Worcester, Mass., used the above window display when playing "City Lights." The tie-up was made with the Consolidated Electric Co., and shows progress of city street lighting.

THE "GET-ACQUAINTED" PLUG!

When we ran the story about Hugh Borland's "Get-Acquainted Month Campaign" in our Anniversary Issue we meant it as a tribute to his fine showmanship and also as a guide to other live-wires who might possibly be in need of a similar business stimulator.

You no doubt recall that story, and, as a matter of fact, we've had it mentioned in dozens of letters received at Club headquarters ever since the story first appeared. And Borland also knows that we ran that story because he's been swamped with letters himself asking for more "dope" on that great campaign as well as copies of the various pieces of printed matter used in connection with it.

The broadside plug used in Chicago was one of the most important parts of his layout and he is now down to his last copy which he is anxious to keep for his files, so we'll take the one he sent us and reproduce it here as a guide for those who are still after him for copies.

This "plugger" measures approximately nine by twelve, was printed on a thin pink stock (as used by him). Printing was in black type. Do not judge this broadside too harshly if the type matter appears too crowded on this cut. Remember it is reduced in size and therefore the amount of copy used is slightly exaggerated.

Say Our Slogan Often, "Let's Go to the Armitage," and Tell Your Friends to Do the Same

REMEMBER —MARCH—

Here's The New Idea

ARMITAGE'S GET-ACQUAINTED —MONTH—

What Is the Meaning of ARMITAGE--Get--Acquainted Month?

JUST THIS! That We Desire to Have the People in the Neighborhood Become Better Acquainted with the ARMITAGE THEATRE and the Saving Possibilities that you May Derive from Acquiring the

ARMITAGE HABIT

Here's Where You Come in, Folks, on This New Idea

Get the ARMITAGE HABIT and become an ARMITAGE BOOSTER for after all what neighborhood theatre can equal our entertainment for the small admission charge.

Your pleasure is our business. We give you only the finest productions from all the leading producers.

WHEN YOUR FRIENDS VISIT YOU TAKE THEM TO THE ARMITAGE FOR AN ENJOYABLE EVENING AND LET THEM SEE WHAT A BEAUTIFUL THEATRE YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD HAS.

Why seek your entertainment elsewhere? No other theatre can give you better entertainment.

The reverse side of the above was made up so that when folded, it carried the lead-off for the announcement and helped create the necessary interest so that those who received one would read the inside. The portion devoted to the back itself, carried more institutional copy and several ads of the merchants who were participating in the campaign.

We hope this reproduction will help relieve the pressure on poor Hugh but from past experiences we know he's a real sport as well as a good showman and would go out of his way to help a brother member. Accept our thanks Borland and lots of luck.

Lawrence's Latest Good Will Stunt Is One To Boast About

A corking community tie-up was recently put over by Sid Lawrence, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lockport, N. Y., whereby another strong spike was driven towards building additional good will for his theatre. When we tell you that the work netted the beneficiaries a worthwhile amount which neatly covered the objective and that it put $1,000 more in real cash in the Palace box office, then we think you'll give a cheer for Sid.

The problem of raising funds to defray expenses of a group of High School musicians who wished to compete in a State-wide contest in Syracuse inspired Lawrence to lend his assistance. For a whole week he agreed to co-operate with the band members in a drive for funds, they to boost the sale of theatre tickets and he to turn over 25% of the entire proceeds to the fund. The newspapers gave the affair whole-hearted support and urged Lockportians to stand behind the drive. In addition to two strong attractions at the Palace, a local band of eighty talented musicians and artists contributed their part to the show. At the close of the week $564 was turned over to the fund, enabling the band to represent Lockport at the meet.

We call that a fine piece of work, Sid, and there can be no question of the vast amount of good resulting from a move of this kind.

By the way, in connection with a showing of "Illicit," Sid used a parking card which read: "It is 'Illicit' to Park More Than 60 Minutes Here. But You Can Park Across From the Rialto Theatre to See 'Illicit'." The other side read: "Ten Years From Now You'll Be Talking About the Picture the Rialto Is Showing——."

What Time Feature Query Answered

The old wail from the public—"what time does the feature go on"—is neatly answered by New Orleans theatremen, who have sold a daily newspaper the idea of running a Theatre Time Table with complete information as to starting time on feature, stage show and newsreel. In this particular box seven houses are listed. It runs in two columns and measures about 4 x 4 inches, and was the solution of an impractical plan to print like information in theatre ads.

The Club suggests that all managers, who have not already put the above idea into effect, lose no time in calling on their local editor in an attempt to sell the same scheme. It should be no trouble to convince him that here is reader interest pure and simple.

Hat Design Gag Is Effectively Used On 'Illicit' By O'Donnell

Manager Charles O'Donnell of the Paramount Theatre, Baton Rouge, La., sold a local millinery the idea of a hat-designing contest which helped considerably in publicizing Barbara Stanwyck in "Illicit."

The millinery store offered a $10 hat to the girl or woman submitting the most original hat design; the Paramount kicked in with guest tickets—a two-weeks and a one-week pass for second and third prize winners. And one guest ticket each to see "Illicit" to the next twenty winners.

The ad was a 2 col. x 14 inches showing a head of Miss Stanwyck on which contestants were to design a hat. Beneath appeared copy giving details of the contest, picture, theatre and playdates. And at the bottom was space to be filled in by each contestant as to the decription of the hat and their name and address.

The contest evoked a lot of comment even by those who did not strive for a prize. However, the number of contestants was unusually large which attested to the popularity of the contest. And the theatre profited by the wide range of publicity it received.

The above is a simple and effective tie-up which can be easily adapted to any number of pictures in which a feminine star is featured. The stunt can be engineered with but slight outlay on part of the theatre and it is bound to have a distinct appeal to women. Note that O'Donnel states the number of contestants was unusually large. Thank you, Charlie, for contributing this one and be sure to keep the Club posted in the future.

Rosenthal Garners Lots Of Free Space On 'Skippy' Contest

A well-rounded campaign on "Skippy" netted over 300 inches of free space and ads to Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa., and to top it all off during the last part of the effort a dog that Rosenthal was using for a ballyhoo decided to get run over, thereby providing another entirely unexpected two-column yarn.

Tie-ups were made with two papers for "Skippy" contests; a store featured that brand of clothes, supporting the move with ads; store windows were secured; extensive billing with three sheets and among schools; a preview showing which netted a "Better Film" endorsement; an orphans' matinee and special letter to several important organizations urging members to bring along some under-nourished child as his guest; several thousand personal letters to all school and parent-teachers' associations and considerable other efforts which included the planting of stills in store windows, cut-outs and trailers. We also note that a herald used offered the holder a chance of free admittance to the show.

It's easy to see that you were on your toes with this one, Morris, and the Club doesn't doubt for one minute that the excellent returns more than off-set the amount of labor involved. Don't forget to keep the Club posted on what else you are doing down in Wilkesbarre.

Russell Rose Sends Club Two Gags That Boosted Attendance

If your patrons are interested in telling their fortunes through cards—and a lot of people are that way—try the gag that Russ Rose used when playing "Gentlemen's Fate" at the Strand Theatre, Reading, Pa. It's a card which measures about 10 inches by 7 inches and the face carries a reproduction of a spread-out deck of ordinary playing cards and instructions to pick five cards at random, turn to the back and read your fortune. The advertising was naturally tied-in with the current attraction. These cards can be hand-distributed or folded for mailing.

Another little gag that Russ sends along is a small envelope of pay-roll size, face type reading "Today's Best Bet." Inside a small card reads: "Attend the ..... theatre and see ..... in 'Don't Bet on Women'." Both of these gags worked out nicely for Russ and we are sure he will give you more detail if you wish to drop him a line care the Strand Theatre, Reading, Pa. Thanks, Russ, and let's hear from you again.

Holmberg Solves Matinee Trade By Forming Kid Klub

Building up matinee trade through kiddie patronage was a problem which was recently presented to Elmer F. Holmberg, owner and manager of the Pioneer Theatre, Amassa, Mich., before the idea of forming a Matinee Club came up for consideration. After going into the scheme from all angles a plan was adopted and today the Pioneer has a matinee attendance of which any house of like size might proudly boast.

Holmberg, in forming the kiddie club, decided to restrict the age of children members to those between five and thirteen years, all kiddies to be admitted for 10 cents. A membership card is given to each youngster and upon applying for entrance to the club certain information, such as name, address, date of birth, etc., is jotted down and filed. Following is a copy of the letter Holmberg sends out each week to those who have had birthdays:

Mr. Joseph Smith,
Amasa,
Mich.
Dear Joseph:

It is a pleasure to enclose herewith a complimentary ticket for yourself and two guests which will admit you and your two guests free to the Club Matinee next Sunday afternoon, March 15 in honor of your 7th birthday Wednesday.

It is the wish of the Club that you may have many, many more happy birthdays.

With kind regards and best wishes, we are
Very truly yours,
PIONEER MATINEE CLUB.

Before starting the program Holmberg gives a short talk to the kiddies through the use of an Ellis microphone. This same "mike" is put to other use, such as talking to the projection room over a circuit which will not go through the speaker back of the screen, and for use with a good, portable radio. But, to get back to the kiddie club—the Pioneer now boasts a membership of 160 children and matinee attendance will average better than 50% Club. Moreover, in some instances the matinee trade will run ahead of night shows.

We call this a nice piece of work, E. H., and believe that those among your brother Club members who have not as yet formed a Kiddie Club, will profit by adopting your suggestions. A well developed matinee trade has pulled many a theatre out of a rut and an opportunity of this kind certainly cannot be overlooked these days. Thanks for your contributions and we hope that you will continue to let other members know what you are doing for the Pioneer. We familiarly note that you used to contribute to the HERALD under the name of "Pioneer Pete."

Melincoff Busy On Jones Series; Says He Likes Marble Gag

The business of selling shows is humming along at a speedy rate up in Lawrence, Mass., according to a glance at a collection of data sent the Club by Max Melincoff, manager of the Warner Theatre in that city. In the array we have in front of us are co-op ads, marble contests, Bobby Jones tie-ups, breaks for Rin-Tin-Tin, red-headed femme gags and what have you.

Let's take a look first at the double truck Max secured on his "Giant Month of Shows" which he ran during April, in connection with the two other Warner theatres in Lawrence. Merchants advertising on the two pages used a portion of a star's face as the puzzle gag for the reader. Each one offered articles of merchandise to the winner. May we state right here that Max received plenty of space on the pages to boost his theatre.

Next, let's move along to some Bobby Jones exploitation, something which all live-wire managers are cashing in on these fine golfing days. Max also ran a full co-op ad for sporting goods and other stores to boost the first of the Jones golf picture series. Fifty free tickets were offered for the correct answers to golf terms appearing in the several ads. In addition, a special review was held for the local golf "pros" and newspapermen, and 1,000 letters were mailed out to members of Golf Clubs. The accompanying photos will give you an idea of how an attractive window tie-up and cut-out lobby display can be arranged for this series. As to the above reference on letters, they may be obtained at your exchange.

Max thinks the marble tournament is a great gag in that practically every city in the country is sponsoring a preliminary event of this kind in order to send a representative to the Atlantic City finals. We have before us a full page of text and photos of the boys who will meet at the Warner Theatre to compete for a cup offered by the management. Announcement of the event at the theatre is contained in the story. A great break from the paper for Max and the only expense was the cup. We're sorry that we cannot reproduce the newspaper photo which shows Max with the cup in his hands.

The national fame of Rin-Tin-Tin was put to full use when with Lee Duncan, his trainer, this dog came to Lawrence to take his turn on the Warner stage. We are reproducing a photo which accompanied a full-length two-column story on the history of the dog and his master. Rin-Tin-Tin also stole a special story, with photo, for himself.

Further evidence of Melincoff's aggressive tactics are supported by tear sheets he sends on a tie-up with a newspaper for a special showing for newsboys in connection with booking of Rose's Midgets, and a fine break he received of Lew Ayres in "The Iron Man." He also got a three-column head on on the sporting page with a large cut free admittance for local red-heads when he played "Millie." The Warner has also issued a new type of program which carried an interest-getting gag for the advertisers. Through the several ads runs a sentence pertaining to the next week's picture. For the first five correct solutions pairs of tickets are given. The sentence is changed weekly.

Well, boys, we'll leave it to you as to whether Max is on the job. We rather think he is and want to thank him for sending the Club all this material. We know his brother showmen will appreciate his tips and hope that he will not forget us in the future.

Members are asked to be sure that their name and theatre address is written distinctly on the back of all photos, etc. On days when mail is particularly heavy a photo or clipping is apt to become separated from the letter or envelope in which it was mailed, then we have one devil of a time identifying them.

Also, if any material or photos are to be returned make certain that such wishes are emphasized.

It's no cinch trying to keep over three thousand showmen happy and looking after their mail and material, so here's hoping the boys (and girls) will lend us their usual co-operation.

ALL SET FOR THE FIREWORKS?

Plans for tying in your theatre with the usual Independence Day celebrations in the town or community ought to be complete by this time. Those who let this go by until the last minute still have time to push their plans through to a successful conclusion.

Naturally your theatre front and lobby ought to be decorated to fit the occasion. Flags, bunting, etc., are all necessary and especially so if the merchants on the street are decorating their fronts.

Short subjects for the Fourth of July are available from various exchanges and trailer service companies. Displays, lobby frames and regular signs ought to be treated with holiday dress. The National colors should be used throughout.

If you are at all active in your community it should be possible for you to swing some portion of the celebration into, or in front of, your theatre. Possibly you will have to revamp your usual schedule in order that the customers can see your show and still witness the fireworks.

These are just rough suggestions, but possibly they will call to mind some angle on which you can benefit your theatre for this great holiday. At any rate, don't treat the "Fourth" as just another day. It is one of the outstanding holidays of the year. And then again; in the event of rain you'll pack 'em-in in grand and glorious style.

Looks Like Hendry Had The Whole Town Working For Theatre

If Ray Hendry continues activities of this sort he'll have to hang a couple of extra shingles in front of his theatre. Bakery, lunch room, etc., are some of the suggestions we would offer if solicited. But kidding aside, we do want you to know how he engineered and handled his merchandising on "Strangers May Kiss" for the Capitol Theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah. And you don't have to take our word entirely, for the fact that the theatre came home to big b. o. returns on the strength of his work.

A tie-up with a prominent local bakery netted 60,000 inserts being wrapped in loaves of bread and cake for a week in advance and 10 days current with the showing of the picture.

Sandwiches and coffee were served on the mezzanine floor during the run of picture to patrons. These were promoted at no cost to the theatre; other than displaying a credit card on the mezzanine floor.

Two thousand tabloid newspapers playing up the picture in detail including names of cast, theatre, title and playdates were distributed to beauty parlors, harber shops, hotels, restaurants in advance. Also 1,500 were distributed to people boarding street cars at dinner hours to be read while riding home.

Free street car rides were given to Capitol theatre patrons. The inbound street cars passed out a ticket to each passenger entitling him or her to a free ride home provided the card was stamped at the theatre box office.

Twenty-five stills were placed in jewelry, ladies' stores and other places on the main street, together with window cards playing up the title of picture, name of theatre and playdates.

Now, we ask you? Is this showselling or are we "nurts"? Any manager who can surround an attraction with as much fine propaganda as Ray did is deserving of commendation any day in the week and we'll bet a new spring hat (our fingers are crossed) that his home office patted him on the back plenty for this one.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT!

(With apologies to Ripley)

Here is a perfectly nice theatre ad, complete in every detail with the "slight" error of the theatre's name being omitted. It was used by a large theatre in the southwest.

Either the theatre in that town is so well known that signature cut or theatre name is not necessary, or else, the manager responsible just plumb forgot it. And then again, maybe the newspaper is to blame. We'll always oblige with a good a'ibi if you're stuck. Line forms on the left.

But, seriously, this is something that can happen to lots of showmen unless they safeguard themselves by approving all copy from proofs before it goes to press. Just suppose it occured in a city with a dozen theatres. The customers would have a lot of fun trying to find out where they could see an attraction so well worth patronizing as this picture. Incidently, the ad was a three column by eight inch affair. Plenty large to attract attention.

Buffalo Audience Liked Buchanan's "Silence Trailer"

We are in receipt of some interesting comment on the "Silence Trailer" from Bernard Buchanan, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y. Buchanan ran his trailer for the first time a few weeks ago and tells us it was an innovation along trailer lines. He states that comments were most favorable, and that it added a finishing touch of refinement to the entertaining atmosphere which prevails at the Colonial and Columbia theatres.

Club members will be interested to know how the trailer was spotted in Buchanan's house. He uses a double feature policy and it was customary to run the advertising song reel and slides between features. The silence trailer was attached to the song trailer and on arriving at the word "Silence," all sound was shut off until the words "This house, etc.," appeared on the screen. The horn switch was then thrown in and the fader gradually worked up to peak volume, which was timed so as to arrive at the end of the trailer. From the auditorium, Buchanan states, it had the very desirable and marked effect of convincingly emphasizing to patrons the value of "Silence."

The trailer is being distributed by one of the foremost sound equipment manufacturers on a three-day rental basis at low cost. The company also has posters and mats at cost price. Footage of the trailer runs 70 feet. Should Club members wish further information same can be obtained by writing in.

Chenoweth, Veteran Showman, Sends Club Photos Of Old Gags

A department recently incorporated in Club pages, "Showmanship 15 Years Ago," not only brought an interesting letter from a veteran showman but prompted him to follow up with an assortment of old-time photos which we feel sure will prove enlightening to the modern manager.

We refer to H. A. "Chene" Chenoweth, a young fellow of seventy-one summers who manages the Empire Theatre, Block Island, R. I. "Chene" not only operates the Empire but as a further outlet for youth manages a bowling alley and oversees a tea room in the rear of the theatre. According to all this, there isn't a chance of placing Chene's name on the retired showman's list at this writing. Not by a long shot!

The Club has referred to "Chene" as the "peppy manager of the Opera House in Westfield, Mass.," whose ideas on showmanship were much in demand fifteen years ago. Some of the photos which we are reproducing in a layout on this page date back as far as 1908 and while offering a striking contrast to de luxe methods of today, were effective in producing desired results.

Reading across the top of the reproduced photos note the little colored children used to ballyhoo Marguerite Clarke when "Uncle Tom" played the Westfield Strand about the year 1910. Next to this is evidence of an effort to stimulate Kiddie interest through the holding of a dog show. In the center strip is an atmospheric display on "Hell's Hole," crude perhaps when compared to present day methods, but a forerunner of what was to be done along these lines. Next to this one is a snap of some stunt that blocked traffic in Thompsonville. "Chene" doesn't tell what it was. More atmosphere is used for that old picture of Mary Pickford's, "Tess of Storm Country." Note fishing shack, nets, etc. They also had Baby Nites in the old days, as you can see by the next photo; also Salvation Army benefits.

Well, "Chene" it's all very interesting to us and we're sure that brother members are going to get a good sized kick from your first contribution. We don't get a chance every day to welcome an old-time showman like yourself and sincerely hope that you'll not forget the Club in days to come. Now that the season is getting under way in Block Island, you'll soon be hitting your stride. Keep us posted as to what's doing down there this summer. Until then, so long.

Live Baby Gag Goes Over For Russ Rose On "Lottery Bride"

His mind eased with the receipt of the print on "Lottery Bride" just in time for the show (Oh, no! managers do not have any worries), Russell Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre, Reading, Pa., relaxes for a few moments to let us know how he sold this picture in his town.

Russell opined that the title was a natural for a live baby give-away and immediately got under way with the idea.

Here's the letter he sent out, 10,000 of them:

> Dear Madam: An outstanding event in theatrical history will take place on the stage of the Strand Theatre, Tuesday evening, April 21, 1931, at 9 P. M.
> This is such an extraordinary event that we feel the urge to talk to talk about it. A cute little baby will be given away to some person, a baby that is homeless, motherless and in dire need of a home.
> Attend the Strand Theatre Tuesday evening and see Joe E. Brown in "The Lottery Bride" and you may be the lucky person to take home this real live baby.
> Very truly yours,
> RUSS ROSE, Manager.

Believe it or not, Russ states, it had black hair.

The rest of the campaign, after mailing out the letters, consisted of stage announcements, use of a trailer, the placing of 100 window cards and a corking write-up in the "Loud Speaker" (the local tab). Both newspapers gave hearty co-operation and Russ tells us the town was so het up that he just cou'dn't miss out on this one.

Pigs is pigs, Russ, and the gag is a corking interest-getter in any locality where they're not wise to the stunt. The Club is glad to know that you cashed in so nicely with it. Keep up the good work and let us know what else you are doing to sell shows in Reading.

Best Story On Star Ad Proves Business Getter For Ed Hands

Rather than to advertise any one picture, Manager Edgar Hands of the Publix-Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, Tex., derived a lot of free space on a Screen Personality Contest.

For an entire week, a different screen star appeared daily in a three or four-column ad. The contest was to get the picture patrons to write about their favorite stars.

In detail it stated, "The manager of the Paramount Theatre wants to know the kind of picture you like to see that the following stars appear in, or your reactions as to the type of material that you think ought to be utilized for the following stars. Do not generalize, but rather take each star and suggest the type of material that, in your opinion, ought to be about in connection with each star."

The names of 17 screen personalities were listed including Jack Oakie, Maurice Chevalier, Ruth Chatterton, Clara Bow, Fredric March, Charles Rogers, Four Marx Bros., Gary Cooper, Claudette Colbert, Phillips Holmes, Mitzi Green, Jackie Coogan, Paul Lukas, Marlene Dietrich, Nancy Carroll, Emil Jannings and Clive Brook—all of whom are listed under the Paramount banner.

For suggestions or as an example on one of the stars, contestants were referred to the Classified section of the paper where they could find scattered among the ads some pertinent facts that would help them in writing their stories.

Patrons Like Name Guessing Stunt, Says Hamilton of Norwich

They like the gentle pastime of guessing names of movie stars over in his town, writes R. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn. And that's not all, fellows. Robert tells us that he also acquired a fine mailing list as the result of his efforts. Maybe it's the way you put these affairs on, R. B., that makes 'em so interesting. So we will pass your method along to your brother Club members.

In the accompanying photo readers will note that Hamilton mounted photos of 23 Warner and First National stars in a lobby display frame. A similar frame was mounted in like manner for a local radio dealer with whom the tie-up was effected. The radio dealer placed the frame in his store window. Blanks were passed out to patrons of both theatre and store for the filling in of the stars' names. In the Palace News, a four-page tab-size paper published by the house, interest was built up on the radio, and the back page also carried mat reproductions of the photos on display in lobby and store. Many hundreds of these, R. B. tells us, were returned with names filled in under photo.

On account of the large number of ties resulting from the effort, a mid-week announcement and award was made from the stage, practically all of the contestants being present. Much interest was manifest, R. B. tells us.

A publicity move of this sort generally always gets the attention of movie patrons, and cost to the theatre is practically nothing, the storekeeper donating the awards for value received in advertising. Thanks for keeping the Club informed as to your doings, R. B., and keep up the good work.

Bill Levey Making Business Hum Down In Port Washington

Any time Bill Levey's name is missing from the Club pages for any length of time, you will know that the dynamic showseller of Port Washington, L. I., is up to his ears in work and that the silence portends some fine contribution as soon as the stress of other important matters eases up for a little bit.

We have used that expression about Bill before, but we do not hesitate about repeating it because it is the gospel truth. Just recently in the spirit of the times with all of this depression and other talk going about, Bill suggested a mighty fine editorial for the Port Washington News, the leading paper of his town, and to prove that they are great believers in Bill's judgment, they planned the editorial as suggested.

This does not take in all of Levey's activities by any means and we are ticked to death to say that his newspaper advertising has improved 100 per cent in the past few months. We often wondered why it did not carry a bigger punch than it did, but apparently he is straightening that end of it out now and the Beacon Theatre's ad in the Port Washington paper is now one of the outstanding pieces of display in the entire newspaper.

And incidentally, we might add that as usual he is engineering some more of his smart merchandising ideas, the latest being a tie-up with Father's Son and the Boy Scouts of Port Washington whereby the Boy Scouts were guests of the theatre and brought many an extra sheckel to the box office through their word of mouth advertising and the good-will which was routed in the minds of all of the parents because of Bill's generous actions.

You can always count on something interesting from Port Washington as long as Bill Levey is on the job, and we hope that from now on his name will again become a prominent part of our Club pages. What say, Bill? Do we predict too much or are you with us?

The Industry's Original Idea Exchange!

B. V. WARREN is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Amarillo, Texas, and the Club extends its welcome to this new member of the Texas contingent of Round Tablers. What's going on in show business down your way, B. V.? Now that you're a member of this great gang don't forget your responsibilities—and that means that we want to hear from you real soon.

JEROME J. MARX manages the New Park Theatre, South Ozone Park, City of New York and the Club is in receipt of his application for membership. Lots of competition out in your neighborhood, Jerome, and your brother members will expect to hear what you are doing in the way of putting the Park over the top. Next time you write include one of your photos so we can give you a proper introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LLOYD F. MURPHY is the manager of the Endicott Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and this organization is glad to list his name among recent applicants for membership. That ought to be a live community you are in, Lloyd, and therefore productive of many a live show tip. Next time you put over a good one take time off and let us know about it. Your brother showmen will be awaiting word.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH FORSTER manages the Inwood Theatre, Metropolitan avenue, Forest Hills, N. Y., and right now becomes a new member of the Queens wing of this big army of showmen. Show selling surely offers many possibilities over your way, Joe, with such a mixed community to draw upon for patronage. In this case it must mean that you will have some interesting stories to send the Club. Why hesitate?

H. H. WEISS is the manager of the Fairfax Theatre, a Publix house in the city of Miami, Fla., and it is our recent recollection of having sent one of his contributions down to the printer to be set up in type. These stunts were indicative of live-wire tendencies and the Club will look forward to hearing more from this enterprising Southern manager. Can we count upon you to do this, Weiss?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES J. OLIVER is in charge of the Gem Theatre, Prescott, Arkansas, and along with recently elected member Shea helps swell the ranks of this organization in his State. Oliver is the manager of an independent house and as long as we know he has full sway in the way of exploitation matters feel sure that the Club can count upon him for further contributions on show-selling activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JERRY B. BLY is the manager of the Nile Theatre, Mesa, Arizona, and the Club takes this opportunity to welcome this Publix manager among his brother showmen of the world. Jerry, there are any number of your company's managers in this organization and they are all making worthwhile contributions. Can we count upon you to do the same? Next time you write, why not send along a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAVID KAPLAN manages the Chelsea Theatre, Chelsea, Mass., and according to his recently received application for membership in this organization, he resides in the city of Dorchester, Mass. Dave, your State is a stamping ground for Round Tablers and we are glad to welcome you among your brother showmen. All we ask is that you remember your obligation in the way of keeping the Club posted on your show-selling work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. P. KING is in charge of the Granada and Inglewood theatres, Inglewood, Calif., and is proposed for Club membership by that well known Round Tabler, Wally Butler, of San Bernardino. All of Wallys friends are live-wire showmen so we have every reason to believe that King will favor his brother showmen with contributions to these pages. Next time you write, King, include a photo of yourself so we can give you a proper introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. D. McGRAW is the manager of the Fox-Rosemary Theatre, Ocean Park, Calif., and this manager is proposed for membership in this Club by Wally Butler. We extend a cordial welcome, Mack, and feel sure that anyone recommended by Wally Butler will do his part in keeping this organization up to the standard it has set in the past. Why not include a photo of yourself when you send in some live show stunt you've put over?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE FOSTER is the manager of the Virginia Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and is proposed for membership in this Club by that well known theatre man, Mr. Fred Wehrenberg. With this introduction, George, the eyes of other Club members will be watching for an account of how you are selling shows at the Virginia and the Club believes that you'll come through. How about this? And what about a photo of yourself so we can properly present you?

CARL FRICKEL is in charge of the Michigan Theatre St. Louis, Mo., and is another new member to apply for Club membership through the recommendation of Mr. Fred Wehrenberg well known showman and theatremen's leader in his section of the country. As with Club member Foster we must remind Frickel of the responsibility in connection with having such a sponsor and will look forward to an early contribution containing an account of his brand of showmanship.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD L. MURTAGH is the manager of the State Theatre Scranton, Pa., and with this new member's application at hand the Club is proud to acknowledge a strong representation in this live show city. Help keep your town on the Round Table map, Murtagh by regularly contributing to these pages any live show stunts you are putting over. And when you make your rounds, remember us to all your brother showmen in Scranton.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SAMUEL ALSTER is the manager of the Maspeth Theatre, Maspeth, Long Island, N. Y., and the Club hereby extends a royal welcome to this new member from Queens County. Sam, all you have to do in order to keep on the right side of your chairman is to regularly let him and the Club know what you are doing to put shows over in your community.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. L. CLARKE is in charge of the Cozy Theatre, Hazen Arkansas, and if these Arkansas members keep on coming in the way they are at present, it won't be long before there will be Round Table representatives in every town in the State. Clarke's house seats but 225 but we know that it's proportionately difficult to fill this type and therefore will look forward to an account of how this new member does the job.

MAURICE B. SMITH is in charge of the Royal Theatre, Hoisington, Kansas, and it becomes a pleasure to welcome this new member from a state where the Club has many representatives. Maurice, we will depend upon you to keep us duly informed as to what Hoisingtonians like in the way of showmanship—and that means an account of some live-wire stunt you recently put over in your town, or plan to put over in the future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. A. SHEA manages the Palace Theatre, in the city of McGehee, Arkansas, and it is the Club's sincere hope that it will soon number this new member among the steady contributors to this department of the Herald. We note that Shea's house is a modern 675-seater and is equipped with the latest and best in sound projection apparatus. Be sure to let us know what you are doing in the way of selling shows to the McGeehans, won't you Shea?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

P. J. PECHARICH is the manager of the Ritz Theatre, Jerome, Ariz., and the Club is in receipt of his application to become a member of the fastest growing organization in the motion picture theatre field. Pecharich is in charge of an independently owned house of 680 seats and it is equipped with all that could be desired in sound projection. Phil, the Club's order is in right now for an account of what you are doing to put shows over the top in your Arizona town. And why not send along a photo?

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

Gallant Words from Mr. Arliss

WHEN Mr. George Arliss went on the air the other night on the initial program of Warners' "The Radio Newsreel of Hollywood" it was with brave ringing words in behalf of the creative community of the motion picture and the art with which he is now so effectively identified.

"It is useless to argue that the brains are in Wall Street," observes Mr. Arliss. "It is the box office results that influence Wall Street and for these results the pictures alone are responsible. These pictures are made. and for the most part selected, in Hollywood. My contention is that if the business were in the hands of ignoramuses moving pictures would have ceased to exist long ago."

And touching on certain aspects of motion picture publicity and some elements of scandal, he observed, "To keep out of print, you not only have to be respectable, but lucky." Sound, clear expression from such actors as the distinguished Mr. Arliss can carry weight and conviction. His words will travel far and get wide quotation. Fan audiences and circulations being what they are, such utterances in behalf of the motion picture from artists of substance come far too seldom.

Much Ado About Nothing

ALL and sundry are advised to be in nowise alarmed on receipt of a blue circular or possibly related telegrams from Major Frank Pease, who styles himself "National Commander of American Defenders" and "President—Hollywood Technical Directors Institute," and who is quite a professional viewer-with-alarm. The Major is just now excited about social and political aspects of the motion picture, charging a lot of things but especially that "Hollywood is now beginning to do extensive team-work with Moscow." He says, "Our next campaign is to secure complete exclusion of all Soviet propaganda films, such as have been coming uninterruptedly into our country for years through Amkino."

The Major states, one assumes with pride: "Recently we succeeded in getting 'Eisenstein,' Soviet Russia's chief cinema propagandist, deported." Now it is rather widely known that Mr. Serge Eisenstein, despite his admitted skill of the cinema, came to the parting of the ways with Hollywood, for the time at least, because he could not be made to fit the requirements in the production of what Paramount wanted in "An American Tragedy." Further one is unable to discover the remotest coloration of foundation for the statement that Mr. Eisenstein has been deported. He is now in Mexico shooting a picture and doubtless will presently return to the United States to prepare it for distribution.

Major Pease's extraordinary statistics, his extraordinary statements and his general excitement, are not in the least important save that they get some circulation through his habit of wiring governors, legislators and other agitators, thereby contributing to the already large pool of misrepresentations and slanders addressed at this industry.

When Good Sellers Get Together

SPECIAL interest and merit attaches to the series of articles on advertising and exploitation now being presented in THE HERALD'S "Managers' Round Table" department. A full dozen of the abler publicity men of important independent and circuit theatres are contributing to the array of discussions which Mr. Charles E. Lewis, the club chairman and editor, has assembled. Here are selling ideas from the men who have to make good every day out on the firing line of experience.

A Full Field

THE lure of the motion picture world as a region of light, merry work and high salaries just now seems to be extending itself out among the sellers of correspondence school instruction in the operation of the projection machine. In view of the decided abundance of trained men, evidenced incidentally by an ERPI checkup in Philadelphia territory where there is one job to each ten available projectionists, this does not appear to be as promising a field just now as some of the rosy advertisements indicate. There are some correspondence schools of admitted merit, but the many young aspirants who write MOTION PICTURE HERALD are advised to exercise caution.

Mr. Nathan Forecasts Again

SAILING for London where he will be the guest critic of the Daily Express for six weeks, Mr. George Jean Nathan took the opportunity to remark to a reporter for the New York Times that five years ago he predicted that silent pictures were doomed. Now he says, another five years "talkies" will be as much an anachronism as silent pictures are today and the stage will be everything.

The only thing of importance about Mr. Nathan's observations is that they are often quoted and in some quarters accepted with authority. Like Mr. Shaw, and a number of other professional expressers, Mr. Nathan very often says things because it is his business to say things—and for no other known reason or provocation. There are few persons of equal intelligence as thoroughly and extensively misinformed about the motion picture. A less brilliant mind could never be so far wrong, so often.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

MACK SENNETT is negotiating for a $1,500,000 loan from H. J. (Consolidated laboratory) Yates, for use in new production. . . . Which gives further indication of the prominent spot which "H. J." occupies in the scheme of picture financing. . . .

When Tiffany was about to be transferred to E. W. (Educational) Hammons by L. A. Young, Tiffany's notes to Yates for laboratory work and advances nearly upset the apple-cart, Consolidated, it is understood, having tried to use this hold on Tiffany to set up a new regime under Richard A. Rowland. . . .

And when Universal's coffers were all but drained by Whiteman's "King of Jazz" studio costs and those laid out for "All Quiet," Carl Laemmle went to Yates for temporary aid and brought back something like $1,800,000. . . .

Insiders have figured out that Yates has n.g. notes for more than $1,000,000 from small independent ventures which started on a promising scale and then failed to come through. . . .

They now call Clara Bow the IF girl! . . .

Isn't it true that what America really stands in need of is a wailing wall to which the pessimists and business wreckers could go in a body and wail to their heart's content without bothering the rest of us. . . .

In RKO's "Million Dollar Swindle," a 200-foot scene was ruined because extras forgot they were momentarily society women and chewed gum not wisely, but too well. . . . Three out of five extra girls indulge in jaw wagging. . . . There orrta be a law. . . .

Louella O. Parsons, Hearst pen columnist, is on a belated honeymoon at the Hawaii Islands. . . . And (te-he), her husband, Dr. Harry Martin, is chairman of the State BOXING Commission. . . .

We wonder just how smart is the N. Y. home office ad writer who, in large display type in a Philadelphia trade paper, bellowed: . . . "DON'T BUY NOW!" . . . "No smart showman would consider buying any new product until he saw what we have to offer," etc. . . "We repeat: "DON'T BUY NOW!"

Ordinarily, this form of questionable copy writing might get by, but it most certainly has a detrimental phychological effect in a period when bad times in general business are leaving their mark on this industry and the activities of certain radicals who are sowing the seed of discontent by urging exhibitors to withdraw from buying are making things just so much tougher.

Centralia, Wash., has ordered every mother's son within its borders to grow whiskers between July 8 and August 12 to provide realism for the 20th annual Southwest Washington pioneer picnic in August. . . .

They're still discussing the terrific boner pulled by the Fort Hayes Band at the recent Harding Memorial Tomb dedication when the brass blasted out with "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone!" . . .

National Board of Review is nearly set on a plan which will change considerably that unit's modus operandi. . . . New life! . . .

Certain Wall Street houses, plenty important, will tell you that RKO is the best long-term investment in the picture business, with Paramount next. . . .

THE brazen and blazing ad copy tie-up of "A Free Soul" with the name of Starr Faithfull, whose body recently was washed up on Long Island's shores, was marked by more than one this week as being of very poor taste.

General Director and Standard Directory, Coast casting directories, are in the midst of a bitter competitive fight. . . . Standard claims that General is making unnecessary inroads on the limited field, in view of the fact that General, operated by Frank (Alice's brother) Joyce and Myron Selznick, run General only as a mouthpiece of the Joyce-Selznick casting-management organization. . . . The pair are said to run $40,000 in the red each time General Directory makes its appearance. . . .

Artist and director clients of General receive free space in the directory and, naturally, this takes away revenue from Standard, which has been established for years. . . . Joyce and Selznack are said to represent $250,000 weekly in talent, which gives them as their 10 per cent share for managing and representation, at least $25,000 every seven days.

If and when Allied States decides to continue with a sponsored newsreel, there is little likelihood that Kinograms will be it.

CAMERAMEN'S and photographers' Local 600 admits times are tough for the crank-turners, but, in its official publication, it offers a ray of hope in the nature of "the 'accommodation husband' role, a new profession which started on the eve of the departure of a Spanish and a German actress. . . . Both were doing foreign picture roles on six-month immigration permits. . . . And they beat deportation by a convenient marriage." . . .

Not all rubbish is confined to ash cans, nor poetical effort to Spring. . . .

For, hasn't Spring and early Summer, with its flowers, birds and what have you, reached the inner sanctum of RKO's home office, and as proof we offer the following press release which emanated from headquarters the other day:

"The hot breath of summer nights . . . opalescent moons silvering the lonely countryside . . . a romantic Spaniard weaving mystic love spells . . . softly cadenced words, spoken to a guileless maiden heart conquers her reason. . . . Love betrayed . . . and love mended in the bitter crucible of experience. . . . Maybe Harry Burns is right when he stated that what the film industry lacks today is cooperation between producers and directors and less interference from associate producers and supervisors. . . . CIRCUITS MAKING UNREASONABLE PROTECTION DEMANDS: LIGHTMAN

Lessons and Profits Won from Adversity

Results of incalculable value will be gained by the motion picture industry out of the experiences of the past few months.

These past few months have been a period of utmost difficulty during which the business has been heavily burdened, both with the conditions growing out of the widespread depression as well as with a variety of unfavorable internal conditions.

Previous to the recent experiences the industry did not realize the extent of the improvement in its operations which might be brought about. And it also did not realize how easy this improvement would be once the attendant problems were attacked in the right spirit and in the right way.

The experiences of the past few months have led to a markedly sounder and more economic basis of operation throughout the whole industry in all of its branches. The need and the opportunity for various readjustments had long been apparent but with a consistently increasing gross business the industry never previously felt itself driven, as it has lately been, to an uncompromising attack against the abuses that existed.

This attack has been made and in a large way has been generally successful. Its good results will long stand by the industry to its greater security and prosperity.

After many years of temporizing the production situation has had a determined hand laid upon it. Many of its traditional extravagances, which previously stood secure as if within a charmed circle, have been beaten down. There is no indication that production has been—or ever will be—placed on a basis of mechanical manufacturing but it is a fact that it is now much more closely geared to a plan of strict economical procedure than at any time previously.

In theatre operation there has been literally a revolution. Operating costs have been driven down to figures hitherto considered far beyond reach. At one time, in circuit operation it was considered that approximately seventy per cent of the cost of operations stood in the category of fixed charges upon which no adjustments could be made without a complete upset, leaving only the margin of thirty per cent as being subject to cost-reducing treatment.

In the light of recent experience this status of the matter has been reversed. It is being calculated that only thirty per cent of the cost of doing business may properly be regarded as being fixed as unalterable charges, with the total of seventy per cent being subject to some adjustment.

The deadly theory that there is relatively no limit to the possible gross on a great picture has been exploded. The free and easy scheme of going, induced under conditions which were resulting in a consistently increasing volume of business—allowing ample room for mistakes and extravagances with a profit left over—has been discarded. It has been supplanted with arrangements aimed to produce a profit in the face of revenues that are assured or may reasonably be expected.

The industry has become keenly interested in the cost of money. The old notion that the business of motion pictures may be considered sufficiently profitable to warrant the payment of exorbitant finance charges has disappeared.

The industry generally has indicated its determination to have its name erased from sucker lists.

Out of all of this has come an underlying condition in motion picture affairs which justifiably inspires profound confidence in what the industry is going to be able to accomplish in prosperity and development in the future just ahead.

The motion picture industry has strengthened and entrenched its position. It has cut free from many abuses which might still have remained as a menacing threat over the future of the business were it not for recent conditions which no longer left their elimination a matter of choice and alternative.

With genuine confidence, intelligently arrived at, may the industry now face the turn for the better in general business conditions which is at hand.

—MARTIN QUIGLEY.

But Finds Status Better In Zoned Districts

"We Will Have Protection As Long As We Have Film Business," States Sales Manager

In territories where no protection agreement has been reached some circuits are making "unreasonable demands" in buying the new season's product, according to M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Commenting on the situation in a statement to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, he said:

"My impression is that exhibitor reaction in territories where fair zoning and protection have been set up is that they are better off than previously.

"Where none has been set up some circuits are making unreasonable demands.

"You realize there are many zones where no plan was adopted. I believe the independent exhibitors in these zones are hurt as a result of the campaign that was started but not completed."

Lightman's reference is to the conferences held in numerous exchange centers last year between circuit and independent theatre men for the purpose of re-zoning districts so that the period and extent of protection might be placed on a basis considered more favorable to the independent.

The meetings were called by C. C. Pettijohn.

Circuit heads in New York could not be reached for comment on the Lightman statement. Sam Katz of Publix refused to be interviewed on the subject.

The attitude of some distributors toward protection is expressed by one prominent sales manager, who stated to a HERALD representative that "we will have protection just as long as we have a motion picture business.

"Protection," he said, "is just as much a part of the picture business as the picture itself. Of course, when some of the circuits keep demanding a greater and greater radius of protection that is unfair.

"If an exhibitor wants six months' protection and is willing to pay the price, let him have it."

An exhibitor who asked that his name be withheld stated that in buying this year he is confronted in one spot by a circuit demand of 150 miles protection. This is not in one of the territories in which re-zoning was accomplished.

Alteration Delay Holds Up Vitaphone Studio Reopening

Reopening of the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn has been postponed until July 27 from July 8, the date first announced.

Delay in completing studio alterations was held responsible for setting the date back by Sam Sax, production chief at the plant.

Mutilating Films in Bias Must End, Says New Chicago Censor

Dealing With Valuable Product of Responsible Companies, Warns Frances James

Take it from Miss Frances James, new member of the Chicago censor board and a former leading woman for Al Jolson, the two major rules for the guidance of censors should be: Give the public credit for having a little intelligence of its own, and, remember that you are dealing with a valuable commercial product turned out by responsible business organizations.

Attention to the latter rule, Miss James said, would eliminate mutilation of films for purely personal, or prejudicial reasons.

"Censorship," she said, "has come to be an odious word to the public, largely because most of it has never given the public credit for having an intelligence of its own. Moreover, the activities of the censors are a mystery to most people. Ours is a public office and our work and records should be available to the press at all times.

Opposes Life-Term Jobs

"Personal convictions and inclinations must be forgotten occasionally. I have been given an opportunity to bring a fresh viewpoint to the Chicago censor board. Standards in every phase of public life are continually changing, yet I do not believe the changed standards of today are properly reflected in the censor board. Some of its present members have held their posts for so long that their work has come to be a routine and new viewpoints are difficult for them to attain."

Miss James said, in this connection, that she was heartily opposed to the life-term appointments made possible under civil service.

"I will not take the civil service examination. I do not believe in over-long periods of service," she said.

Miss James is a temporary appointee, who may be reappointed at will by the mayor whenever the period of her temporary term expires.

Hits "Aults Only" Idea

Other opinions voiced by Miss James are that most "adults only" permits are foolish —"they add the lure of the forbidden, which attracts children"—; gangster pictures, for the most part, are all right, "except when they portray gangsters as wielding great political power and living in romantic affluence. Then they should be restricted to adults"—; and she believes that motion pictures may bore one with stupidness, disgust one with vulgarity and bad taste, but, as they are produced today, cannot corrupt or shock a normal human being.

There were frequent interruptions to the interview. Film exchange managers were the most numerous callers—by phone.

"They tell me how glad they are to have someone with the showman's viewpoint and understanding on the board," she explained. "I'll try to be fair to all of them. I haven't a woman's club background, but I think I can administer intelligent censorship, regardless."

The city editor of a large morning newspaper called. He was delighted to learn that she represented a liberal censorship. "That's our policy, too," he told her.

Other papers phoned for interviews. A press service photographer arrived to get pictures of her. Another exchange manager called to congratulate her.

Judgment on Note Ends All Activities Of Drama League

The story came out Thursday that the Drama League of America, Inc., had come to the end of its activities, ensuing upon a judgment for $2,450 secured by the Chase National Bank, May 24, in an action on notes owed to the bank by the league.

The Drama League was formed in 1926 in an affiliation with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and later became independent. The New York American takes occasion to remark upon the coincidence that "the league's bitterest opponent, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., has resigned from the administrative committee of the Council of Churches."

Mr. Milliken's expressions in point, issued in the spring of 1930, were addressed rather to and about George Reid Andrews who became in somewise the head of the league, when a statement was issued from the Hays office setting forth some correspondence, quoting from Mr. Andrews' letter as asking that "ten per cent of the gross receipts of the picture ("The King of Kings") be paid into the treasury of our Church and Drama Association. . . . If and when I should retire from the organization the right is reserved to me to say whether what funds remain in the treasury shall be payable to the Drama committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. If for any reason neither of these organizations can receive the funds, then they shall revert to me personally. . . ."

This statement from the Hays office and its quotation of the letter from Mr. Andrews was issued after the League had made a statement that Mr. Milliken had been dropped.

With reference to the present status of the Drama League, J. G. Mitchell, attorney, was quoted in a statement that the organization is not in bankruptcy and that a receiver had not been sought.

Smith Is Still in At Pathe News, Rooster Flying

Variously reported and published rumors of a schism between Courtland Smith and Pathe News, Inc., and related enterprises of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum group, including Trans-Lux Movies Corporation, are flatly contradicted and denied by Hiram S. Brown of RKO. The statement has been circulated that Friday last Mr. Smith tendered his resignation, this coming on the heels of various staff reductions, and suspension and closing of the Pathe Review studio in Long Island City.

"The report is not only untrue but there would have to be some extraordinary change in the status of affairs before it could be possible," observed Mr. Brown.

Despite reports of plans for expansion of the Trans-Lux tabloid theatre circuit, other sources tend to indicate that additional capital for theatres will not be available before the winter, if then. This becomes significant, in the opinion of some observers, in that the entire policy of newsreel production at Pathe under the Courtland Smith administration has been addressed at the service of Trans-Lux, which tends to put a considerable burden of support upon the three theatres in operation.

Meanwhile there are continued stories of weighty councils over the problems of the newsreel, and it is said that Mr. Smith's staunchest supporter in the current situation is Percy Furber of the Trans-Lux organization.

The management of Pathe News is said to have under consideration an extension of the "talking reporter" treatment which is only occasionally used in the reel now. This report, coupled with the fact that there has been no addition to the sound picture recording facilities of the reel by way of new camions, would appear to be in line with a policy calculated to meet conditions imposed by a receding or static gross.

Pathe News and the Round the World Flight

With the arrival in Germany of Wiley V. Post and Harold Gatty on their round the world flight, the announcement was made that it was a surprise performance in behalf of Pathe News.

This made official the status of the flight also in the office of Pathe News. The contact man engaged in the promotion of a tie-up with the flight had originally discussed an arrangement for the payment of $25,000 to make it a Pathe News adventure. Subsequently it was reported that he had achieved an arrangement to have a Pathe News Rooster painted on the plane in consideration of mutual publicity value. Then, in a moment of whimsy, the contact man was instructed to get the rooster off the plane. He failed to execute that errand, however, and with the trans-Atlantic leg of the flight successful, the rooster was reinstated in grace by formal publicity release.

Miss Ruth Nichols, who was once announced as aviation editor of Pathe News, is now recovering at St. Johns, N. B., from a crack-up in her take-off on a flight in which Paramount News had a publicity interest.

RADIO COMMISSION CLEARS RCA OF COMMUNICATIONS MONOPOLY

Zukor Spikes Talk Of Big Changes in Paramount Setup

Wild and irresponsible rumors concerning important changes in the front rank executive personnel of Paramount Publix were set at rest on Thursday, when, following mention of realignment of executive power of Jesse L. Lasky and Sidney R. Kent, President Adolph Zukor confirmed the retirement of Walter Wanger and definitely scouted stories which credited Kent with becoming production chief over all Paramount units.

"I definitely want to state," said Zukor, "that Jesse L. Lasky is now, just as he has been, head of the Paramount Publix production department. Lasky is in control and no one supersedes him in any way in dealing with Paramount picture production; nor has there ever been any intention to have any such change in the set up. The retirement of Walter Wanger from the production department activities with which he was connected is merely a step made necessary by the physical necessity of the production job to be done. Aside from that there is no change whatever in the production personnel; B. P. Schulberg is in charge under Lasky of the actual production and will operate as heretofore in our West Coast studio. His fine work has always been fully appreciated by the executives of this company. He will continue to be, as he always has been, responsible to Lasky. The Eastern studio will continue to be under the management of James Cowan, also directly responsible to Lasky.

"Lasky has been vice-president in charge of production for Paramount for 20 years. The record of Paramount pictures during that 20 years has been a record based on the achievement of Lasky. The plans for the new production year under the supervision of Lasky are going forward to what we confidently believe will be a greater success than has ever been achieved by Paramount."

Cancellation of Wanger's contract with Paramount, which has been the cause of lengthy negotiations in recent weeks, came about through a cash settlement aggregating between $400,000 and $500,000. The split is understood to have climaxed long standing rivalry between East and West Coast production units, headed by Wanger and Schulberg, respectively, with Wanger getting top post only to be placed under Schulberg a few months ago.

MPTOA To Assist in Handling Of Copyright Bill Revision

MPTOA leaders will attend the re-writing of the Copyright bill before it comes up before the Congress convening next December, with a view to preventing duplication of copyright levies and overcharges.

Pictures to Blame Of Course!

Vast furore about the motion picture in general and the "gangster pictures" in particular is being raised this week because a 12-year-old boy, Winslow Elliott, was fatally shot in play by Harold Gamble of the same age at Montclair, N. J., after the youngsters had seen a "gangster picture at a theatre."

It seems the boys had a "den" and played various lively make-believe games of adventure. They are said to have been rehearsing the action of a picture and the shooting was in imitation of a policeman's efforts as portrayed on the screen.

The New York newspapers have raised a hue and cry to blame the motion picture, as usual.

It may be pointed out that the boy was killed with a gun, a mail order automatic pistol, not by a motion picture. The published reports indicate that both the police of Montclair and the boy's father knew he had the gun "to use at target practise." It appears too that a mail order house sold the gun to the boy, despite the law against such sales.

The daily press has thus far been able to see only the motion picture as a subject of discussion in the matter. There are those, however, who would deem it peculiar for parents to permit the possession of deadly weapons by boys of 12 years, or for police to find them in such possession without confiscation.

Apparently there is to be a country-wide barrage laid down on the text of this accident. Thursday afternoon Motion Picture Herald received a publicity release from Mrs. Clara Savage Littledale, editor of the Parent's Magazine, saying that she and George J. Hecht, publisher, had been moved "to issue an appeal to parents throughout the country to boycott gangster films."

By extensive reference to the Code of Ethics and Will H. Hays, the Littledale-Hecht statement tends to make the episode an instrument of personal and institutional attack. Really Mr. Hays did no shooting.

We reiterate that the boy was shot with a gun, which his father and the police alike knew he had.

Independents Lose Plea To Bar Licenses

Decision Is "Insult to Intelligence of Congress," Declares Schuette of Protective Association

RCA and its subsidiaries have not been found guilty of unlawful monopolizing of radio communication, the Federal Radio Commission at Washington decided Wednesday in a three-to-two decision that involved more than 1,400 licenses and property estimated to exceed six billions of dollars.

"An insult to the intelligence of Congress" was the comment of Oswald F. Schuette, executive secretary of the Radio Protective Association and spokesman for the independents who had carried the case against RCA to the Federal Radio Commission. Schuette said that Congress could be expected to thresh out the matter.

See Issue for Congress

In Washington circles it was stated that the radio situation in general would be an issue at the next session of Congress, particularly in view of the fact of the close vote of the Radio Commission. Had one more member of the commission cast his ballot on the other side, it was pointed out, the most important trust case in recent years would have been before the courts.

The decision of the Radio Commission was upon the question of whether a ruling in a federal district court in Delaware had held RCA to be a monopoly in the meaning of the radio act, which provided that no licenses should be given to corporations found guilty in a federal court of illegal monopolizing of radio communications.

The Commission, in line with its ruling, turned down a petition by independent radio interests against renewing licenses to RCA, and 39 licenses were continued immediately.

Draw Distinction

The Commission majority held that while the Delaware court apparently felt that the RCA interests violated the anti-trust laws in creating a monopoly in radio vacuum tubes, this did not constitute conviction of monopoly of radio communications. The majority drew a distinction in arguing that the radio act aimed only to prevent monopoly of communications, existence of which, they contended, was not implied by the Delaware court's ruling, and Commissioner W. D. L. Starbuck, one of the majority group, said no claim had been made that a monopoly of receiver tubes was of "such magnitude as to stifle communication."

C. McK. Saltzman, chairman of the commission, and Commissioner E. O. Sykes, in minority opinions held that receivers are a fundamental part of radio broadcasting communication and that the intent of Congress in the radio act was to penalize companies "using unfair methods of competition." Sykes in particular appealed for a more liberal interpretation of the law.

THE IRREPRESSIBLE HARRY NOW FIGHTING HIS BRAVEST BATTLE

Reichenbach's Spirit of Wit, Verve Remain

Famed Publicity Man at Doctor's Hospital Undergoing Long, Tedious Treatment

by TERRY RAMSAYE

In a white draped bed in the hush of Doctors' Hospital in East End avenue up where the greenery of Carl Schurz park sweeps down to the river, Harry Reichenbach, entrepreneur, adventurer extraordinary and most flambuoyantly famed of motion picture publicity men, is fighting the bravest battle of his life. For months on end he has been there undergoing radium treatment for a throat affliction, with the tide of fate rising and falling through the long tedious days.

Through it all the spirit and wit and verve of his dashing two decades of Broadway have stayed with him, even in the grimmest hours of pain.

This week the irrepressible Harry whispered orders that a sign must be placed over his bed on the wall: "Hospital Room—Make no Noises."

Through the year of his illness Mr. Reichenbach's resources have been fading through continued costly outlay and the lack of his administrative attention, so that now his all has gone into the battle. Not so long ago, Mrs. Reichenbach, eternally devoted, took employment in sales and customer contact work with the Fifth avenue establishment of Jay-Thorpe, couturiers.

This is a sad aftermath of a career of spectacular and sparkling successes under the bright lights of Broadway and across the first pages of the nation's press. For more than ten years Mr. Reichenbach has been rated in the thousand-dollars-and-up a week class of exploitation agent. His earnings have run to imposing figures, sometimes as high as $6,000 a week, with large annual totals. But with the nonchalance of his best after dinner manner he has lived and flung the chips back into the game of life as fast as the cards have been dealt to him. His successes and his failures alike have been magnificently complete, and ever full of color.

My acquaintance with Harry Reichenbach began that day in 1915 when John Flinn organized a special luncheon session of the young A. M. P. A. at the Hotel Claridge to bid me goodbye on my departure with the removal of the Mutual Film Corporation's offices from New York to Chicago.

My merry contemporaries seemed charmed to have me go and there was a full attendance, with Harry presiding as toastmaster through a function in which he applied the heat with great zeal and vigor.

From that day on we have never passed an opportunity to cross foils in cheerful disagreement.

HARRY REICHENBACH, the blithe and dashing swashbuckler of Broadway, and a world famous author of stories and box office news good enough to be true.

Harry went to work when he was 15 years old, with an insurance company. But that matter of fact sort of enterprise could hold the animated young Mr. Reichenbach only briefly. Soon he appeared in the employ of Mlle. Wanda, a fortune teller. Then came the Sells-Forepaugh circus and after that the Swanson & Layton Carnival Company. With that he was definitely aligned with the activity which was to be his life career, amusement promotion.

About 1911 he opened a free-lance publicity office in the Putnam building where the Paramount building now towers over Times Square. His first client there was the Russman Art Corporation, which had to offer that now classic painting by Paul Chabas entitled "September Morn." In behalf of the younger generation it may be recorded that this masterpiece portrayed a slim maiden at dawn shivering on the shallows of a pool and clothed exclusively in the rising mists, which were quite light. It lithographed charmingly.

After giving the esthetic and commercial aspects of the problem his most profound consideration, Harry arranged a window display of a sizable reproduction of the picture in the window of a shop in West 31st street and employed a handful of Western Union messenger boys to stand in front of the window and make remarks calculated to indicate their excitement.

Harry then telephoned Anthony Comstock, the justly celebrated professional anti-vice crusader, and let nature take its course.

Mr. Comstock's outraged cries rang around the world and "September Morn" became a household word, while the picture took its place in the middle class living rooms of the period between "Pharaoh's Horses" and the souvenir from Niagara Falls. In six months nearly four million copies were sold at a retail price of a dollar each. Harry got $450 for the job and paid the messenger boys from his fee.

One of Harry's earliest acquaintances in the publicity field of Broadway was with Paul Gulick, then engaged in various promotional activities in behalf of artists. Mr. Gulick was at the moment engaged in seeing to it that Sir Ernest Shackleton was properly appreciated by the press.

He had neatly arranged a sure fire first page story, but on arising to gloat over the morning papers he found his excellent story inside.

Meanwhile, an ape, or monkey, had burglariously stolen or purloined the jewels of Miss Grace Van Studdiford, and with the same motion also page one of the New York papers. Mr. Gulick on investigation found that Miss Van Studdiford had shortly before employed Mr. Reichenbach, and, fairly or not, decided at once there was a connection between those facts.

They had a conference at the Forty-second street Country Club, which went far into the evening and ripened into a lasting friendship.

One of Harry's most conspicuous contributions to the gaiety of the nation was in behalf of the Macaulay Company's publication of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks." The novel had had only mild and inconsequential reviews. Harry took the book home one evening and read it. The next day he accepted the assignment to put it over and urged the publisher to make extraordinary efforts to get out shipments to the bookshops in anticipation of a demand.

Three weeks later the Postoffice Department in Washington received a flood of protests from reformers in all parts of the country crying out against circulation of "Three Weeks." After a week of this barrage the book was barred from the mails. The resultant publicity promptly moved all the stocks on hand with the retailers.

One day in November of 1913, the late Louis DeFoe of the New York World, one of the more famous critics of his day, said: "Publicity means nothing to any one aspiring to a career on the dramatic or vaudeville stage unless the person who gets it has a goodly share of real talent."

Harry Reichenbach saw opportunity and took violent issue with Mr. Defoe.

"Let me take a girl with a little beauty, a little brains, a little talent and I'll make a star of her in 30 days," said Harry, "for a bet of $50."

Three days later Charles K. Harris, music publisher, telephoned Harry to ask if he could do anything for a girl with a fair voice and much in need of a job. Fate had delivered the instrument to Harry. The next day he met Nina Barbour, a pale but pretty little person with just a bit of a voice.

"Publicity is simply a special form of advertising and the whole world knows what advertising can do."

—HARRY REICHENBACH

Very shortly Miss Barbour was registered at a hotel in the Bowery and installed in a job in a Broome street sweatshop, operating a sewing machine. She was rehearsed for days in her role as the sewing machine girl.

Then it just so happened that Florence and Mary Nash, who chanced to be Harry's clients, too, went for a motor ride that took them through the Bowery. The car developed carburetor trouble in front of the Broome street address, and while the car was being adjusted the singing sewing machine girl's voice wafted down from a window and she was "discovered."

The Misses Nash took their discovery out of the Bowery to the comfort and elegance of an uptown hotel and some way the newspapers found out about the whole sweet sad episode.

George Gottlieb of the United Booking Office read the papers and called on Nina. She did a week at the Palace for $450 and played the Orpheum time at $350. Harry netted $50 from DeFoe.

It was in the winter of 1916 that Harry achieved the special triumph which gave the name of Reichenbach a magic value in the motion picture industry. Charles Abrams, who operated a film exchange, introduced to him William A. Parsons, known to the film world then as "Smiling Billy."

"Harry, this Bill Parsons says he has the rottenest picture in the world and he wants you to handle it," Abrams explained.

The picture was "Tarzan of the Apes." It was from the Edgar Rice Burrough's story and had cost Parsons and his backers, Wyoming ranchers, about $240,000.

Harry took on the job for a hundred dollars a week and 15 per cent over a gross of $50,000. He rented the Broadway Theatre, put in a jungle lobby and on opening night turned a cold and unhappy ape loose in the Knickerbocker Hotel. The ape turned up in the Yorkville night court and the daily papers. "Tarzan of the Apes" grossed $1,200,000.

William Fox found a problem on his hands with "Over the Hill" at the Lyric. The 50-cent and dollar seats were selling, but the two-dollar rows were empty. In the sixth week of the run Harry Reichenbach was brought to bear on the problem. The dailies started to bloom with big display advertisements quoting imposingly named personages who saw the picture.

Then presently there appeared in Fifth Avenue, Madison Avenue and the Times Square district, handsomely dressed and aristocratic couples, often audibly engaged in argument over what play to see. They were overheard by the crowds about, and always in the argument the decision was reached to abandon tickets to the opera, or some stage hit, in favor of going to see "Over the Hill." The impression got about that the swells of New York were seeing the picture and a profitable percentage followed to sit in two-dollar seats with the wealthy. "Over the Hill" at the Lyric picked up $3,000 a week on this exploitation. The cost was Harry's fee and the salary of 24 motion picture extras.

In behalf of the "Return of Tarzan," the third picture of that series, Harry accepted a commission to put it on page one.

T. R. Zann of Leavenworth, Kan., with a breezy western manner and a wide hat, registered at the Belleclaire Hotel in upper Broadway and requested a suite on the first floor. He said he was having a piano delivered to his quarters. The piano box arrived.

When dinner time came Mr. T. R. Zann ordered a neat meal for himself and told the waiter to also bring 15 pounds of raw steak. The waiter was surprised. Mr. Zann opened the door to the adjacent room and showed him a lion. "The steak's for him." The police broke into the room and T. R. Zann broke into the papers. He proved eventually to be Walter Beckwith, an animal trainer from Yonkers.

Harry's liveliest publicity excitement of his career to date was in connection with Universal's "The Virgin of Stamboul."

It seems that the "Virgin" was in New York. That was news in itself. Then it seems that maybe she had been done to death in a lake in Central Park. The police dragged the lake, and brought up nothing but space in the papers.

There was a visiting delegation of mysterious Turkish emissaries, officially from Constantinople with credentials. Actually they were Turks from the Constantinople coffee house in the lower East Side. They had been rehearsed in their roles in the quest of the Virgin of Stamboul for two weeks in sequestered quarters at the Hotel Hermitage in the seclusion of Times Square. Incidentally, they consumed $427.39 worth of French pastry while in training.

The Turkish officials did very well in the press for several days, until the esteemed Bey Ali bent over too far in a salaam and disclosed a Wallach laundry mark on his shirt-tail before the eyes of an inquiring reporter.

Harry's success with this enterprise led to the introduction of a bill at Albany making it a legal offense to give false information to the press. Harry retorted by promising to bring to bar some of the politicians involved by a prosecution based on their campaign promises.

Some years ago Mr. Reichenbach wrote of his adventures in publicity at home and abroad for Liberty Magazine. This autumn Simon & Schuster plan to bring out an autobiographical book by Harry, written in collaboration with David Freedman, under the title of "Phantom Fame" or "They Love It."

EDUCATIONAL FILMS TO BE TESTED AT CAPITAL

Fox Makes Series of Sound Films To Be Seen by School Children Representing Country

Experiments to determine the possibilities of sound motion pictures in public school instruction this week were given the backing of the White House when Walter H. Newton, Secretary to the President, addressed a letter to the governors of the 48 states asking their co-operation in the making of test films in Washington, during the week of July 6.

The governor of each state was asked to secure the designation by the proper school authorities of a boy or girl of grammar school age to come to Washington at the expense of the group which is sponsoring the work, to be the subjects of these test films, in the making of which George Washington University will furnish the necessary facilities. A member of the board of education from each state will accompany each child to ascertain the value of the experiment.

A number of educational films made with these child subjects have been prepared by Fox Film, although no one company will be given any monopoly of the production which may result should the tests prove successful. The making of the pictures was under the supervision of a committee consisting of Dean Reudiger of George Washington University, chairman; Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of District of Columbia schools; J. W. Crabtree of the National Education Association; E. C. Broome of Philadelphia, president of the department of superintendence; Dr. George Johnson of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; Dean Florence Bamberger of Johns Hopkins University, and Miss Bess Goddykoontz, Assistant United States Commissioner of Education.

The films which Fox has prepared with the assistance of the various educators, for use in the Washington tests, include subjects, for the most part one-reel in length, covering civics, science, geography and history. Various incidents of historical importance are pictured in the one group; the life cycle of certain animals in the science films; the story of the flag and the relation of the citizen to the government in the civics section and scenes of rivers, volcanoes and the like under the geographical studies.

No color films are to be used; all subjects are sound synchronized and where possible, particularly in the geographical films, natural sound has been caught. The series is intended primarily as supplemental to ordinary classroom and blackboard routine instruction. Lectures accompany those films not shown with natural sound, and some incidental music is utilized to lighten the reels.

Fox has already prepared more subjects than will be actually needed for the tests, permitting a wide choice. Fox is prepared, in the event of the tests being successful, and being assured of the support of the state boards of education, to concentrate on the production of pictures designed exclusively for use in schools over the country.

Pays for Shows He "Stole"

Vincent Lawder, manager of the Stratton theatre in Middletown, N. Y., is now telling this one about a former newsboy who, growing up and "getting religion," paid the other day for entertainment at the Stratton that he "stole" 20 years ago.

Lawder received a letter from the town of Walton, and opening it found one dollar and the following explanation:

"I believe The Christ is coming very soon and that He will judge every one by his works. . . . Several years ago I was selling newspapers in Middletown. Occasionally I used to steal up the abandoned stairway beside the main entrance to the Stratton theatre and walk into the gallery and then walk out with the crowd. I believe any such dishonesty enough to keep one out of Heaven if it goes unconfessed."

When Lawder recovered, he told friends that he would give the dollar to charity, in spite of the depression.

Allied Attacks 'Buy Now' Drive

A publicity release from Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors' Washington office assails the "buy now" campaign which took its origin in the utterances recently presented in the trade press from Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin.

The Allied bulletin alleges that business conditions are so unsettled that scarcely any exhibitor knows what he will be able to pay for pictures next year; that producers' announcements lack definite information; that the financial condition of "a few companies" is such that they are dubious about their ability to deliver per announcement; that the "buy now" campaign is designed to leave "the independent exhibitor holding the bag."

[As Motion Picture Herald has editorially and variously indicated, there is in the argument to "buy now" no purpose to drive or expectation of driving exhibitors into unwise commitments, but rather a purpose of pointing out that the industry can not be well served, or any part of it prosper, in a state of timidity and stagnation. Something has to be done about this business all the time, every day, and that something is business.—The Editor.]

Others May Follow France in Repealing Quota Restrictions

General consideration throughout Europe of the elimination of quota restrictions on American films, is believed probable as a result of the action of France, which this week was reported to have removed such restrictions for the period of one year, beginning July 1.

The French ruling provides that American producers will be permitted to export their product into France without respect to the production or exhibition of domestic pictures.

The move is thought to be a result of the lack of suitable domestic product, a condition which exists not only in France but in all the other countries of Europe, including England.

No definite information that France has eliminated its quota restrictions has been received by the Hays office, according to the organization's headquarters in New York.

British Negotiate For Distribution in Russia

Negotiations are under way between A. Hubrich, European representative of British International Pictures, Ltd., and representatives of Sovkino, Soviet producing and exhibiting combine, looking to the distribution of British pictures in Russia. Russian subtitles would be added if the deal is completed. A number of theatres in the leading cities of the Soviet Union have been wired for sound, chiefly German and native equipment.

Dr. Skinner Supplants Clifton As Ohio Censor Board Chief

Dr. B. O. Skinner, president of Wilmington College, on July 1 takes over the post of chief Ohio censor, occupied by John L. Clifton until the recent appointment by Governor White.

Ohio exhibitors generally are elated over the appointment of Skinner, since he is known to be broad of vision, eminently fair in decisions, and keenly interested in pictures.

Important Paramount Changes Expected From Goulding Trip

Edmund Goulding, Paramount director, is in London conferring with Robert T. Kane, who developed the company's Paris plant, and J. C. Graham, Paramount managing director abroad.

It is expected there that the discussions will result in important announcements regarding English production and in particular the Elstree studios.

Franco-German Quota Talks Make No Headway in Paris

Despite the efforts of the French representative, Charles Delac, and German interests in discussing a possible Franco-German quota agreement, at least in part, little headway has apparently been made in Paris.

Fox Is Grasping at Straw, Says Burns, In Grandeur Case

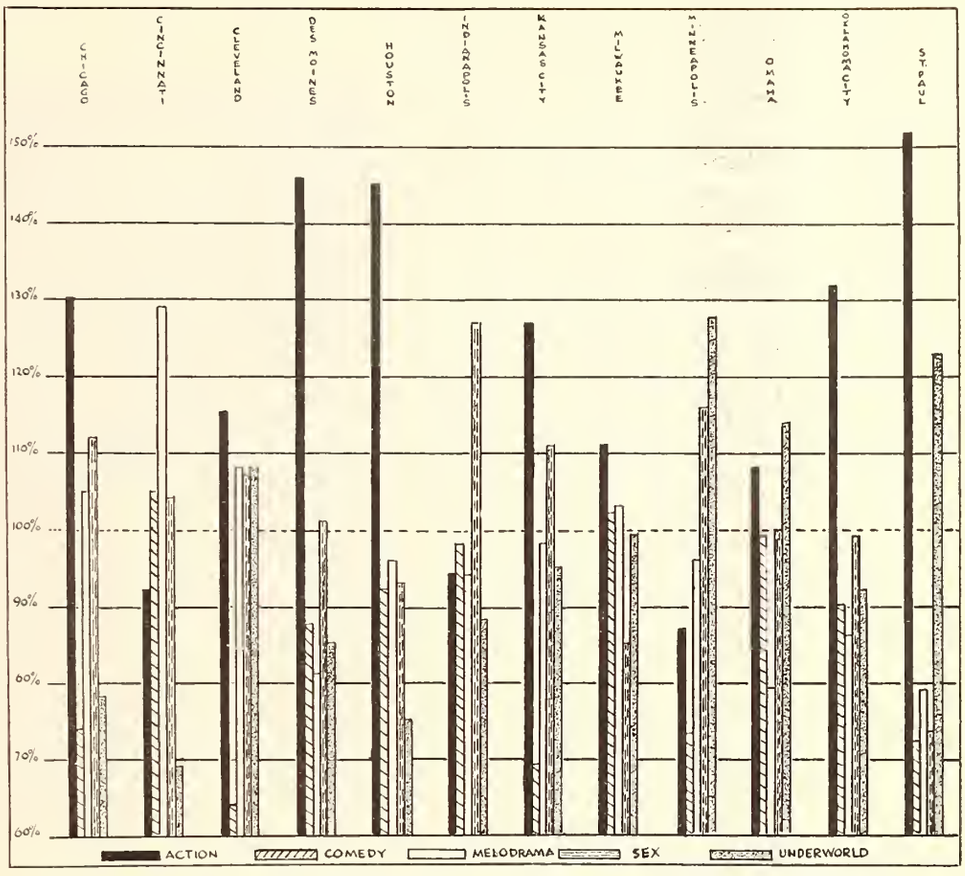
The supreme court order granted to William Fox this week which gives to him permission to examine the books of Grandeur, Inc., is accepted by insiders as further indication of a reported plan of Fox to pique Harley L. Clarke, Fox Film and General Theatres chief, through a series of suits against the Clarke motion picture interests.

Fox's re-entrance into pictures through his half Grandeur interest, the remainder of which Clarke owns, is said to be impossible, his iron-clad agreement signed when he sold Fox interests to Clarke preventing him from staging a comeback.

"Fox is just grasping at a straw," said S. R. Burns, secretary of General Theatres.

Papers filed in support of the application for the order declare that Fox is the sole owner of the stock of Half Grandeur, Inc., which owns 50 per cent of Grandeur, Inc. It is stated that the board of directors of Grandeur, Inc., consists of three representatives of Fox and three representatives of Clarke.

Fox says in his supporting affidavit that he knows of no dividends declared by Grandeur, Inc., but that General Theatres Equipment, in a statement filed with the New York Stock Exchange, reported as income for 1929 the sum of $219,905 received as 50 per cent of the profits of Grandeur, Inc., and for the six months ended on June 30, 1930, a similar item for $64,662. In the papers is a letter from Fox to Clarke asking him how General Theatres obtained those sums of money when Half Grandeur, Inc., got none. No answer to this letter was filed with the papers.



S. R. Burns, vice-president and secretary of General Theatres Equipment, filed an opposing affidavit, however, in which he asserted that while the items of nearly $300,000 appeared in the statement of the company, the money had never been received as dividends or added to the income of General Theatres in any way.

The application of Fox also requested permission to examine books of Mitchell Camera, subsidiary of Grandeur. This application was denied, however, on the ground that the camera company is a foreign corporation not doing business in this state and therefore not under the jurisdiction of the New York courts.

Bauer Blames Steffes For Wisconsin Schism

Blame for the withdrawal of the Wisconsin MPTO from Allied States is placed on Al Steffes by Steve Bauer, business manager of the former organization. Bauer said that when the insurgent movement that later became a separate organization, first appeared in the Allied unit, Steffes, representing Allied, supported the dissenters at a meeting arranged to effect unity.

It is regarded as practically certain that Allied will grant the charter discarded by the MPTO, to the new state organization.

Action pictures hold particular interest for picture patrons in the Middlewest, as evidenced by MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S survey of grosses and audience reaction in twelve cities. Cincinnati was the one city in which melodrama predominated over the other four types of pictures. One hundred per cent in the chart represents the average gross for all kinds of productions.

U Sales Increase Shows Exhibitors Are Buying Now

Universal reports that its contracts for new season product up to June 13, showed an average increase of 49% over contracts for the same situations last year. Contracts on the new Tom Mix series are not included in the estimate.

The increase is looked upon as an example of the renewed confidence of exhibitors in the future of the motion picture business for the next year.

The Universal increase in sales bears out the message of MOTION PICTURE HERALD that "Now is the time to buy and sell." The first of a series of such messages is published on pages 16 and 17.

A Kippered Short!

A talkertoon by Max Fleischer, which Paramount will release, called "The Herring Murder Case," is noted as the "gang picture to end all gang pictures." The story depicts the death of a poor defenseless herring, and what happened to his murderers when they were apprehended. Why, of course, they were kippered!

Milliken Resigns From Committee Of Church Council

Carl E. Milliken of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has resigned from the administrative committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The announcement came this week following a meeting last Friday, when the resignation was received and accepted. Dean Luther A. Weigle of Yale Divinity School presided.

Mr. Milliken's resignation comes on the eve of the issuance of a report on the American motion picture industry to be released next week by the Federal Council. The findings of that report will be presented in full in the next issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

It is understood that Mr. Milliken at the beginning of the inquiry, which was started last year, because of his connection with the industry did not attend meetings of the committee. The files and records of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America were made available for the purposes of the inquiry. The report is said to offer both commendation and criticism of the conduct of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Milliken late in the week departed for Los Angeles where he will address the convention of the National Educational Association on educational values of the motion picture.

This advertisement is the first of a series on success in the picture industry.

a victor over adversity

MR. MARCUS LOEW, now passed to his reward, would be an interesting spokesman in this period of timidity and wavering pessimism. Someway he met such problems with the courage of a belief in America and the assurance that sound service in amusements could not fail. He had tough times, too. It was not all easy going up from his boyhood on the Bowery to the great heritage of substantial attainment which he left, an enrichment of the whole of motion picture tradition. Marcus Loew never quit, never faltered. He was certain of his tomorrows.

now is the time to buy & sell

Two great exhibitor organizations have come forward with aggressive advice to their members to "buy now and buy right." The lethargic condition of the day cries out for action. The amusement industry, broadly based on the world's widest market and the most fundamental of human desires, has today no cause to stand and wait or to view with alarm.

"The money that was in this country in 1928 and 1929 is still here," exclaimed Mayor Walker of New York the other day. "Where is it hiding?"

That money isn't hiding, it is just warily waiting. Aggressive selling can, will and does bring it out. Amusement buyers are the same buyers who today seek unusual values, or appearances of value, in all commodities. The good selling jobs of today are gathering rewards.

The desire of people to "go places"—their desire to be amused—is inherent, so the picture business has a special advantage in today's keen selling competition. The theatre owner and the producer must make them want it.

The exhibitor dollar spent for product now is high in buying power, and a vital contribution, as well, to the continued success and normal growth of the industry. Normal buying activity now means better product for the big show season to come. Every motion picture success of the past has been built on courage. The foundation of every great success in the industry was laid in days of adversity. That is where the victors come from.

STOCKS ADD MILLIONS TO VALUE

Participate in Upswing After Debt Proposal; Eastman Kodak Rises 20 Points On Big Demand

By THE ANALYST

In one of the biggest rallies since 1929, motion picture stocks added millions to their value during the past week by vigorous participation in the general upward market swing that followed announcement of the American proposal for a one-year war debt holiday.

New current highs in film shares were reached by all amusement securities on the stock, curb and bond marekts and the turnover was the largest in months.

Aside from the bullish tone in the general list, there were some favorable developments affecting the industry, conspicuous among which was the removal of all French restrictions on importation of American films and prospects that the action would influence similar steps at Berlin.

Paramount issued its earnings report for the first quarter, showing a substantial drop from the corresponding period of 1930, but estimates were current that the company's earnings for the second quarter would substantially cover the dividend requirements and expectations were expressed that a comparatively favorable showing would be made later in the year, when the company will begin to reflect savings effected by recent wage cuts and dividend reduction.

Eastman Kodak furnished the week's pyrotechnics, soaring about 20 points on a heavy demand, while RKO, although rising less spectacularly, was accumulated in huge blocks, suggesting a return of aggressive sponsorship of the shares by interests attracted by the company's expansion potentialities. Paramount also gave indications of renewed pool operation and was up about six points over last Thursday's final level.

After a period of hesitancy in the Friday, June 19, session, all the picture issues participated vigorously in the sensational market rally on Saturday, which was followed by another upturn on Monday, in which all the leaders played a prominent part, Kodak spurting to 15 points above last week's closing price.

Tuesday the group sold off slightly on profit-taking, but recessions were narrower than those caused by realizing sales in other sections of the list and Wednesday the advance was resumed with increasing momentum on another buying wave and best prices were maintained thereafter.

Loew's, which had been somewhat slow to follow the improvement in the other picture stocks, perked up sharply this week and advanced more than five points in the period on expectations that the company will report a balance of approximately $7 a share for the fiscal year ended August 31.

First on the Draw!

It was 3:30 in the wee hours when the owner of a well-doing string of suburban houses in Chicago was called to the phone. After he had hung up, things began to happen. Theatre bookkeepers and cashiers hurried to their offices. Then they hied themselves to the west suburban bank that handled the business. At 7 they were admitted and some generous withdrawals were made. At 7:15 the bank president arrived to announce the bank was in the hands of the state bank examiners.

Cohn Will Leave Columbia—If!

Harry Cohn, it is understood, has discussed with Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn, his partners at Columbia, the possibility of withdrawing as West Coast production chief of Columbia Pictures.

The hitch in the deal, it is said, revolves around the inability of Jack and Brandt to agree with Harry on terms of a settlement of stock holdings of the partners.

Brandt, Thursday, denied that Cohn contemplates leaving Columbia. He stated that Harry Cohn is very happy at the Columbia studio.

Figures Show Fox Deficit Of $2,484,824 Last Year

The Fox Theatres report for the year ended last October 26 shows a deficit of $2,484,824.

This compares with a net income of $2,660,261 for the preceding year.

Rumors Force Stock Down

Rumors concerning the instability of Union Theatres, Sydney, Australia, caused a drop of 45 per cent in the stock on the exchange. Report of a merger with the Fox-Hoyts group capped the list of false stories, but was denied by Charles Munro, head of Hoyts.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

INTERVIEW. Alexander A. Brown, associate editor of Fox Movietone News, "covering" Fifi Stillman and Fowler McCormick. The cameraman is Rody Green, Kenneth Upton the sound engineer.

AMONG THOSE PRESENT. Gathered in tribute to Cecil B. DeMille at the Ambassador hotel in Hollywood, as the director took leave of M-G-M and prepared for a trip to Europe. Among the guests shown are Cecil and William DeMille, Louis B. Mayer, Sol Wurtzel, Sam Goldwyn, Fred Beetson, Charles Sullivan, Joseph Schnitzer, Charles R. Rogers, Al Kaufman and William LeBaron.

TO MAKE SERIES. C. C. Burr, producer who will make a new series of Torchy Comedies, and Ray Cook, who has been signed to play the leading role. Series will be released by Educational.

STRICTLY BUSINESS. As young Jackie Cooper signs a new contract that makes him an M-G-M player. The suddenly famous "Skippy" is shown with Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production.

GRATIOS! (Right) A gesture of international friendship in Hollywood as the American Will Hays met Mexican Minister Genaro Estrado.

CAPRICE. Or, perhaps, a blonde in Hollywood looking for a gentleman. At any rate, Noel Francis, a Warner Brothers tribute to Beauty—at present in "Smart Money."

MEASURING THE EMOTIONS. Science isn't leaving anything to mere guesses these days—not even how the movies affect you. Here is a case in point: Dr. William Moulton Marsden, consulting psychologist, is shown taking emotion tests of three types—Louise Estes, a blonde; Violet Carson, brunette; and Helen Mack, red-head—while they watch scenes in Warner Brothers' "Smart Money."

GOOD MUSIC UP TO SPONSORS: WUNDER

Suggests Federation Units Set Up Preview System and Get Behind Pictures They Deem Best

Jazz will rule screen productions until the sponsors of good music prove, via the box office, that the better grade melodies are profitable.

The national convention of the Federation of Music Clubs, meeting in San Francisco, was told that this week by Dr. Clinton Wunder, executive vice-president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood.

Addressing the Federation members at their banquet, Dr. Wunder told them frankly that it is up to them to establish by their support, that better music is commercially desirable. He suggested that the music clubs cooperate with the Hays organization by setting up a preview system on musical and semi-musical productions and that they get behind those they deem allies of the higher forms of melody.

Dr. Wunder forecast a gradual return of musical production on the screen. As proof he called attention to the fact that many short subjects today emphasize music "as a balance to the dramatic or the feature picture," and that in an increasing numbber of long productions music "is permitted to play an entirely appropriate and natural part." And when the public demand becomes sufficiently strong there will be musicals of the highest type as well as screen opera.

Arthur Alexander, American composer, is quoted as predicting that in ten years much of the good music of the world will be written directly for the screen, and Lawrence Tibbett, star of Metropolitan opera and of motion pictures, sees sound as a force for a national musical awakening.

Dr. Wunder told the convention that one reason that musical pictures declined from the popularity they enjoyed at the advent of sound was indiscriminate usage of music in situations that made the application incongruous. He explained: "One would be riding the seas when suddenly out of nowhere there might appear an orchestra of fifty pieces to accompany the hero in a tender tenor solo, expressing undying devotion to his beloved one mile ashore. Lack of understanding prompted this situation."

The most that the producers can do is to set a minimum level of good taste; above that, it is the audience which sets the fashion, the speaker said. He pointed out that if there is a nationwide call for a picture it will be shown in perhaps as many as 14,000 theatres, but if there is no special demand it may appear in only 1,400 houses, and the cost of production will not be earned.

"The producers themselves are not able to stimulate this local demand beyond moderate leads," Dr. Wunder said. "It becomes a matter of local community leadership, and if those elements in a community which are eager to see improvement in screen dramas shown in their towns are wide awake, they can build up a local demand for the best in pictures."

Cooling at $70 a Seat

Air-conditioning at $70 a seat is the project for the Studio theatre being constructed in Hollywood by Hughes-Franklin theatre circuit. The system, a Carrier plant, not only cools the air but washes it as well. The equipment and installation at the Studio theatre will cost $21,000, says Hughes-Franklin and there will be 300 seats in the theatre.

Union Threatens In Sydney Fight

Delay on the part of Sydney, Australia, theatre owners in ratifying a new employees' wage scale, expected for weeks, has resulted in threats on the part of the Theatrical Employees' Union to engage in a concerted war, unless the eight per cent raise called for is immediately forthcoming.

A strongly worded declaration, which had the effect of forcing theatre owners to meet for consideration of the employees' needs, said in part:

"We can assure showmen, and particularly the American combine interested in the exhibiting business, that we intend to fight. We will attack the exhibitor who refuses to pay the employee a decent wage, and we will divert his patronage to the opposition who will do so. We will not tolerate unjust treatment of our members. We will not tolerate, more especially, such treatment as our female members are receiving. The wages paid these unfortunate girls, under the conditions which they have to work, will tend to bring about prostitution. What do showmen care?"

"Hell's Angels" Gross Over Four Million, Say Auditors

Howard Hughes' auditors have answered the question as to whether Hughes would get back the $4,000,000 which he is reported to have expended in production of "Hell's Angels," by announcing that the picture already has grossed more than that amount. Officials of United Artists estimate that the production ultimately will take in more than $7,000,000.

Hays Representative Resigns

Fayette W. Allport, former German and French representative of the Hays organization on the patent situation, has resigned in New York and will return to the consular service.

Kurtzman Returns

Charles E. Kurtzman, special field representative of Harry Arthur, general manager of Fox Theatres, is back at the home office after a brief stay in Bermuda.

A Real Quickie!

The French Academy of Science has been presented with a model of the fastest motion picture camera, with which, it is said, from 2,000 to 3,000 exposures a second can be made.

The camera obtains its illumination permitting this speed from a tube of neon gas which is charged, intermittently, with 16,000 volts of electric current through a condenser.

Claverings Facing Suit with Craig in Deal of Warners

A sequel to Arthur Clavering's resignation as managing director of Warner Brothers in London, comes the news that Warner has served writs on Clavering, his brother Albert, Sir Gordon Craig and Federated Estates, Ltd., in which they are interested, claiming nullification of the purchase by Warner of 6,000 shares in Federated Estates, according to the London Bureau of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Warner claims repayment of this money with interest and declares that the commitments entered into by Arthur Clavering upon Warner Brothers' behalf were not only unauthorized, but constitute a breach of trust. Arthur Clavering also has been served with a writ in connection with a similar claim respecting another company in which he is interested, called Lanchester Entertainments, Ltd. Federated Estates was registered a little over a year ago, its objects being to acquire and build cinemas. The company actually acquired an interest in several halls, two of which are in London.

Oregon Allied Exhibitors Keep Tebbetts President

Allied Exhibitors of Oregon is the new name of the Allied Exhibitors of Northwest. This action was taken at the third annual convention of the organization, at Portland. Nearly 100 theatres and 50 cities of Portland and Southern Washington were represented.

W. E. Tebbetts, veteran independent exhibitor of Portland, was re-elected president. Tebbetts operates the Oriental and Laurelhurst theatres. Other officers chosen are: first vice president, Guy Matthew, The Dallas; second vice president, Stephen Parker, Portland; secretary-treasurer, William Cutts, Portland; board of directors, Mrs. Myrtle Buckmiller of Baker, Ore., Ray Stumbo of Salem, W. A. Dunlop of Grants Pass, and Bob Marsden of Marshfield.

Milliken Due on Coast

Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Hays organization, is due in Hollywood by the end of June on what is reported to be a special mission. Hays is expected to make another trip to Hollywood about the first of September.

WE'RE OFF!

NEW BRITISH SCHOOL LAUNCHED TO TRAIN PLAYERS FOR HOME STUDIOS

No More Gangster Films From Fox

Fox Film will not include gangster pictures in its forthcoming list of pictures, Winfield Sheehan, vice-president in charge of production, declared in New York before leaving for Hollywood.

Winfield Sheehan

"Now that the country is emerging from the financial depression," said Sheehan, "the inevitable psychological reaction has set in with the public. The cinema-going millions want entertainment that would inspire achievement, or, something cheering. Pictures of adventure and romance are the antidotes for the harsh realities of workaday life.

"This means that so far as Fox Film Corporation is concerned, there will be no productions dealing with the organized activities of gangsters or the operations of racketeers, or any productions concerned with underworld characters fighting the forces of law and order.

"We do not wish to stir up antagonism from any groups of our population by any suggestions in motion pictures, particularly when the film narrative is concerned with crime."

Patten Not Spokesman For Hays Office, Is Reply

Tom Patten is not a spokesman for the Hays organization. That is the MPPDA's reply to Patten's statement that bankers are ready to revamp the motion picture industry on a United States Steel plan, as quoted by Florabel Muir, writing from Hollywood, in the New York Daily News. Other comment attributed to him concerned producers and relatives and highly lucrative positions.

A Hays spokesman pointed out that Patten was secretary of the California association eight years ago and, "after a long period of silence, appears in print as a 'deputy extraordinary' to Will Hays. That is not the truth."

Ufa Increases Ad Reels

Ufa reports from Germany a decided increase in the production of advertising shorts in recent months. It claims they are running in approximately all the 1,500 sound theatres in Germany.

Research Head on Coast

Harold Hendee, research director for Radio in the East, is in Hollywood coordinating his activity with that of the corresponding Coast department.

Thanks for the Push

Says the Cinematograph (London) Times:

"There is a tendency to exaggerate the hard times through which America is going by alarmist reports of the whole industry breaking up. Mostly what is happening on that side is that inevitable economies are taking place, and the whole industry over there is coming down to earth and adjusting itself to leaner times. Anyone who thinks the industry there is going to bust can just reflect that it is of such magnitude and so many interests are involved, that such a catastrophe would never be permitted to happen. Stocks have slumped pretty well to their lowest, and at that point they are likely to remain until business improves, which means that the panicmongers and alarmists have another three or four months at least to set any wild stories going. In the meantime some of the useless growth which has accumulated on the industry is being ruthlessly pruned."

Copyright Protection Bureau Appeals Ruling

The Copyright Protection Bureau, armed with several court decisions, has appealed the ruling of Federal Judge Morton in district court in Massachusetts that the copyright law does not apply to films. Judge Morton's decision was made in actions brought by M-G-M and Educational against Bijou Theatre Company of Holyoke, Mass. Gabriel L. Hess, attorney for the distributors in such matters, pointed out that court decisions previous to 1909 (the date the copyright law was enacted) had sustained their right to copyright.

Court Sustains Decisions Allowing Copyright Suits

Federal Judge Coleman, in New York, has sustained the decision of several district courts, in a recent opinion that distributors may sue for copyright infringements under the Copyright Law.

The decree resulted from the case of Tiffany, RKO, Columbia and Warner against Dewing & Bishop of Greensboro, Md., for showing unlicensed films. The judge ruled that it was immaterial whether or not a contract existed.

Roxy Books "Ubangi"

The Roxy theatre in New York starts showing "Ubangi" Friday of this week, at the morning and supper shows, with a Fox picture. "Ubangi" thus becomes one of the few state right pictures to play there.

Salaries Are Reduced on Orders from U. S.

Gaumont May Adopt American Sound System—Jack Buchanan to Appear in English Picture

By W. H. MOORING, London

In an attempt to offset the slackness of British film producers who for some reason best known to themselves make little or no effort to develop new talent among actors or technicians, a new concern called British Cinematograph Training Studios, Ltd., with a capital of $75,000, has been registered in London. It is to be run on the lines of the Paramount and Warner schools as nearly as possible. Backing the scheme as directors are Baron Clanmorris, Sinclair Hill, and Adrian Brunel (both directors of high standing) and J. L. R. Corpel, dramatic critic to a number of French journals, and the promoter of a well-known French Casino.

The idea is to charge reasonable fees, varying from $60 to $75 for a special term of instruction, and to sift material from both the technical and artistic angles. There is a good deal of prejudice in England against any kind of training schools, but this scheme at any rate appears to have the merit of honesty. The promoters are respected.

Orders from U. S. A.

More than one renting company here is cutting down salaries all round. In some instances cuts have been as high as 20 per cent. It is said that the move indicates that the American economy wave has rippled across the Atlantic, since it is being felt in the first place among American owned companies.

Gaumont May Adopt U. S. Sound

It is practically certain that unless the executives of Gaumont-British feel satisfied at the completion of current studio production that their own recording system, British Acoustics, is showing definite signs of improvement, they will abandon this method, and will install either Western Electric or RCA.

It is perhaps not without significance that one current Gaumont picture, "A Gentleman of Paris," is being recorded at the Stoll studios on the Visatone system.

Buchanan In British Films

Included in six British feature films which Basil Dean will make for PDC release in Britain and for distribution in U. S. A. through RKO-Pathe, will be at least one, and probably more, starring vehicles for Jack Buchanan, British stage star, seen in recent Hollywood pictures.

Here and There

Harold Auten V.C., late B.I.P. representative in U. S. A., has been appointed foreign sales manager for PDC, on whose behalf Delehanty is now initiating a big Continental push.

66 WARNER PLAYERS IN BROADCAST TIEUP

Arliss Answers Attacks on Industry in First of Vacuum Company's Weekly Programs

Negotiations between Warner-First National and the Vacuum Oil Company resulted, on June 22, in the first of a weekly series of radio broadcasts called "The Radio Newsreel of Hollywood," in which, during the course of a year, all the 66 featured players under contract to Warner-First National will speak on various phases of film work in the studio city.

The Vacuum company, maker of Mobilgas, sponsors the programs, while the film company supplies the necessary performers, and arranges for the preparation of each program. The tie-up has been described as one of the most far reaching in the industry.

Thirty-six main broadcasting stations will handle the programs in a nationwide hookup, the smaller stations picking up the series from them. A stagger system will be used, the programs going over different networks on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday of each week.

George Arliss opened the series on Monday, June 22, at 7:45 with an address having for its theme the defense of Hollywood. The speech, recorded for electrical transcription several weeks ago, before the departure of the actor for England, was delivered from the Coast by that method, and relayed to London.

Among the players who successively will take part in the broadcasts will be Dorothy Mackaill, week of July 6; Walter Huston and Doris Kenyon, week of July 13; Ivan Simpson, week of July 20 and John Barrymore, week of September 20. Others included are Richard Barthelmess, Edward G. Robinson, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Barbara Stanwyck, William Powell, Dolores Costello, Winnie Lightner, Leon Janney, Charles Butterworth, Ona Munson, Evalyn Knapp, David Manners, Loretta Young, Frank Fay, Marion Marsh, Walter Byron and John Monk Saunders.

Carl Bush, executive secretary of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, one of the California civic bodies which have endorsed the series, comments on the "Radio Newsreel of Hollywood" by saying, "Many writers and speakers have attempted to portray to the public various aspects of the Hollywood community, but none of these, so far as we know, have caught the true spirit and meaning of the varied activities of Hollywood so accurately and so interestingly as have those who have developed this series of broadcasts."

The address of George Arliss, on "The Real Hollywood," which takes the shape of a clear defense of the film community, was in part as follows:

"What is the meaning of all this raising of eyebrows and shrugging of the shoulders when Hollywood is mentioned? What's the matter with Hollywood? Is it the place, is it the people or is it the pictures?

"I rather think that it is the people that the superior persons object to. It's the actors and actresses they don't like. Not that they have ever met any of them, but they get their ideas from the comic papers and the comic papers still hammer out the jokes that were forged in the old silent picture days. According to those records of Hollywood, the actors and actresses drink and smoke incessantly; have unbridled temperament and no morals. And, as for the directors and managers and all those people who are at the head of these moving picture concerns, the superior person will tell you that there's not an ounce of brains in a boat load.

"If all this were true, I should be ashamed of my share in the business. I should take my check and keep my mouth shut. But is it possible that it can be true? The moving picture industry is the sixth largest in America and 90 per cent of the pictures of the world are made in Hollywood. I am not sure of this percentage, but it is sufficiently near the truth for my argument.

"It is useless to argue that the brains are in Wall Street. It is the box office results that influence Wall Street and for these results the pictures alone are responsible and these pictures are made, and, for the most part, selected in Hollywood. My contention is that if the business were in the hands of ignoramuses, moving pictures would have ceased to exist long ago. * * *

"But I suspect that it is the actors and actresses that are the chief cause for the raising of the eyebrows and the shrugging of the shoulders—those wicked, indolent, overpaid people who spend their time in riotous living and just work now and then when they feel like it.

"The men and women of the stage have to reach the studio about 8 in the morning, often earlier. * * * They must have every faculty keen and alert. Is it possible that they could maintain this physical fitness if they did not lead reasonably quiet and sober lives? Of course, there are black sheep; of course, there are scandals; but remember there are 30,000 actors and actresses in Hollywood and every one of them is potential copy for the newspapers. To keep out of print, you not only have to be respectable but lucky. * * *

"I wish some honest person would come to Hollywood and write about it. * * * Somebody who hasn't an ax to grind, so that the public shall no longer be fed on stories of imaginary evils but shall be told the real truth about Hollywood."

Sentenced to the Movies

Even Justice in Los Angeles is movie-minded. When six prisoners hailed in police court the other night were adjudged guilty, they were sentenced to appear in a motion picture.

The sentences were given when the judge learned that John Ford, Fox director, was present looking for types to use in the Jefferson Market court scenes of "The Brat."

"I sentence you," the judge told the six likely looking film types, "to 30 days on probation provided you show up at the Fox studio tomorrow morning and do what Mr. Ford here tells you. Three days in the movies ought to be worse than that much time in jail."

Goetz in Charge Of Transcriptions For Herbert Yates

H. J. Yates' American Record Corporation has entered the electrical transcription field with "canned" programs for radio broadcasting. Charles S. Goetz, former independent producer and distributor, will handle the new unit, which will become a part of the American divisions of Perfect, Banner, Regla, Oriole and Romeo brand records.

Charles S. Goetz

Yates, who as pointed out in an article in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, now has interests in the film business through Consolidated Film Industries, and in other fields, principally financing, button making, real estate, investments, color raw stock, patents "trust," records and electrical transcriptions, and will next enter the field of television.

Frank Hennigs will continue in charge of production for American Record, with supervision over manufacturing and record. Artists, including Ruth Etting, Gus Van, Ben Ali, Cab Calloway and Chic Bullock, who now appear on company "platters," will be marketed to national advertisers for sponsored programs of the "canned" transcription variety.

RCA Backs Move to Eliminate 50% Super-Tax in Australia

The Australian Comptroller of Customs is considering a proposal, backed by RCA Photophone, to remove the super-tax from imported sound equipment, which would save exhibitors between $2,500 and $3,500 on each apparatus.

Duty at present amounts to 70 per cent, plus 50 per cent super-tax. It is argued that elimination of the super-tax would assist local buyers more than it would hinder local manufacturers.

Pass Billboard Measure

The City Council of Oakland, Cal., has passed the billboard ordinance. Theatrical interests at the last moment pushed through an amendment removing the clause that all boards must be of fireproof material.

Big 4 Adds Exchange

All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of Los Angeles, has been added to the Big 4 list of exchanges for 1931-32. Harry Hart has been appointed branch manager of the company's exchange in Milwaukee.

Harold Hendee, head of Radio's research department in New York, has arrived on the Coast to coordinate work of the newly established branch there under Major Fairbanks.

NEW ASSOCIATED DIRECTOR GROUP FOR UNIT PRODUCTION IS PROPOSED

"Concerted Courageous Effort Can Lick Any Problem. Let Us All Press Harder"

By HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

Recent economic conditions have forced business into a long, disagreeable and apparently endless detour. Like most detours, the going is rough. There are no familiar guide posts along the roadside to point the way. The directions we get are confusing and contradictory. Back seat driving tends to confuse us more. Uncomfortable and bumpy, the road seems to lead nowhere. Business is forlorn—almost frightened . . . At a time when we need confidence more than ever, it is heartening to reiterate the axiom that it's a long road that has no turning.

This trail of stress is a challenge to our initiative and courage. Only through renewed effort, each exercising intelligence and resourcefulness, will the wheel again turn toward normal conditions. More work and the elimination of waste are steps in the right direction. The combined result of many pulling together for a common cause must make itself felt. Concerted courageous effort can lick any problem. Let us press harder!

The part we play in helping towards general recovery will thumb mark each of us. The rewards will be rich for those who can take the bumps without complaint; particularly to those who courageously lead the way. We must stop looking at the stock market as being a barometer of our future. It has deteriorated to nothing more than an indication of a current state of mind of our weakest, most impressionable citizens. We possess in ourselves the power to control conditions. We must work our way out. It is not our possessions but our activity that counts most. Let us show that we are equal to the task. Here is an opportunity for those of us who are true to the spirit of progress—who are fired with determination—and who recognize that we face a task worthy of our best traditions.

Let's Go!

Details of Movement Are Closely Guarded

Prominent Factors Reported to Have Ample Finances If the Project Materializes

A movement is under way, it is understood, to band together a number of the industry's prominent directors for the purpose of carrying out a plan of unit production.

Ample finances will be forthcoming, it is said, if the project materializes.

Details of the movement have been closely guarded owing to the fact that some of the directors interested are now under contract to producers.

In the opinion of those who know of the proposed associated group, its formation would not mean the creation of a new distribution medium. Release of the product, it is pointed out, would be through existing companies.

Conferences concerning the movement were held recently in New York, it is learned. However, directors approached on the subject in Hollywood by a MOTION PICTURE HERALD representative have denied knowledge of the project.

The group would function, it is said, along the lines of now defunct Associated Producers in which the late Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, King Vidor and others were active. The AP group, however, maintained its own exchange system.

Fred Warren at the outset was in charge of distribution for Associated. Later, he was succeeded by Al Lichtman.

One Sheets Free to Aid Summer Receipts

Theatre owners listed on the sale books of Columbia Pictures who participate in a new summer business drive, about to be launched by that organization, will receive gratis one sheet "paper" which will concentrate on business building "plugs."

The drive will include special accessory angles, worked out by Hal Hodes, accessory chief, and Al Seligman, his lieutenant, and is intended to bolster business at the box office during any slack period which may set in during summer months.

Hodes has returned from a tour to key city exchanges.

Fox Newsreel Cameramen To Make Subjects for Managers

Through an arrangement with Truman H. Talley, general manager of the Fox-Hearst Corporation, Fox Movietone News cameramen may make any subject requested by house managers, without interfering with their regular work.

The theatres are required to pay the cost involved, unless the subject is suitable for national release as part of Movietone News.

Saal Leaves Publix to Join Young at Tiffany

William Saal has resigned as Publix director of theatre management for the South and Southwest, effective June 26, and will become special representative for L. A. Young of Tiffany Productions.

Saal joined Paramount Publix twelve years ago when the E. H. Hulsey interests in Texas were acquired, and handled buying and booking for all Publix theatres until a year ago when he was made territorial director of theatre management.

Jewish Guild Elects

The Jewish Theatrical Guild of America has elected as officers for next year, William Morris, president; Eddie Cantor, first vice president; George Jessel, second vice president; Sime Silverman, third vice president; Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, treasurer; Fred Block, financial secretary; Harry Cooper, corresponding secretary; Loney Haskell, recording secretary.

Flies to the Show

Bert Wheeler, Radio comedian, used a transcontinental plane to get from Hollywood to New York to see "Girl Crazy," musical show to which Radio has purchased the screen rights for Wheeler-Woolsey.

Berlin Reports Electrical Interests Due for Combine

Berlin reports have it that an amalgamation of the German electrical interests, Siemens, A.E.G. and Telefunken Ges is possible. Klangfilm is also mentioned.

Such a merger would have a far-reaching effect on the production of sound pictures in Germany. No official statement is as yet forthcoming.

Academy Elects Wunder

The board of directors of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences has elected Clinton Wunder executive vice president. Wunder is official Academy spokesman over the country.

To Refund Part of Salary

Milwaukee stage hands will refund five per cent of their salaries to the theatres for 10 weeks during the summer, in accordance with a plan shortly to go into effect. Projectionists may follow suit.

Explaining Why Studio Research Is a Regular Job

What did Cleopatra say to Anthony, that moonlit night in the speakeasy?

Do gorillas comb their hair?

Why does a chicken cross the road?

How high is the moon?

Who first said it was made of green cheese?

No, those are not the ravings of a poet. They are simply samples of the teasers encountered daily by studio research departments in Hollywood.

The department must answer anything and everything. It must know the colors on a Heligoland postage stamp, and the dimensions of a grasshopper's left hind leg.

For example, the following requests were received in the first hour of a day last week at a local studio.

How are telegrams delivered in Port Chester, N. Y.? Afoot? On bicycle? By motorcycle?

What is the legend on New York auto license plates this season?

Name every hotel in Havana.

How is beer drawn in an English pub?

Correct replies are surprisingly vital to the success of the productions. Let the telegram be delivered at variance with Port Chester methods, or the license plates be incorrect, or the reel hotel be named with a real hotel name, or the ale be tapped differently than in London . . . and the studio would be swamped by thousands of critical letters, caustically directing attention to the errors.

Hughes Plans 4 in Work At His Multicolor Plant

Howard Hughes is reported to be working on a plan to swing production from the Metropolitan and United Artists studio to his Multicolor plant in Hollywood, in competition with Consolidated. He plans to make all his own pictures at the Multicolor plant, his schedule calling for four pictures in work constantly, that being the normal capacity of the plant.

Cecil Mason in New York

A conference on Columbia product has brought Cecil Mason, sales manager of Greater Australasian Films, franchise holders, to New York to meet with Joe Brandt, president, and Hannah Kass, New York foreign manager.

Adopt Summer Policy

Houston theatres have dropped vaudeville and presentations for the summer and have adopted lower prices. At the Publix Metropolitan, Loew's State and RKO Majestic, the new prices are 25, 35 and 50 cents.

Gallagher May Change, Is Report

Joe Gallagher of Columbia's home office executive advertising staff, and in charge of exploitation, will resign from that post, it is understood.

British Films Now Have Foothold For First Time, Declares Writer

Hy Scores One

The series of prosperity advertisements which Hy Daab, advertising and publicity director of RKO Radio, has prepared for the trade papers, has been acclaimed by newspapers and advertising agencies.

Hy has received a wire of congratulations from the Chicago Tribune, which has taken up the campaign with all its accounts. Agencies in New York are doing likewise.

Jersey Elects Samuelson; Scores Double Features

Sidney E. Samuelson was re-elected president of the New Jersey Allied States unit, at its annual convention in Atlantic City. With Samuelson were chosen Thornton Kelly and I. A. Hirschblond, vice president; Irving Dollinger, secretary; J. Unger, assistant secretary; Mike L. Warren, treasurer; and Louis Erofsky and W. C. Hart, assistant treasurers. Directors selected are I. A. Roth, Harry J. Hecht, Julius Charno, Charles Robinson, Louis Gold, G. Sacardi, Dave Snapper, L. A. Newberry, Sam Varbalow, Ralph Wilkins, W. C. Hunt, Simon Myers and A. Bannon.

The convention went on record as being opposed to double-featuring, agreeing to discontinue the practice if affiliated houses would do likewise. The meeting also voted its opposition to the tying in of features and shorts. The New Jersey exhibitors reaffirmed their allegiance to Allied States, the president of which, Abram F. Myers, was a principal speaker. Other Allied speakers were W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis; H. M. Richey, Detroit; and Joe Pastor, Chicago.

MPPDA Finds No Connection Between Boy Stunt and Film

The MPPDA, checking the press report that seven boys formed a vigilance committee in the Oceanside, N. Y., high school as a result of seeing the film "The Secret Six," received a letter from the school principal stating there was no connection.

The letter said in part, "I wish to state that the motion picture, 'The Secret Six' had nothing to do whatever with the facts of the case."

Producers Fair to the Independent, Says Shirley

Belief in some quarters that the independent owner is being oppressed by monopolistic interests in the industry is "not founded on fact," according to William Shirley, president and general manager of the Farash group in Schenectady and Troy, N. Y.

"It is my experience," he states, "that the leading producers are fair and always stand by the independent houses."

Points to British International's 25 Millions Capital and Facilities To Make Nine Pictures at a Time

British-made pictures have won a hold on the world markets for the first time in their history, and it took sound and the developments of the past two years to accomplish it, says a writer in the June issue of The Industrial World, published by the Carlyle Publishing Co., Ltd., of London.

The immediate effect of the Cinematograph Films Act, passed December 22, 1927, was to stabilize British International Pictures, Ltd., which "is today competing successfully even in the American markets," declares the writer Sidney Heaton.

Heaton recalls that the British film industry had gone through crisis after crisis for seven years after the World War and that America "had established virtually a world monopoly which was being challenged only partially, at any rate in Europe, by certain German productions." The Film Act at first was interpreted by many as merely a "means of bolstering up inefficiency and subsidizing an industry that had not shown the slightest signs of ability," but after its passage, the writer goes on, a first result was to give a firm footing to B I P, which started with $250,000 capital stock and now has a total capital of not less than $25,000,000 with its associate companies.

The writer pays credit to the "foresight and energy of Mr. John Maxwell, a Glasgow solicitor, who has shown a dogged determination to put the British film industry on a position of equality with its foreign rivals," and states that the company's overseas business has increased more than 100 per cent since the release of "Blackmail," called "its first notable talking picture." Since then, he says, the concern at Elstree has come to command "what is undoubtedly the largest and most powerful film-making organization outside America," and entirely self-contained and self-supporting unit, with technical equipment that "compares with any in the world," with the services of some of the leading directors from America as well as "the genius of such promising British directors as Alfred Hitchcock."

Distribution problems of British International are being solved, it is pointed out, by Wardour Films, Ltd., which under Arthur Dent's control "established connections with many of the leading Continental film-producing companies and with one or two American organizations."

Finally, Heaton says that whereas only one picture could be produced at a time less than two years ago, today simultaneous production of nine pictures can be undertaken, reflecting the rapid development.

Arrive from Coast

Paramount West Coast people en route to New York, include Al Shean, who wrote dialogue for "Monkey Business"; Phillips Holmes, actor; Sidney Buchman, scenarist and Henrietta Cohn, studio unit business manager.

Five Star Final

(First National)

Drama

"Five Star Final," the stage success written by Louis Weitzenkorn, has been brought to the screen as a smashing drama with plenty of punch, if the marked reaction of a Forum preview audience is any criterion. Time after time bursts of applause greeted the efforts of the players, all of whom were excellent.

Comments from the audience following the showing gave much credit to director Mervyn LeRoy for his intelligent handling of the story, which was written and adapted for the screen by Byron Morgan and Robert Lord. Their work also drew praise.

The story, which is a startling expose of yellow journalism, deals with the wrecking of a happy family through the mercenary attacks of a newspaper publisher whose demands are for sensational news, regardless of type. His ultimate aim is more circulation. Oscar Apfel is the publisher and Edward G. Robinson his managing editor. H. B. Warner, Frances Starr, Marion Marsh and Anthony Bushell comprise the ones most affected by the attack of Apfel's newspaper. This attack, which causes, eventually, the suicide of Warner and Miss Starr, comes through the printing of a serial bringing to light a murder committed by Miss Starr twenty years before. The daughter, Marion Marsh, is unaware of her mother's real identity until the story breaks, and her marriage to Bushell is almost stopped.

The cast was so well balanced no one person stood out. Robinson, H. B. Warner, Miss Marsh, Bushell and Miss Starr were especially well received by the audience. Others whose work was most impressive were George E. Stone, Ona Munson, Oscar Apfel, Purnell Pratt, Robert Elliott, Evelyn Hall, Boris Karloff, Aline MacMahon, David Torrence, Gladys Lloyd and Harold Waldridge.

The audience reaction was such that the picture is likely to be remembered for some time to come, for the patrons pronounced it to be crackerjack screen entertainment.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros.-First National. Original play by Byron Morgan. Adaptation by Robert Lord. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Art director, Jack Okey. Film editor, Frank Ware. Photographed by Sol Polito.

Full of Notions

(Radio)

Comedy

Audiences may chuckle, audiences may titter, but when they howl with laughter, as they did at the Fairfax theatre, Oakland, it's quite likely that the picture being shown is funny.

As a matter of fact, Wheeler and Woolsey never have been funnier than they are in "Full of Notions," everybody there agreed.

A Bright Film Spot!

William A. Johnston, writing editorially in The Hollywood Herald, on First National's "Five Star Final" declares, "The light of it should illumine the whole production horizon. It proves the inherent power of the talking picture; it shows what can be done, and may be done. The recipe isn't mysterious. A good story was picked, a story of down-to-earth emotions, of action, of realism, because it was created by a man who knew his people and their lives, hopes and environment . . . But, after all, it is the story that predicates everything; and it is the story that inspires top-notch effort all the way along the production line."

As two stranded vaudeville "hams," they arrive by freight in a little mid-western town. While riding on a street car, on a two-day-old transfer, they sympathize with a sweet-faced old woman (Lucy Beaumont) and convince her that they are just the boys to save her drug store, about to be taken for a debt she owes the villainous slicker, Jason Robards.

The situations from that point on brought laugh after laugh from an audience that beamed as it left the theatre.

Robert Woolsey with his ever-present cigar and gags brought so many hearty guffaws that at times the audience drowned out the following lines. Bert Wheeler gave him a close race for honors, however, in his role as the feeder of the team.

A round of applause greeted Dorothy Lee's appearance on the screen and her performance in this brought an ovation for her at the close of the story.

Jason Robards was as convincing as the villain as he once was as a hero. His role in this is much like that he played in a previous film, that of the greedy trader using sympathy as a mask for his "evil intentions."

To Josephine Whittell, the former stage star, went one of the funniest scenes in the picture. She and Woolsey brought down the house with their scene at the book counter.

"Full of Notions" is Douglas MacLean's first solo original.

Two good song numbers as interludes were enjoyed by the audience.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. Associate producer, Douglas MacLean. Story by Douglas MacLean. Screen play and dialogue by Ralpy Spence. Directed by William Seiter. Photographed by Jack McKenzie. Art director, Max Ree. Sound recording by P. J. Faulkner, Jr.

The Skin Game

(British International)

Drama

This latest offering from the Elstree studios, London, did not seem to impress the audience viewing it at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York.

Patrons became restless during the showing, due undoubtedly to the length of the picture and the involved situations which one finds in John Galsworthy stories.

Because of these involved situations it was difficult at times to follow the theme of the picture.

Alfred Hitchcock, who adapted and directed the feature, had a difficult task on his hands, and as a consequence this is not his best picture by any means.

"The Skin Game" is the story of a family feud between the Hillcrists and the Hornblowers, a hatred which was aroused when Hornblower, the industrialist, built his pottery works near the old manorial home of the Hillcrists, which had been owned and occupied by the family for centuries.

As Hornblower seeks a beautiful plot of ground overlooking the Hillcrist home, the situation becomes tense. Not even the Hillcrist daughter and the Hornblower son, who have been lovers since childhood, are able to pacify their parents.

The climax is reached when the Hillcrists learn a piece of scandal involving the wife of the older son of the Hornblowers. To keep the Hillcrists quiet, old Hornblower sells them at a low figure the beautiful plot of ground. Having accomplished his purpose, despite the methods used, old Hillcrist becomes distressed.

"When we went into this fight," he said, "we had clean hands. Are they clean now? What is gentility worth if it cannot stand fire?"

So ends the story.

Produced by British International Pictures. Distributed by Wardour. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Photographed by J. J. Cox. Running time, 85 minutes.

The Lure of Hollywood

Comedy

A comedy number picturing the trials and tribulations which extras go through in attempting to achieve something or other in Hollywood. Just as two girls are about to return home, unsuccessful, they are hired. But they are fired when their boy friend becomes jealous of the attentions being paid them by the leading man, and proceeds to hurl innumerable pies at him. Bryant Washburn plays the receiver of the pies as leading man. William Goodrich directed.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Encouragement

☆ DADDY LONG LEGS—Fox

AFTER the welter of "gun operas" and pictures that reek with sex, "Daddy Long Legs" comes to the screen like a breath of sweetness from a spring meadow. Janet Gaynor, as the spunky orphanage kid, Judy Abbott, and Warner Baxter, as the confirmed bachelor who adopts and then falls in love with her, make a remarkable team. Both are charming. This is the wistful, sweet Janet you have always known. Here is a rôle that seems just suited to her.

There are no sex problems, no cocktail drinking—just a great, fine, refreshing dash of sentiment and human interest. You'll love the scenes of Janet and the rest of the little orphans.

Una Merkel and a new lad named John Arledge, with Southern accents that would make Stepin Fetchit sound like a Yankee, get plenty of laughs.

Encourage producers to make such pictures by patronizing this one. You will get your money's worth—and plenty more. The children will love it, too.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The "Current Week" was hit by low grosses generally, with 20 new lows being established. No theatre registered a new high for the week. In some spots receipts showed a decrease of as much as 13 per cent, in comparison with "Previous Week," when business had shown an upward trend. The extreme heat during the "Current Week" undoubtedly was responsible for the general business condition.

Dear Eddie,

In signing with contracts with you for the 1931-32 Universal product for the Byrd, Bluebird and Brookland theatebs Richmond and the Bluebird theater Petersburg I feel after careful consideration this years Universal product leads the field as to story material and box office attractions.

I believe that this contracts is the best insurance that it is possible for one to buy to insure profits.

Yours very truly,

W. J. Coulter Pres

P.S. I might also add that your last seasons product showed a bigger profit than any other companys product that we played.

Dear Mr. Ball :

The general quality of Universal Pictures has been high, and although business conditions have been poor, we have done better than average on Universal over other product.

I am looking forward to our showing very shortly of "Seed", and expect to to do some real business on it, will also watch with interest for your new seasons product.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. McGinley:

We are enclosing herewith superseding contract on SEED at a fifty percent increase in guarantee at the price for which this subject was originally contracted. And there is no doubt in our mind that after playing SEED, we will forward you a healthy percentage overage.

Considering number of picture released, and price paid, our net profit off Universal last season was greater than that of any of the six companies whose product we play. And we have yet to equal with anything else this year the record set by ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT. And frankly your new product looks to be as strong or stronger than last season.

Very truly,

ike:

an exhibitor's relations with a company are as ant as mine have been with Universal, and when a ucer delivers such consistent product that each ure more than holds its own at the box-office, then, ainly that producing company deserves every bit of peration possible.

ecame a Universal client last year in one of my houses ter laying off Universal product for a few seasons. he results satisfied me so much that I bought Universal olid for the Grand, Jackson and Ridge Avenue theatres for next season.

No exhibitor need ask for more.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Ride with a Winner!!

Trem Carr Shows Good Judgment In 'Ships of Hate'

Preview of "Ships of Hate," a Trem Carr production.

Directed by J. P. McCarthy.

Written by Wellyn Totman.

Assistant Director, Paul Malvern.

Technical Director, E. R. Hickson.

Cameraman, Archie Stout.

Sound Engineers, Balsley & Phillips (Western Electric Recording).

Film Editor, J. S. Harrington.

Cast: Lloyd Hughes, Dorothy Sebastian, Charles Middleton, Lloyd Whitlock, Constantine Romanoff, Ted Adams, Gordon DeMain, Rosemary Grimes.

In order to cater to the public taste it is not necessary these days always to put on a spectacular show nor to pander to the morbid with gangster or social triangle plots. Trem Carr has shown good judgment in permitting Wellyn Totman to allow his fancies to range over other ideas than pure westerns with the he-man appeal. In "Ships of Hate," Totman has shown a versatility of style. His dialogue is handled with skill.

The plot revolves about the captain of a ship who loves every woman he sees and has a penchant for collecting women's shoes. Captain Lash, paralyzed from the waist down, bullies his crew by the expert use of a long cattle whip. He appears always in a wheel chair and handles it was a dexterity that is astounding.

Charles Middleton, who took the part of Captain Lash, was superb—never overacting, suave, cruel, plotting—a smuggler of pearls, a hunter of women, a manhandler, yet with all this he earned the sympathy of the audience.

Lloyd Hughes as the hero and Dorothy Sebastian as the girl were both excellent as was Ted Adams, who portrayed a debauched professor.. Lloyd Whitlock as the husband had a very small part. Gordon DeMain, as the blustering mate, did creditable work.

Constantine Romanoff, who headed the mutiny and tried to gain possession of the girl, deserves a lot of praise.

We must also mention Rosemary Grimes who did a clever dance in the Shanghai dive.

The photography was creditably handled by Archie Stout.

J. P McCarthy, the director, put all his enthusiasm into the picture, which should be a huge success.—S. G. Lindenstein.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

I FINALLY HAD THE PLEASURE OF meeting your Mr. J. C. Jenkins.

Last time he was in La Crosse I was out of the city. This time "I saw, he came, I conquered." That is, I conquered in a game of golf, and my, what a difference a little golf game makes! For, I see that now he is sore at the whole state of Wisconsin. Kicking about Wisconsin weather which was very fine while he was here at La Crosse.

J. C. had been boasting about his marvelous putting. But when he failed, he alibied by stating that watching Bobby Jones putting in his golf series threw him off. And he said that if a lady ever beat him, he would throw his clubs away. Wonder if he has? I wouldn't like to see him do that as I think he gets a lot of pleasure out of golf. He was an inspiration to me. I not only beat him, but I beat my husband for the first time in my life. I would like to see his friends start a fund to buy him a new set of clubs. Let's make it this way: those who beat him give 2 cents a point; those whom he beats give 1 cent a point. By this record, I owe 16 cents and my husband 6 cents. Who will hold the stakes until we get enough to buy the set?

So J. C., don't blame the weather or Bobby Jones; remember there is a lot of good fish in the old Mississippi at La Crosse, to say nothing about our marvelous scenery. Besides, you are always writing about the April showers. Why kick when you get one?—MRS. WM. FREISE, La Crosse Theatres Co., La Crosse, Wis.

Great Aid to Schools

I AM VERY MUCH INTERESTED IN the project which you are launching in the "School and Screen." I believe this should prove an excellent contribution to the encouragement of better pictures, as well as to getting the greatest possible educational good from the good pictures which are now being produced.

The reason why so many people leave the theatre with very little benefit from the picture which they saw, is that they are not prepared to look for the possible benefits which may be contained in the picture.

Merely showing a picture in the classroom has very little value. The pupils must be prepared for the picture, and the showing of the picture should be supplemented with questions and discussion—to give real educational value.

We have found this to be true in our own visual education program in the Quincy public schools.—ABRAHAM KRASKER, National Academy of Visual Instruction, Massachusetts Branch, Boston, Mass.

Denies Joinville Closing

Paramount never has considered closing the production plant at Joinville, France. and "will continue the ambitious production plans announced recently," said Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, in a cable to David Souhami, managing director of the company's French organization.

Film Division Moves

The new address of the Motion Picture Division of the New York State Education Department, of which Dr. James Wingate is director, is 80 Centre street, New York City. The former address was 220 West 42d street.

Theatre Owner Dies

James Surrell, owner and manager of the Lucier, Cleveland, died last week after being ill only three days with pneumonia.

It is impossible to conduct my end of the motion picture business without Motion Picture Herald.

Being a reader for more than 16 years, I have become attached to the Quigley Publications, and consider its articles and help as one of my best tools.

When a better information department is found, be sure to let me know. The task is yours.—C. H. FADEM, Cleveland, Ohio.

Joe Brandt Honored

President Joe Brandt of Columbia was selected to speak for the motion picture industry in a symposium of leaders on business recovery, by the University of Illinois.

Freuler Sees an Early Return of Normal Business

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4 Film Company, has predicted a definite upturn in all industries in the fall, particularly by reason of a constructive government stand on war debts, and the general feeling of optimism which will be engendered from that.

"All leaders of industry have recognized that the great American public is suffering from a bad case of 'nerves' and have realized that as soon as a sedative were administered this buyers' deadlock would be at an end," said Freuler.

The motion picture industry should be the first to benefit by an early return to normal, in his opinion. "With a better stock market for amusements," he said, "more money will trickle back into the coffers of producers, more pictures will be made and more money spent, which patently will result in good to all."

Union Not with Circuit

The Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union, Inc., is in no way connected with the Lee Ochs circuit and none of its members are employed in houses operated by the Ochs circuit, as was previously erroneously reported.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 83

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 88—(A) Explain fully just what various things sound reproduction systems do. (B) Generally speaking, how many times is the impulse from the photo-electric cell amplified before it reaches the horn receiver? (C) What is the essential requirement of sound sprocket action and what is essential in the matter of its care? (D) Exactly what would be the effect of the adhesion of anything to the face of the sound sprocket, no matter how slight its thickness might be?

The question was: (A) Exactly what amount of space on the film does the slit beam illuminate? (B) Is the light from the slit of unvarying brilliancy when it reaches the film sound band? (C) What happens to the beam of light after it has passed through the sound track. (Apology. That was wrongly worded. It should have read, what happens to the beam of light as it passes through the sound track?—Ed.) Is it still of unvarying brilliancy? (D) What will the light beam on the photo-electric side of the film be a reproduction of, in so far as concerns its brilliancy?

The list of correct answers grows gradually longer, as also does the list in its entirety.

Those answering correctly were: Herman B. Billings, Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, George Thompson, Billy Rankin, George H. Artley, R. D. O'Brien, Sam C. Small, Tom Hobart, E. L. Banning, D. H. Macy, H. G. Shelton, Thos. Dunbar, Robert D. Starr, H. Howard, Chas. G. Davidson, Samuel G. Bird, Ben I. Teeters, Toot Lavenburg, Dick T. Bann, R. L. Rallins, Tom Davis, L. V. Jarvis, Andrew Schaefer, T. Ackton, D. L. Mitchel, Bill Doe, F. C. Sanders, A. T. Rogers, Richard Lewiston, Donald Lomax, F. K. Post, Henry Boylson, W. Wilkens, Dan Tomlinson, Tom Alexander, G. L. Doe, Frank E. Brunnage, Andy Birdsal, K. T. Shane, F. D. Richards, David Overmyer, G. M. Myers, Lewis Lewis, Robert Fortell, M. C. Cummings, J. D. Daniel, Peter Oak, D. L. Michel, Joe Simmons, James McGuire, G. T. True, Abe Rassenberg, R. Peters, Benjamin Shawnison, Frank T. Marion, Robert Alexander, P. H. Haynes, D. L. Haynes, L. Anderson, Sam L. Brandt, Roger Wynne, Dan Hughes, B. L. Adams, Thomas J. Ryan and John Steele.

The following sent especially excellent answers: Evans and Rau, George H. Artley, Herman B. Billings, Lester Borst, Dick T. Bann, George Thompson, G. L. Doe and Frank T. Marion.

I believe in this instance the answer of G. L. Doe is best suited to publication. He says:

"The slit illuminates a space on the sound band .080 of an inch wide by .001 of an inch high. This is presumed to be sufficiently thin to bring out the various modulations of sound and to avoid all possible confusion caused by illuminating two sound modulations at once, though of course since these modulations more or less run or shade together, this cannot be entirely avoided.

"(B) The light is of unvarying brilliancy when it reaches the plane of the sound band, though of course if the exciting lamp filament be either sagged or out of proper adjustment there would be variation of brilliancy along the length of the beam. However, regardless of that, the brilliancy at any one point in its length would be unvarying. Perhaps, though, I have not quite made my meaning clear. In all this I refer to the light, which actually strikes and passes through the slit.

"(C) When the light beam passes through the film track it is stopped, or partly stopped, according to the density of the sound band at various points, or in the variable area track, in accordance with the variations in transparent area. This causes the beam to have variations in brilliancy after it has passed through the sound track. It is no longer of unvarying brilliancy, though of course owing to the tremendous speed of light it perhaps cannot be said that any variation in brilliancy actually exists in the beam between the film and the P E cell. The action is too rapid for that, but the brilliancy is constantly varying, nevertheless. That is what enables us to reproduce sound.

"(D) The brilliancy of the light of the beam after it has passed through the sound band represents the sound values contained in the sound track through which the light has passed."

There, gentlemen, I believe you will all agree that is an excellent answer. My compliments to Brother Doe, of Chicago.

That's Something!

A letter to ERPI from Colonel H. E. Cloke, commanding officer of the 16th Coast Artillery in Honolulu, at Fort Ruger, tells of a recent target practice and its effect on Western Electric sound apparatus. "During the practice," states the letter, "the windows of the film booth were unintentionally left closed and the concussion broke two window panes. The concussion at the same time caused damage to some of the other buildings. No extra precautions were taken to protect the sound apparatus." At the film showing that night, concludes the colonel, the sound apparatus functioned as well as usual.

ARC TROUBLE

Gray Phillips, Crescent theatre, Grand Haven, Mich., presents an interesting problem. He has Motiograph, DeLuxe model H. projectors, equipped with Motiograph reflector lamps, using 25 amperes. He loses the arc about once every four hours and, so he says, for no good reason at all. Everything runs along O. K. and then suddenly the arc goes on strike, usually about 10 minutes after starting a reel.

He says: "I have checked everything I know of to check, including line voltage, which varies from about 108 to 115. Resistances are O. K. No loose connections and proper amount in circuit. Arc gaps are from three-sixteenths to one-fourth inch long. The feeding motor runs free and is every way in good condition. No loose connections. Carbon trims crater vertical and horizontal (don't know what you mean by that: Ed.). Carbon jaws are clean and the connections are tight. Generator voltage 80, almost constant. Carbons dry and free from cracks and defects. Both lamps behave the same way. Sometimes they will run along for two or three days, then I will lose the arc at frequent intervals. Can you help me?"

I am afraid I cannot, though it seems to me, if all you have said is correct, the trouble may be loose cores in the carbons. There have been some complaints of carbon core trouble, which doesn't appear in all bundles of carbons. Suppose you see if the trouble shows up immediately or soon after you have opened up a new bundle of carbons. If there is very little voltage variation and everything else is all right, it seems to me it must be in the carbons. Be sure, though, that the feeding motor maintains an even arc gap at all times.

These are the only two things I can think of. If any one else has had the same experience let him address Mr. Phillips.

RADIO PICKUP BY HORNS

Gordon V. Weeks, Victoria theatre, Brooksville, Fla., says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: May I express my appreciation of our Projection department in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD? I have derived a great deal of pleasure from it, not to mention the help it has given me. I am projectionist in the Victory theatre here and the proud possessor of a complete set of your books which, Mr. Richardson, money could not induce me to part with. They are an invaluable aid in my work.

"I noticed in a recent issue you gave an instance, out in California, I believe it was, where the horns picked up a radio program. I have not had this happen to me, but have heard of instances where furnaces, kettles, steam radiators, etc., have picked up radio broadcasting. I have read in Radio News that an imperfect metallic contact of high resistance may have unilateral conductive properties, hence may act as a detector. In addition to this, in steel building construction a multiplicity of resonant circuits must occur, as well as in pipe systems, wiring systems, etc.

" 'The flow of a slight, perhaps not measurable, R. F. current in any of these circuits would escape observation under ordinary conditions, but it is sufficient to prevent the use of certain and costly antenna systems in large cities for broadcast transmitter of certain wavelengths. Not only that, but when a group of buildings absorbs, partly or entirely, the signals broadcast in their direction from a nearby powerful transmitter, it is evident that in their metal parts there must be certain minute "eddy currents" capable of being detected. A systematic survey of a modern steel building with a delicate wave meter might produce some interesting results. So also when we find that power lines, steel rails, etc., are absorbing a large part of a station's power in one direction, we know that they are carrying the signals. We find also that metallic objects not intended for the purpose may serve as audio frequency reproducers.'

"I trust this information will be of some use. If I were called upon for an opinion of the case you mention, I would say it is one or more of the conditions mentioned in the foregoing paragraph. Here in the Victory theatre we have Powers projectors, equipped with Peerless automatic low intensity lamps, supplied current by a Hertner Transverter. The sound is DeForest Phonofilm. The projection distance is 85 feet and I get a clear, steady picture. The sound is excellent. Though my rating as compared with city men, would probably be 'ham,' I am nevertheless proud of the picture I am able to give the public."

I do not feel competent to pass judgment upon the application of the things set forth in the quotation by the editor of Radio News to cases such as the one in California, still I believe it is quite true that there is a connection, and a very direct one, too. However, the principal point is, as I see it, that since these conditions do obtain, and may obtain in any steel building, the best safeguard is the thorough and complete insulation of all theatre sound systems. Many thanks, friend Weeks, for your excellent letter. I might remark that, in so far as "hams" are concerned, there are quite a number of them in the cities. It is well that you are proud of the results you put forth. That means that you take a real interest in your work, and the man who takes an interest in his work, usually produces pretty good results. I might add to that by saying that the small town projectionist's job is in many ways more difficult than that of the city man, in that he doesn't have help available when trouble comes. He usually has to meet it by himself. I am indeed glad to know that through the medium of the Bluebook and MOTION PICTURE HERALD I have been able to help you.

Squally Pet Names

It all started when Erich von Stroheim showed up on the RKO-Radio Pictures lot in Hollywood to play a role in "The Sphinx Has Spoken." The news announcement referred to him as "the stormy petrel of the films."

Somebody liked the idea and started naming the feminine players after windy weather, just as a matter of equal suffrage.

Here's the latest list of squally pet names:

Lily Damita — RKO's "tempting tempest."

Dolores Del Rio — RKO's "torrid tornado."

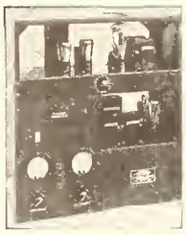
Rita La Roy—RKO's "Hollywood hurricane."

Roberta Gale—RKO's "baby cyclone."

Arline Judge—RKO's "Broadway breeze."

Claudia Dell—RKO's "winsome whirlwind."

Noel Francis — RKO's "bubbling beauty."



Lita Chevret—RKO's "burst of flame."

Rochelle Hudson—RKO's "Oklahoma prairie fire."

It is rumored that the official christening will take place at the next earthquake.

YOUR PUBLIC AND YOU

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

IT IS the aim of this department to serve the theatreman definitely, constructively and with practical common sense. It is the purpose of MOTION PICTURE HERALD to have these columns developed into a working Public Relations Department through which exhibitors may make use of a common medium of expression and exchange. Your public represents to you, your business. To MOTION PICTURE HERALD, our business represents your interests and you!

For instance, what pictures have you found to be particularly acceptable in your community? You are a voice of the industry. Have you made your voice heard? Within the past month we have seen tentative schedules of the year's coming releases announced by each large producing company. But these schedules are tentative. They are subject to many major and minor changes. What are some of the pictures you would like to see the Hollywood and East Coast Wizards make in the next twelve months? There are, for instance, the educational, juvenile subjects, like "Skippy"; fine, human interest stories, like "The Millionaire"; historical epics and glorified Westerns, like "Cimarron"; problem pictures of the type of "Seed." There are the gangster heroics, the tarnished and illicit ladies, the free loves, and souls and sexes—which have been your choice for good entertainment?

Register—And Vote!

There is no voice so stridently impressive to the producer as the voice of the exhibitor. You are his public. Without you, his schedule of announced releases would be as flat as the cold pancake. The producer needs you. Are you ordering what you want? It is all very well to criticize, and be dissatisfied with the product the salesman offers you. Do something more than that. Now is the time to indicate your preferences in the types of pictures.

This department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD is in a position to forward directly to those agencies responsible for the making of the coming year's product the reactions, the wishes and the complaints of the theatreman. Therefore, it is to your interest as well as to ours, to have you register your viewpoint. Let us know what you think about this whole subject, and, in return, we will tell you exactly what we have done about it. If you prefer not to have your names used your wishes will, of course, be respected. But let us have an open forum through these columns—an unhampered and honest discussion.

Have You a Speech To Make?

If you have a speech to make, this department has excellent material for your use. What do you know definitely about the details of censorship in your state? How much do you know about the Brookhart bill and its predecessors in Washington? These are questions that vitally affect your business, and while you have been submerged with the details of theatre management, the problems of summer ventilation, fire prevention, lower wages or advertising, the importance of state legislation may have escaped you. In the meanwhile, some of the best legal minds in the country have been studying and thoughtfully analyzing the ramifications of the law that may hamper or help your business. This department offers you detailed, free information. A postal card addressed to MOTION PICTURE HERALD will bring it to you.

Motion Picture Study Program

From the office of Mrs. Thomas G. Winters, assistant director of the public relations department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors in Hollywood, a valuable little pamphlet has come to us. It is titled "A Motion Picture Study Program," and has, as its foreword, ". . . with its audience of many millions a week, the motion picture has become one of the outstanding phenomena of today, and therefore worth a bit of study and understanding. It has its very human sides—the directors, stars, audiences. Some of the topics concern themselves with history and information. Others may well be discussed and understood by thoughtful persons."

The attractive four-page booklet has for its topics: Early History; The Business of Picture Making; the Artistic Phases of Picture Making; Outstanding Personalities of the Industry; The Problem of Moral Standards: 1. Public Opinion—the Box Office; 2. Legal Control; 3. The Studios' Movement Toward Self Control. Educational Importance; American and Foreign Made Pictures; and a complete and valuable bibliography for study programs, not only for women's clubs and organizations interested in the study of the motion picture, but for those actively engaged in the exhibiting of the screen's offerings. This pamphlet is available for those of you who may care to have it in your files, if you will write us for it. It is worth your consideration.

An Endorsed List

Because of the demand for the endorsed lists that this department has offered you from time to time, MOTION PICTURE HERALD will publish and distribute each month hereafter, a composite list of endorsed pictures taken from the most reliable reviews and from the personal observation and judgment of the editor. The list will be, as far as it is possible to make it so, an authentic guide to exhibitors and public groups everywhere to the month's decent and fine pictures. It will be timely, complete, and reliable. Exhibitors and clubs may have the service by addressing a request to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Radio Reprints

This department also writes and distributes each week a radio service on news and notes of the studios and the reviews of the week's best pictures which is broadcast by dozens of clubs and organizations all over the country, and used for club reference and discussion by hundreds more. Have you a radio contact in your territory? The broadcast is a free service. Many stations accept it gladly. Your local groups may be able to make splendid use of it. Radio is the most valuable propaganda medium in the world. Make use of it for better pictures, and for better business. If you cannot plan for local broadcasts, the radio reprints are informative and up-to-the-minute. This is an additional helpful service which the HERALD is glad to offer to you.

D. D. Bloom to Canada

Selection of Dewey D. Bloom to take charge of sales and exploitation of British pictures being distributed in Canada by Regal Films, Ltd., is in line with the plans of Regal to increase its number of British releases.

Bloom has had extensive experience in the United States in the selling and exploiting of motion pictures. Bloom, whose home is in Hamilton, Ontario, has also spent some time with studio executives in England.

Bloom came to the States from eight years of service in Canadian Westinghouse Company, and joined the publicity department of the Selwyns, stage producers. Next he joined Fox in charge of one of its Broadway houses, then to publicity for Associated Pictures, to Pathe in charge of Long Island studio publicity, and next to his own offices. After a tour of England and Continental Europe, where he was manager for Gertrude Lawrence, he organized publicity departments for the Kit-Kat chain of restaurants. Next he joined Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and it was while he was road-showing "Trader Horn" that H. L. Nathanson, general manager of Regal, came in touch with him.

Kentucky Upholds Chain Store Tax

Chain store legislation, with which the subject of circuit theatres on occasions has been linked in addresses before exhibitor organizations by foes of the chain stores, saw several important developments in the past week.

The Kentucky court of appeals upheld the tax on gross retail sales, the measure affecting all retail stores but principally chain and large department stores.

At Columbus, Ohio, the bill to tax chain stores was killed in committee in the lower house. In Illinois the senate amended the measure before that body to license only chain stores retailing groceries, meats, drugs or tobacco, effective July 1, 1932, to set the license levy at $25 each for the first three stores and $200 for each additional store.

Gets $250,000 For Film

H. L. Gumbia has sold "The Mad Parade," which he recently produced independently, to Paramount for $250,000. It will be released shortly.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Rochester, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

Last week we wanted to tell you about Wisconsin Rapids and our two good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Eckert, who operate the two theatres there, but that George Schutz in the HERALD office pulled the bell cord on us before we got to it. George is so tight with his space that it makes it rather awkward some times. Somebody ought to look after George.

Wisconsin Rapids is two towns. Half of it is built on one side of the Wisconsin river and the other half on the other side. After they had built both towns they found out that they had to build a bridge so they could get from one town to the other. It's funny they hadn't thought of that before, but you know these Badgers are different from the Nebraskans. Out at Omaha the Nebraskans refused to build Omaha until Council Bluffs built a bridge across the Missouri river, and that's where Council Bluffs pulled a bonehead, for just look at Omaha now.

Building two towns out of Wisconsin Rapids made just a fair sized town out of each one of them, and this made it necessary for the Eckert family to build a theatre in each town. Mr. Eckert operates the one on the west side and Mrs. Eckert the one on the east side, and this made it necessary for us to walk clear across that bridge to see them.

After the show they invited us to their apartment where we visited until "the clock in the steeple struck one." We asked Mr. Eckert if the fishing was good in the river and he said, "Well it isn't any good now because the paper mill runs all their carbide sulphate (or something like that) in the river and that has killed all the fish." (NOTE —The Izaak Walton League ought to put a stop to that.) Then he went on and said, "It may seem strange to you, but when we first came here, people couldn't raise chickens along the banks of the river because the muskies and northern pike would come out of night and catch them, that's a fact and you can believe it or not."

We replied, "Thanks for giving us the option, and since it is not considered ethical to question a fish story, we are going to believe every word of it."

This seemed to make him feel good, so he went out in the kitchen and came back with a tray and a decanter and three glasses and we said, "Hold, brother, let's not forget that Biblical injunction, 'Look not upon the wine when it is red, for it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.'" We didn't, we shut both eyes, and then we remembered that other Scriptural passage, "Take a little wine for thy stomach's sake," and right away we felt that there was something wrong with our stomach. Well, anyhow, we had a good visit, and we are invited back to visit them again, which is an indication that they are not familiar with our past record.

Delightful Gentlemen

At Marshfield we met Mr. Adler, who operates three or four theatres in that part of the state. This was our first meeting with him and we found him a delightful gentleman and a man who impresses us as having a thorough knowledge of the business. We hope to meet him again.

At Stanley we found our good friend, Tom Foster, still operating the theatre but for another fellow. When we were there two years ago Tom had just installed sound and the price he had to pay for sound service was enough to wreck the constitution of a freight engine and it had just about put Tom on his back, so he sold the theatre and is now managing it for the owner. We have found a lot of other theatremen in just that same fix, except that some of 'em collapsed altogether.

Chippewa Falls looked to us like a mighty good town, but both theatres there were having a hard time to make expenses. N. A. Anderson had recently taken over the Rivoli and from the list of pictures he has coming it would seem that conditions ought to change. Both of the theatres there are giving the town the best of service, as good as they could get in Chicago, Ill., or Neligh, Neb., and that ought to be good enough.

Wisconsin and Minnesota ought to have a law prohibiting people from carrying fish poles on their cars and "Minnows For Sale" signs along the highways around these lakes. It's a constant source of annoyance to us people who have to work for a living and it ought to be stopped, 'tain't fair.

Real Tears or Mushy-Mush?

Whenever we find a man, woman or kid who doesn't like boys and dogs, we not only feel sorry for 'em, but we look upon 'em with considerable suspicion. The picture that comes the nearest filling the bill along the lines of boys and dogs is "SKIPPY." This picture has a few tears, but that won't hurt a bit. Tears are a lot better than this mushy-mush they have been feeding the public. The fact is if they could wring a few more tears from the audience and a few less from the exhibitors, the business might take an upward turn.

Our experience with hundreds of audiences all over the country may not have qualified us to take the public pulse correctly, but our judgment is that these meaningless pictures with meaningless titles mean nothing at the box offices. The public is being fed up on too many pictures with no story, no intelligent direction, just a lot of scenes thrown together with people making love in a garden, a cabaret dance, a song by some girl who can't sing, a drunken brawl or two, a little tango with not much on but tango and talcum, a horse race and a few more scenes with no connection whatever and there you are. That's what they call a picture, and that's what the public is invited to see, but the public is sending "regrets."

"SKIPPY" is different. "COMMON CLAY" is different. "CIMARRON" is different. "TRADER HORN" is different. "CONNECTICUT YANKEE" is different, and thank the good Lord there are a few more that are different, or this business would go on the rocks. We aim to tell it just as we find it, and that's it.

Pick up any city daily and turn to the theatre section and you will note that many of the theatre are putting on double feature programs, and quite often a midnight preview in addition, all for the regular admission price, and if you can prove to us that that isn't crazy business, then there is no sense in putting money into lunatic asylums.

When you order a piece of huckleberry pie you don't expect the waitress to bring you three slices, and yet there would be just as much sense to it. Too much pictures is like too much pie, they'll both sour on your stomach. We had ONE picture sour on ours the other night when we saw "ILLICIT." Producers seem to think that quantity is what counts, but QUALITY is what will pull this business out of the mudhole. Let's try a little quality for a change.

Gophers Next

We kinda hated to leave those Badgers over in Wisconsin. They are not a bad bunch of animals if you rub the fur the right way and treat 'em right. And it's no trouble to treat 'em, for you can find it in filling stations or about anywhere else, and if there is anything a Badger likes it is to get foam on his nose. Yes sir, they are a nice bunch over there and we like 'em.

We don't know yet how these Gophers are going to act over here. You take part Gopher and part Yon Yonson and you don't know what you are going to get. But if these Minnesota boys are as fine as we have always found them to be there will be no use for Nebraska to try to coax us to come back as long as the bass are biting and Tillie and Lena serve as good coffee as they do. And besides that, it will soon be huckleberry time up here.

All right, George, we are not going to give you a chance to kick about taking too much space this time.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man.

Hix, "Strange As It Seems" Creator, Starts World Tour

John Hix, cartoonist, and originator of the film reels, "Strange As It Seems," released by Universal, has started on a world tour, to verify old and gather new material.

He will remain one month in Los Angeles, and continue from there westward. His film catalogue of facts and verifications, which he will carry with him, has been insured for $125,000.

Educational Building a New Sound Stage at Coast Plant

A new sound stage now under construction at the Educational Coast plant, will add 10,000 square feet to the studios' working space.

Mack Sennett has signed Irene Thompson for a new comedy. Al Christie is starting production on a new Educational comedy, following his return from the East.

Operator Slaying Stirs Leaders of Chicago Inquiry

Murder this week became an added element of the investigation being conducted by Chicago authorities into the affairs of the projectionists' union there. The state's attorney's office is sifting charges that the organization is a hot bed of racketeering, and shortly after Jacob Kaufman, union projectionist, had been notified that he was expected to testify, he was murdered in a West Side garage. Assistant State's Attorney Lounsbury, in charge of the probe, declared it is his belief that death came to Kaufman as a direct result of a fear that his testimony would involve persons associated with the union.

Besides Tom Maloy, business agent of the local, his brother, Joseph, who is head of the city motion picture bureau, has been added to those wanted for questioning in the probe. Others are Danny Stanton, Capone gangster; Ralph O'Hara, Maloy's chief aide; Eddie Donovan, Jack Quinn and Frank Clifford, the latter assistant business agent.

Adverse Bills Wiped Out As Illinois Assembly Ends

The industry in Illinois escaped unscathed from the state legislative session that adjourned Saturday. Not one adverse measure was enacted. The two-projectionists bill died in senate committee after passage by the house. The state censorship measure was killed in committee after reaching second reading in both houses, and a bill restricting child attendance went the same route.

The general assembly does not convene again for two years, and action on film bills at any special sessions on tax relief is doubted. Jack Miller, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, led the way in fighting the negative measures.

Chicago Censor Tables Plan For Blanket Picture Permit

The Chicago censor board has tabled a proposal asking for the issue for blanket permits instead of individual permits for individual prints. Members concurred in the opinion that the proposal at present would reduce revenues too far.

MUSICIAN EMPLOYMENT ON UPGRADE

Houses on Straight Sound Fewer This Year

American Federation Votes to Continue Its Advertising Campaign To Place Members

By ED DAWSON

Conditions are on the upgrade for musicians.

Fred W. Birnbach, assistant to Joseph Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, who has returned from the national convention at Chattanooga, is authority for the statement that theatre employment of musicians (which means motion picture houses), increased 50 per cent during the first four months of 1931.

Optimistic, too, is Birnbach's statement that there has been a decrease in the number of houses turning to straight sound pictures this summer.

RKO, he said, is putting fewer houses into exclusive sound entertainment than in 1930.

"That," he said, "is a highlight of the whole situation. It shows that our plan of action during the past year was justified."

In that statement, Birnbach referred to the advertising campaign of the Federation, which, by a vote of the convention, will be continued.

To conduct this campaign musicians in theatres pay a defense fund of 2 per cent of their salaries.

Supporting Birnbach's statement of better conditions in the musician employment situation, the HERALD has learned, through a survey, that there is an upward trend in employment conditions in sight for this fall.

Attending the national convention were 290 delegates, representing 250 locals in the United States and Canada. Joseph N. Weber was re-elected president. The complete executive personnel, as named at the convention, follows:

President, Joseph N. Weber; Vice president, Charles L. Bagley; Secretary, William J. Kerngood; Treasurer, Harry E. Brenton.

Member of the executive board from Canada: G. Bert Henderson.

Members of the executive board from the United States: Fred W. Birnbach, who is also Weber's assistant; A. C. Hayden, Chauncey A. Weaver, A. A. Greenbaum.

Delegates to the American Federation of Labor: Joseph N. Weber (as provided in the By-Laws), Edward Canavan, W. Ralph Fettermann, C. A. Weaver, J. W. Parks, Charles L. Bagley.

DAN RUSSO

Smiling Danny Russo is one of the best liked and best known orchestra directors in the business. Danny, with his Orioles Orchestra, was one of the first units of this kind to be featured over the air. This was way back in 1926 over the Edgewater Beach Hotel station WEBH, and Danny holds the record for being held-over at this hotel longer than any other individual or band. When he first started there, Mark Fisher and Ted Fiorito were working for him and both these boys really owe their personal successes to him.

Danny and his Orioles are now the main features at the Canton Tea Garden, Chicago, and their broadcasting over the KYW (NBC chain) is enjoyed by probably millions of people all over the country.

Fox Films Keeps Witmark Despite Sale of Red Star

Jay Witmark, vice president and general manager of Red Star Music company, will remain with the Fox Film corporation despite the sale of Red Star to the Sam Fox Music company. Just what will be his capacity, however, has not yet been decided. His contract has a year to run.

Red Star will soon give up its offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

Morros in Charge Of Publix Music And Productions

Starting on July 1, Boris Morros, who for the past two years has had charge of the Paramount-Publix musical activities, will have complete charge of both the music and production departments, maintaining offices both at the Paramount theatre building, New York City, and also at the Presentation studio in Astoria.

Morros started his career with this corporation as a musical director, doing orchestral productions at the then Paramount house in Memphis, Tenn. His work showed such ability that when the first bandshows started to be produced in Des Moines, Iowa, he was sent there as musical advisor and assistant producer. After two years he was brought on to New York and given the post of head of the music department, which included not only full charge of musicians in all Paramount theatres but also charge of all music on the stages.

Paramount's selection of Boris Morros is a "natural" one, inasmuch as his ability has shown him to be the man for the job.

I. M. Halperin, who has been in charge of production, leaves shortly for Detroit where he will assume charge as city manager of the 27 houses under Paramount control in that city.

It is reported that Nat Kalcheim, who was formerly booking for the Wm. Morris Agency, and recently succeeded the late Earl Sanders, is to be Morros' assistant in booking of acts, though Sam Shayon continues as his right-hand man in all activities.

STAGE SHOWS

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending June 12

Helen Lewis and her Girl Band just about saved the day at the Mastbaum this week, for Ed Lowry's fourth show, "Rhythm Queens," was hardly up to the usual standard.

A huge illuminated crown with two heralds in red announcing the show appeared on the stage. The crown separated into two sections showing the Rhythm Queens in striking modernistic dresses of scarlet and gold, falling in triangular folds. The girls were an eye-filling sight and their playing was above the average.

The Mastbaum Dance Ensemble, in unusual costumes of orange and garnet, gave a routine dance and drill marked by very fine teamwork.

Ed Lowry read a more or less humorous account of Captain John Smith and Pocahontas, accompanied by some wisecracks and horseplay by the Mastbaum orchestra which seemed to this observer to be entirely beneath the dignity of a house of this standing.

Flo Baylor did some really good trapeze work and received a very good hand.

Buddy Howe proved himself a pastmaster at tap dancing and did some difficult stunts up and down two flights of steps.

The Three Diamonds engaged in a line of comedy patter and some good soft-shoe dancing, but their slapstick was rather overdone.

The Dance Ensemble in pink ruffles and feather headdresses gave a charming drill, perfectly timed and with the feathers alternating so that the effect was like waves.

Helen Lewis and Her Girls played "99 Out of a Hundred Want to be Kissed," which also was sung through megaphones.

Denver Denver

Week ending June 17

The Fanchon & Marco "Varieties" Idea is giving vaude fans a break, for vaude is just what it is. No line of beautiful girls and no band on the stage to tie the acts together, but the quality of this bill makes up for all of that.

The show starts with a typical circus act, and one almost looks for the parade. The Flying Flemings give a breath-taking display on the flying trapezes, and there are six performers.

Baker, Dove and Allen carelessly and humorously swing and toss the chatter and Indian clubs in large quantities, the audience warming their hands vigorously.

Sully and Thomas parade some new and old antics, put on a broadcasting scene that is a wow, and in addition Sully acts as master of ceremonies.

Finally, there is the Norman Thomas quintet, five talented colored musicians and dancers, who delight with "Harlem Mania." One of them plays the piano better with one hand than can most persons with two, one is a drummer who is almost a show in himself, one can croon, and two are hot dancers.

Jersey City Stanley

Week ending June 25

Johnny Perkins' Gang is back after a two weeks' vacation and that is the main thing on the minds of the audience at this house. Johnny's Gang is composed of Ruth Petty, Richard Montgomery and Ralph Acuri and the tremendous ovations accorded all of them proved their popularity here. Johnny is on his fifteenth week and going stronger than ever.

Show opened with an orchestral feature, directed by Jules Faret and entitled "June Tunes." Following this, Hy C. Geis presented an entertaining organ novelty. The stage-show, "On Ze Boulevard," opened snappily, with a routine, done to the tune of "Kings Horses," by the Evans-Bines Girls, who are followed by two colored rhythm dancers, presumably of the team of Sonny, Teddy and Ray. The boys clicked and got a good hand for their efforts. Eddie Bruce, carrying along a straight man as a foil for his funny antics, got a lot of laughs for a hypnotism bit which ends in a laughable black-out. The ballet returns with a well-executed toe routine and is followed by little Nita Carol, who pleasingly sings "Have You Forgotten the Time" to a good hand. Bruce and Nita clown a bit and then Bruce does a dance as Nita sings.

The stage is then closed off with a silvery curtain, bearing the words, "Johnny Perkins and His Merry Mad Gang." Most of the band are in the pit, but Perkins uses five of them on the stage, and the Evans-Bines girls as background. Johnny's appearance and that of each of his gang called for tremendous applause, finally subsiding after Johnny finished his personal greetings and re-introduced Ralph Acuri, who was so well liked for his singing that he earned four encores. Richard Montgomery, a young colored boy with a great voice, also stopped the show and earned an encore. Ruth Petty's great "blues" voice got her four encores, legitimately stopping the show on three of them. Frank Swarree, though he got off to a bad start, earned an encore and then was requested by the audience to sing "Wabash Moon."

This week Johnny does not do a specialty. The Rodion Dancers, two girls and one man, close the show with a good adagio routine.

ORGAN SOLOS

ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) presented as her solo this week, "A Request Program," a community-sing of songs requested by her fans. Elsie opened with a chorus and verse of "Beside a Shady Brook," following this with her own singing of "Now I'm In Your Arms," for which she was well applauded. "Two Hearts in ¾ Time" and "Moonlight Saving Time" were the balance of the program. Miss Thompson who is billed as "Sweetheart of the Organ" has really become that to this audience, who applaud her first appearance and always give her a good reception at the final number.

DON BAKER (Staten Island, N. Y. Paramount) introduced another entertaining novelty organ production entitled, "Southland Sketches," which for sheer beauty and good organ playing rates high. In this solo, Baker made very good use of clever lighting effects, a good singer and a film of river scenes projected on the magnascopic screen. Opening with "Juba Dance" as a scene of a cotton field is shown, Baker then played "Turkey in the Straw." Third number was introduced with an appropriate slide inviting the audience to sing, and as chorus of this number, 'Chloe" is sung with a southern swamp scene used as a background for word slides. An effect slide of the Mississippi River is used on the magnascopic screen as the audience sang, "Roll On, You Mississippi." Title slide next announced, "Ole Man River," and as verse begins, a baritone singer behind screen sings the number as the film appears to encircle him. The audience joined in singing the last chorus of this number. Baker is making a good name for himself here and apparently, from the applause these production organ solos receive, he has hit on the type of solos audiences in these parts enjoy.

BETTY HAMMOND (Publix Strand, New Orleans) receives a cordial welcome from the audience after a week's absence from the solo spot. Her offering, "Were You Sincere," is a novelty arrangement of the popular ballad bringing into play her voice as well as the organ, and while the amplifier did not seem to be equal in volume to the size of the theatre, Miss Hammond managed to put it over. She opens with a brief bit of melody, sings a verse and chorus, with effective organ accompaniment, through the microphone, then peps things up with a fox-trot arrangement of the ballad. She closes with half a chorus, gradually working up into a climax.

RUS HENDERSON (Worcester, Mass., Plymouth) presented a timely novelty called, "Baseball" for a recent organ solo and this audience found it very entertaining and enjoyable. Solo opens with "baseball" lyrics to the tune, "Just a Gigolo" and after laughing heartily at a few cartoon slides and gags, audience then went into singing of a Jewish version to "Here Comes the Sun," a supposed conversation to the tune, "Take a Walk" between the pitcher and Babe Ruth and then closing with "Smile Darn Ya, Smile" with more special baseball lyrics. Applause at finish was great and organist was forced to take a number of extra bows.

RAY GRUIS (Kenosha, Wis., Fox Gateway) offered an entertaining solo called "A 1900 Show," which was a burlesque on shows of that date. Explanatory slides opened the solo as Gruis played incidental music and a local singer, dressed in the 1900 heighth of fashion, burlesqued "In the Good Old Summer Time." All the fun (or what is funny to us) of that time was reproduced on the screen, such as "Ladies—Kindly Remove Hats." Finally the feature picture arrives, the story of which is told in slides, the organist playing appropriate incidental music for the scenes. Choruses of songs popular in that day are interspersed throughout the solo for the audience to sing.

C. SHARPE-MINOR (New York City Beacon), for his first organ presentation in this house, offered the audience conclusive proof of his ability to entertain them. This solo opens with a good rendition of "National Emblem March," which he plays as a straight spot solo. Closing impressively with full organ, Minor then orally explains the working parts of the organ, demonstrating each pipe by playing bits of songs and explaining each with a cleverly worded line of chatter. The usual procedure for demonstrating an organ is a sort of dry affair but Minor livened it up with a modern technique and an entertaining oral introduction to each. He closes to fine applause with the playing of "I'm In Love With You" and preceding it with an announcement that this song explains his feeling for the audience.

JACK MEYER (Brooklyn Carlton). After an absence of a few months, Meyer again is offering community-singing novelties to an appreciative audience. This week's solo consisted of the singing and playing of the following popular numbers: "At Sundown," "In My Arms," "Ho Hum," "Little Church in the Valley," "Were You Sincere," "I Wanna Sing About You," a special version to the tune "Take a Walk" and a final chorus of "Don't Talk About Me."

ARLO HULTS (New York City RKO 86) continues to increase his popularity at this house by presenting clever little novelties and songs the audience likes to sing. This week's solo is entitled "It's Time to Sing," and the audience lustily responded with "Smile Darn Ya, Smile," "When Your Lover Has Gone," "Two Hearts," "A Crazy Song," and "Whistling in the Dark." Hults opens as usual with the playing of "Voice of the RKO," the signature song of all RKO organists, then goes into a special version of the first mentioned song, at the finish of which he orally tells the audience of the weekly singing school, first lesson of which is the singing of number two song. The language lesson, first in German and then in English, of "Two Hearts" follow (this audience singing equally well in both languages). A gag introduction of "Crazy Song" follows and though this is a brand new number the audience sang it very well. A tongue-twister to the tune "Sweet Sue" had the audience all balled up, but the whistling chorus and singing chorus was perfectly done.

Hello Everybody

It is really starting to look as though Remick's, DeSylva, Brown and Henderson and Harm's will be back on their own soon. . . . The way things stand now, no one seems to know the real facts but everyone is guessing and voicing their guesses. . . . In the past few days I believe I have heard at least forty-seven different stories about it and probably none is right. . . . When the true facts come out we'll tell you all about them.

Maurice Baron, one-time cowboy and more recently staff composer and assistant conductor of the Roxy theatre, has been named successor to Erno Rapee as conductor of the Roxy Symphony Concert heard each Monday night over an NBC-WJZ network. . . . The name of Nan Blackstone is by no means new to anyone at all familiar with the night life of New York. . . . Endowed with a hair-trigger wit and a vivid personality, this young comedienne from Texas is another scintillating star in the glittering diadem of Broadway. . . . Her style is extremely individual. If so inclined, one could very appropriately call her "The Human Chatterbox," for her delivery of a song is on that order. . . . This all leads up to the announcement that Irving Mills has signed her up exclusively for radio work. . . . Just received a beautiful scene of "Unter den Linden" in Berlin from Herb Marks who is over there on business for the Edward B. Marks music firm. Herb remarks, "Greetings from a wonderful country where music is always tuneful and beer is always plentiful." . . . Gee, that burns me up! I mean the last line. . . . Doesn't it you? . . . Kidding aside though, Herb is a great fellow and incidentally I understand he is doing a lot of good for the firm of Marks. . . .

Sammy Wigler, who for the past year has been manager of the special service department of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc., has just become a partner in business with his friend and pal, George Marlo. . . . Marlo recently opened the Marlo Music Company. . . . and this should be a great combination. . . . Good luck, boys. George Simon, formerly with Abe Olman of the Olman Music Company now has charge of the special service department, so when you boys out of town write in to DeSylva, don't forget, the name is George Simon. . . . That sweet old-time favorite, Theodore Morse's great ballad, "Dear Old Girl" is now being published by Leo Feist, Inc. . . . Had a laughable incident happen the other night, C. Sharpe Minor, Jimmy Clark and myself were standing on the corner of 75th and Broadway, when Peter Garibaldi and his organ pulled up to the curb and started playing some of the old-time favorites. C. Sharpe pulled a fast one when he said he wanted to help a fellow organist out, which he did. . . . Clark tried his darnedest to get in a Witmark plug but gave up in disgust when he could not make himself understood. . . . That's all for this time. . . . S'long. . . .

Lend Me Your Ears!

LIFE is just one fever after another. First we get spring fever and give that as the "perfect" alibi for not wanting to work. Then spring passes and we find it's summer and we still don't want to work. And as summer gets under way we laze around and hate the further thought of work.

So I've come to the sober conclusion that it is not a matter of fever at all. It's plain, unadulterated golfyitis of the fairway variety. At least two thirds of the film industry is so affected and what's more, they seem to like it. Can't blame those golf-bugs much when you understand that the only possible relief from the affliction is playing golf. . . .?

Some day a worthy statictician will up and dope out how many managers . . . spend how much time . . . speculating on how much better the other fellow's job is than their own . . . and when the figures are complete we suggest that it be thrown in the sewer . . . because if all those speculators were laid end to end it would be just grand.

Just what is the use of figuring out that Jimmy Jones has a better job than your own? Maybe if you paid more attention to your work, you would be much better off than Jones. Any way you figure it . . . there will always be guys who are envying you something that may hardly be worth envying.

Dear Circuit Chiefs: (Who preach "no salary cuts.")

Are you aware of the fact, that, contrary to your circuit announcement about no slashing of salaries, certain district and division managers are doing just that under the applesauce to the house managers that it is "only temporary" and will help keep the district standing up among the leaders?

If by any chance you are not aware of it, take this writer's word. It is being done.

If you are not for salary-slashing send an official notice to that effect to every division and district manager. Otherwise your promise to the managers was not sincere.

I'm maderenell because so many managers are "thinking of making a change" when they ought to be concentrating on "keeping their jobs."

Good Lord boys; are you aware of the number of men out of work right now? Maybe not, or you would be mighty slow about giving up what you have for what you think you ought to have.

Remember—(if we may be allowed to repeat something we told you several times before)—no matter how hard it is to get along on your present income, it's going to be a darned sight harder getting along without it.

If your super-sensitive feelings are telling you to quit a good job just because things are not rolling smoothly, try to think of those who may be dependent upon your salary.

We wonder whether it isn't the exception rather than the rule which prompted a certain chain executive to say that his circuit would rather move the men around than permit them to stay in one community and take root. His claim was that a manager who stayed too long in one location eventually devoted more time to outside activities than to the theatre, with particular reference to local clubs and organizations.

Maybe we were brought up in this business under entirely different surroundings, but it was always conceded good business for a manager to be active and interested in the doings of his community in order that the theatre might profit thereby. Many's the extra hundred dollars or more that has been attracted to the theatre b.o. by reason of a wide-awake manager's ability to capitalize on his membership or interest in local organizations.

Some of the members who kidded us about the scenery from the windows of Club headquarters have had a chance to take a look for themselves and they all agree it was not exaggerated. Drop in and see for yourself.

Holtz Co-operating Nicely With Local Board Of Merchants

We can easily see that Charlie Holtz, manager of the Del Paso Theatre, North Sacramento, Calif., is on the job when it comes to tying-in with the local Chamber of Commerce. His last stunt with the organization was the working out of an illustrated envelope featuring local enterprise. Every merchant is using them, Charlie says, and we note that the Del Paso is the only house featured.

Other evidence of Holtz's activity is seen from several snapshots he sends along. We're sorry they don't shape up well enough for reproduction but they do get over the fact that he's busy with a local glee club tie-up and Ladies' Silver Nites every Wednesday. By this time you've probably put some other stunt over, Charles, so why not shoot it in?

Bachrach Using A Program Gag That Is Getting Results

An interesting collection of programs is sent the Club by Alan J. Bachrach, manager of the Arcade Theatre, Waynesboro, Pa., which set forth a trade boosting scheme this manager now has in effect. An outline cannot clearly be reproduced on these pages, but we can state that the programs are tastefully arranged, and Bachrach tells us that the gag is going over nicely. We feel sure that if any member wishes to try a numbered program gag, Bachrach will be glad to advise them how he is working it out. Just mail him a letter care of the Arcade Theatre. The Club also notes that he did not overlook the Easter spirit when he issued a program of special Easter attractions, with Easter greetings on the front cover. The Club thanks you for your contribution, A. J. Don't neglect to keep us posted on future activities.

A SMART FOREIGN FRONT!

We're sorry we didn't have this for our International Number, however, it's still good and worthy of honorable mention.

We are showing the front of the Imperial Cinema in Paris, France, during the seven weeks' run to record business of "ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT."

Apparently, the showmen on this side of the water can look to their laurels when it comes to turning out effective fronts, because this is as snappy a one as we've seen in many a day. And, according to what we have been told the expense involved was very little, particularly when the attractiveness of this display is taken into consideration.

Emerson's Art Work Strikes The Eye And It Costs But Little

Four striking examples of what can be accomplished in art work at small expense are submitted to the Club by Ted Emerson, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a city well known for having a hustling group of theatremen who know how to sell their shows. Take a look at the collection of photos we are reproducing on this page:

In the upper left-hand corner note the display on "A Tailor Made Man." This picture was promoted by using an old style tailor display board with a bolt of cloth draped in back of the cut-out. A one-sheet of William Haines was used to carry out the illusion. A cheap and effective display, say we.

In the upper right-hand portion is a corking piece of work on "Secret Six" that will hit them right in the eye. Regular exchange paper was used on this set piece, including a six and one-sheet.

A splendid example of what can be made from a 24-sheet is illustrated by the photo in the lower right hand corner. It is a regular exchange 24, cut out and mounted on compoboard. If this one doesn't convey the spirit of the show, then we don't know what it's all about.

In the lower right hand is what can be done over night in the way of erecting a sign that talks right out loud. Note the huge "Trader Horn" letters that Emerson and his versatile maintenance man "Scoop" got together in a few hours. The letters are 4 feet high and the extra light receptacles were borrowed from the Des Moines Theatre. "Scoop" and an usher assistant constructed, wired and painted the rest of the sign. These two and Emerson spent most of the night getting them erected.

The Club takes pleasure in presenting this fine work to other members and hopes that Emerson will find an opportunity to send more examples of his show-selling in Cedar Rapids.

The Safety Club

With outdoor weather coming on us, or already here, we ought to make some attempt to co-operate with local organizations, police departments, etc., by forming, with their aid, Kiddie Safety Klubs for the youngsters, with the idea of keeping them from playing in the streets and exposing themselves to dangers from autos and trucks.

Stunts of this kind always react favorably to the theatre getting behind the idea and plugging via their screen, program or advertising. It also offers the possibilities to plug their lines about "Keep off crowded streets," "Play in the playgrounds," "Look up and down before crossing streets," and last, but not least, "The Safety Klub Meets on All Rainy Afternoons at the Blank Theatre."

If the suggestion holds any value to you, or if you can work it out to best suit your local conditions, it may be well worth trying. Handled in the right way, you will get yourself in solid with most of the parents in your community.

Laurence's Program Gets Full Coverage At No Cost To Him

The cost of theatre programs means nothing to H. F. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., for the simple reason that his does not set him back one penny. Lawrence sends the Club a copy of a four-page program, the front page carrying the week's listing of attractions and the balance devoted to space for local advertisers. A copy of same is put in every residence each Saturday morning. Laurence is also using a business booster every Wednesday night that is proving a real house filler ever since he started it. If any of the Club members are interested in Laurence's system of awards we are sure he will be glad to let his brother members in on the idea if you'll drop him a card.

H. Addison Queries Originality Of The 'Swap Contest' Idea

Originality of the "Swap Contest" idea is questioned in a recent letter from H. M. Addison, managing director of the Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., in connection with a Club article published in the March 21st issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

While not claiming to be the author of the contest, and confessing that he and his associates purloined the idea from the Coast, Addison honestly believes that Loew houses were the first to present the contest in the East.

Briefly, the scheme is to award prizes for the best "swap" ad in newspaper classified columns. For a limited time each advertiser is given a pair of tickets in order to offset cost of the ad and get the newspaper department under way.

Perhaps the originator of the "Swap Idea" will come forward and clear up this mystery which has become a controversial subject among several of our Club members. What do you say, fellow Round Tablers?

Klein Busy In New Jersey Putting Over Harmonica Contests

Harmonica contests exploiting "Big Boy" are still going strong, according to a recent communication from Ray Klein, who has charge of all publicity in connection with this brand of exploitation in Warner New Jersey theatres.

Klein is running a series of six contests at the present time, the first four preliminary, the fifth a semi-final and the sixth the Grand Final Contest. About fifty are enrolled each Saturday matinee and four winners selected. On the fifth Saturday the 16 preliminary winners play, winners are selected and they play the following Saturday for the title of Champion Harmonica Player of the town. Advertising effort consisted of 200 one-sheets, 200 window cards and the distribution of 5,000 heralds in schools. Additional publicity was obtained through the presentation of a gold harmonica to the Mayor. These contests are sponsored by M. Hohner and the Educational Film Co., and will likely prove just as popular now as they have in the past. Further information can be obtained by dropping Ray a line and we are sure he will send you detailed information about these contests which have heretofore proved so popular with the younger generation.

McSweeney's Kiddie Club Clicks In Ace Fashion In Boston

That's some Kiddie Club that David C. McSweeney has up Boston way. There may be other clubs of its kind in the city, but it looks to us as if Dave had the edge; particularly in that he states that his is the only organization to crash the local newspapers—this time the Globe.

We have before us a tear-sheet from the above paper showing a four-column story with photo which runs a half page. It presents an account of a gala pie-eating contest staged by the McSweeney Kiddie Club, which consisted of eliminations, semi-finals, finals and a large assortment of pies. The gag which started the fun was a boast made by one of his kids to the effect that he could eat more pie, and eat it faster, than any boy in Boston. Well, Dave saw it through and got his name in the headlines. The photo published by the paper shows the gang going ahead full speed with the complicated art of pie-eating.

A word or two about Dave's Club, and why it is such a successful one. According to the story, he had considerable trouble with these youngsters in the theatre until he organized them. Now he has all the kids whipped into line with fife and drum corps and bands, life-savers and swimming instructors. In the course of a year he has become an auxiliary to weary mothers who have discovered that children can be made to behave if the threat "to tell Dave" is voiced. In all a dual purpose is achieved—the kids are kept away from the theatre until Saturday mornings and Dave, who likes kids, any way, gets a big kick out of arranging their entertainment.

We're sure that a great deal more could be said on the subject of this Kid Club, as to the different stunts he's pulled, but we have given a brief outline of Dave's methods so that any Club members who may be experiencing difficulties along this line, can try handling a Club like his. We are sure that it will pay in the long run, not only as a community good will builder, but a solution of the child problem in the theatre.

We also wish to call attention to another stunt he is pulling to publicize theatre and himself. It's a two-column story running full-page length headed "Doctors of Entertainment" in which he takes the reader by the arm and walks him through the theatre, selling this and that department as he proceeds. The usher staff, technical end, box office are all touched upon, the courtesy extended the theatre-goer, and at the close the reader has been given a strong selling talk on the desirability of becoming a steady theatre patron. That's telling them, Dave, or we don't know what we're talking about. Lots of luck, and don't forget to send in further accounts of your work.

"LOBBY LAFFS"

Beating The Depression!

ART WORK AND YOUR LOBBY!

From time to time we have carried illustrations of various forms of art work and displays, and always these illustrations have been welcomed by both manager and theatre artist alike. No doubt they were glad to see how other theatres were playing up their art work and using some of the other fellow's ideas.

We were rather surprised when we received a letter from Herb Simpson, local artist of Evansville, Ind., together with some of his art work, because Herb is not connected with any one theatre but, rather, does the work for several, not only in his own town but in several surrounding communities as well.

Needless to say we were very much impressed with the type of work this artist is turning out and felt that despite the fact that he was a free lance we ought to pass along illustrations of some of his work.

Simpson has noted with interest some of the art work which has appeared on our pages and it naturally surprised us to know that other artists, than those directly connected with theatre work, were following the Club pages so religiously.

Recent mail has brought other fine lobby displays and art work which we will present from time to time and continue to do so as long as there appears to be a demand for such material. We are grateful to Herb Simpson for these photos and hope he sends us more in the immediate future.

"Doc" Miller Boosts Box Office With A Twin Frenchman Gag

We are reproducing a small snapshot of a banner used to excellent advantage on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" by R. R. "Doc" Miller, general manager of the Parkway Theatre, Madison, Wis. While the size of the snap will not permit full emphasis of the stunt, its large proportions will be noted along with the row of faces on the top portion. The gag in connection with its use, was to pick out the faces of twin Frenchmen. "Doc" tells us he had a good-sized gang around the theatre front all week long trying to pick the winners. The value of the gag was well reflected by a week of gratifying business at the Parkway and "Doc" is passing the stunt along with a sincere wish that some brother showman will also be able to cash in the same way he did. The above appears to be a good gag for any one to run in connection with the picture mentioned, or it could be adapted to a score of others. The Club appreciates this contribution and hopes to hear further from this busy member. What else is doing out your way now that the new season is here? Be sure to keep your Club posted from time to time.

Red Inked Front Page Given A New Slant By Chidley

Instead of the usual diagonal smear of "Front Page" copy across the newspaper's leading page, Chidley used a seven-column scare head, set in red ink and reading, "Convict Escapes." Then, a two-column, regulation bank and lead to a story revealing a portion of the picture's plot. The yarn ended with advice that the picture opened at such and such date.

We take it for granted that Chidley arranged with his local editor for a run-off of the necessary number of copies after the regular run of the edition had been completed. If you can obtain the same co-operation from your paper that Chidley did, it seems to us a very effective and sensational means of getting over your message. The front page is generally a part of a four-page form and along with the paper's real masthead, carries enough authenticity and bulk to give the impression of an Extra. Chidley sent no explanation along with his tear sheet so we are but guessing as to methods he pusued. If we're wrong, maybe he'll correct us, and in the meantime the Club will hope that this old stand-by will not take such a long time again in the way of letting his fellow members know what's doing in Caspar.

Metro Shows Going Over with Maurice Bliss at the Helm

To let the Club know that he's on the job up in the Bronx, Maurice Bliss, manager of the Metro Theatre, New York City, takes time off to mail copy on a couple of recently used gags. For a throw-away on "Bat Whispers" he used an 8 x 5-inch folder, double folded, with a big ? mark on either side in black and white. The first unfolding delivers the message: "This Will Bring You Closer to A Solution of the Greatest Mystery of the Age." The second unfolding discloses the film and theatre ad.

On "Criminal Code" Bliss used the regularly printed "Summons" to excellent results. The Club also has occasion to note the attractive house organ, "Metro News," which carries the week's attractions and other newsy information about the theatre. Glad to hear from you again, Maurice, and be sure to keep the Club posted in the future.

Rosenfield Sends Club Several Gags That Went Over Big

When playing "Millie," Joe Rosenfield, manager of the Fox-Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., used a couple of stunts that brought in excellent returns. As one, he tied up with a local automobile company for the use of a new car, with chauffer, for transportation of a red-headed girl through the principal thoroughfares of the city. Signs on the car ballyhooed the picture and also gave credit to the auto sales company. It proved a good plug.

Other stunts included the promotion of a red-headed girl contest on the stage, admittance of all red-heads free on the opening night and a walking book ballyhoo. The latter was a real attention-getting gag, Joe tells the Club, and in connection with this he secured a window tie-up with a big drug concern for a display of the book. A photo of the book gag is herewith reproduced.

Joe is also working a stunt with the organist which he says is clicking along in great shape. Every Friday he puts on a "Challenge the Organist" night, patrons receiving a printed slip which they fill out with a challenge to the organist to play some melody. A box is provided to hold the slips. If the organist is "stumped," the challenger receives a pound box of candy. The gag has caught on so nicely that he is now changing from candy to hams and bacon, promoted from a meat market. It appears to be sure fire, from the account, and does not involve any expense on the part of the theatre.

It looks as though that last gag is a winner, Joe, and we're sure that a lot of your brother Club members are going to make use of it. Keep up the good work and let us hear from you often.

Weshner Promoting Large Kiddie Klub At Very Small Cost

At the cost of but 10 free tickets each week Ben Weshner, manager of the Royal Theatre, Bloomfield, N. J., is getting a splendid break in the way of publicity from his local paper by the promotion of a Kiddie Club contest on the Junior Club page. With this small outlay the stunt ought to prove popular, he thinks, so is passing it along to other members.

There are two boxes on the page, one devoted to a membership coupon and an inducement to win free tickets and the other to names of kiddies who received awards for best stories, drawings, letters, poems, etc., the week previous. The prize-winning contributions are published from week to week.

Ben, when you ask the Club what it thinks of this means of promoting interest and good-will we can only answer that we believe it to be a corking method. The very fact that your paper records a membership of over 1,500 members in the Junior Club is ample evidence of the interest the kiddies are taking in it. And at the cost of but ten passes a week, we can't see how anyone can go wrong promoting a scheme of this kind. Let's hear from you again in reference to Bloomfield show selling, Ben. Right?

Stribling Stresses Color Combinations On "Birth of Nation"

A color scheme of red, white and blue was stressed in all advertising done on "Birth of a Nation" when J. E. Stribling played this picture at the Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. The front of the house was also dressed in the same colors and advertisements in newspapers carried out the same idea.

We are reproducing a sample of the newspaper advertising in black and white, the centre portion now black appearing in red with white lettering on "Birth of a Nation" copy. It was Stribling's intention to have the ad in red, white and blue but being informed at the last moment that this could not be done he had to take the next best offer, that of red and white.

Also take note of the reproduced photo of the Rialto's front where the same red, white and blue color scheme was carried out, both on marquee signs, lights and decorations. A large collection of stills on the picture was a further means of attracting public interest.

We believe that all Club members will agree that the use of color in ads is a sure-fire means of provoking a reader's interest. Any member who wants to try this method occasionally is advised to take up the matter with his local newspaper advertising manager. It has been our experience that most papers will cooperate in the matter of running color at but a small extra charge in ad rate.

When J. E. wrote the Club he was in the midst of preparing his June calendar of attractions and we are going to anticipate hearing further from him just as soon as he can find the necessary time. In the meantime, he's signing off until then.

Harvey Opens Bobby Jones's Series With Diversified Effort

For an opening campaign on the Bobby Jones series of golf pictures, E. J. Harvey, manager of the Roger Sherman Theatre, New Haven, Conn., has fired a salvo of diversified ammunition.

On the day prior to the opening of the first picture the first shot consisted of the breaking of a full-page of co-op ads, handsomely supported with gifts which included a set of golf clubs and an outfit for a man and a woman. This was accomplished at no cost to the theatre. Arrangements have been made to promote one of these pages with each of the series.

While the rules of the municipal golf course do not permit distribution of advertising matter in any form on the green or in club house, it was arranged to have any member making the first hole in one stroke below par receive a pass good for one admission to see a Jones reel. It was also agreed that a bulletin, explaining how one could win a pass, be displayed on the club board. In this way Harvey managed to get over his message without infringing the rules.

Other features of the campaign are window tie-ups with sporting goods and clothing stores; the distribution of "tee" cards, with holder for a tee, and a blotter follow-up showing calendar dates in red for the entire series, for distribution in offices, hotels, libraries, clubs and the C. of C.

It looks as though you've started a corking campaign, Harvey, and we'd say you are going to reap full benefit from the booking of these reels. The subject is a timely one and the Club believes it is offering sound advice when it reminds all members to get all they can from the portrayal of a popular sport by a popular player-star.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

Frank Whitbeck Gives His Opinion And Tells You Why!

The best medium of theatre advertising, in my estimation, is that of the newspaper.

If the theatre manager were restricted to one, and only one, medium for his box office success then. . . . The newspaper display space would stand high above the effectiveness of the billboards, exploitation, radio and the screen of his own theatre.

But . . . display space in a newspaper will not, by itself, insure success to any theatre as it may for a commercial pursuit—the theatre must have the intelligent combination of every medium within command of the manager. . . . The public, through many years of seeking information on theatrical events, has come to look for the "best showing" as indicative of the "best show in town."

Since the beginning of things theatrical the press agent has been judged by the amount of publicity that he could land for his attraction. Not the cut-and-dried theatrical notice printed on the drama page as a part of the theatrical rate charged . . . but the amount of news that the press agent has been able to originate and convince the editor to print. . . . The story that broke in the news section of the newspaper, is the story that counted most at the box office. Press agents with circuses, for instance, rank as high as any circus executive in the order of importance. The press agent of a New York legitimate attraction is, as a rule, paid from $50 to $100 a week more than the company manager. It is not unusual for the press agent or advertising man (call him what you will) to be paid a far better salary than the theatre manager. . . . Many times on a par with the salary a division or district manager is paid. Today, especially in New York City, the circuit and distributing company advertising executive ranks with any other position short of general manager and his opinion is sought in story value, in cast and title. . . . Proving the importance that is placed on the judgment and understanding of these men. These things are mentioned merely to impress the importance of . . . publicity in connection with display adtising.

Do You Waste Space?

But . . . the mere fact that a theatre places an ad in a newspaper, . . . a big ad . . .a half or full page—will not guarantee to bring a crowd to the box office. Too much is expected of newspaper display advertising and too little thought is given to what goes into the space purchased, when the ad is carried—in what medium and whether an afternoon or morning paper.

Since the day of the theatre manager who wore a red vest and broke every law of man and God in the conduct of a theatre . . . the rule of inch for inch in all newspapers has prevailed. Why? Because of fear . . . fear of the power of the press. Fear instead of confidence and respect . . . of understanding and sympathy. Many newspaper men have encouraged this misunderstanding. . . . It was the way out of the smaller circulation and non-essential newspaper of getting equal space with the leader in the field. The far-sighted newspaper executive encourages any theatre advertising man to buy "circulation" just as the department store buys its space. One newspaper is best for foods and those commodities appealing to the frugal women shoppers. Another newspaper is better for men readers. No one will ever settle the question of whether a morning paper or an afternoon paper is best for theatre advertising. . . . Only intelligent study and the possibility of "keying" newspaper advertising will settle this question in varying situations.

Adjectives vs. Dignity

Today the controversy runs hot as to what makes the good theatre ad. . . . The ticket selling ad. One authority stands for the typical theatre phraseology . . . the bombast and the high-sounding adjectives . . . the "colossal," "magnificent," "soul-inspiring" and what have you description. Another will adapt his style from the more conservative commercial copy writer and in dignified, imagination-stirring language describe the attraction he attempts to sell. One will go in for big bold type . . . another for art illustration. One will skirt the ragged edge of common decency and another will use the lambskin to cloak the wolf. What should you do? No one can lay down a set of rules for theatrical advertising. . . . What is red fire in one community may be a fizzling dud in another. Your own good judgment after a careful analysis of your own situation is the only possible answer.

In what section of the newspaper will big space bring the best results? One will tell you R. O. P. (run-of-the-paper) and another says . . . take it on the drama page, and this, mind you, in spite of the fact that it is every press agent's ambition to crack the news section with his stories. If a story is valuable in the news section . . . is not theatre advertising equally valuable in the same news section? You give the answer.

Frank Whitbeck

Writing on introduction for Frank Whitbeck is like trying to tell the overoge person who his mother is. They olreody know so well thot they would think you were crozy. Well, we're not exoctly crozy but we do own up to being o little "nurts" obout Fronk Whitbeck's style. Young in spirit, he hos never overlooked the foct thot one of his own expressions hit the noil of progress right on the heod. Soid Fronk, "You Hove to Go Like Hell Now-o-doys to Stoy where You Are." And, since he never wos content to stoy put in his viewpoint of odvertising the theotre, he wos constontly injecting new angles into the deportment under his supervision.

Newspaper Space, Sensiblly Used, Will Bring Best Results!

There is an old saying in show business . . . "No attraction is any better than you make it—before it opens." Yet . . . many managers will take the same size space on the opening day of a new attraction as they did on the last day of the outgoing attraction. There can only be one answer to that . . . build in space importance as you near your opening date and on that opening day . . . hit newspaper readers with everything you have. One good ad on the day after you open . . . then your attraction must take care of itself. If your public is not interested in your advance campaign—if from your sales talk they have not sensed the entertainment they want . . . then all the newspaper advertising this side of hell will not put over a program. This isn't personal opinion; it isn't a weakening of belief in newspaper space—it is the history of show business. All you can do is to create a demand, in advance, for the thing you are trying to sell; . . . after that—it is word-of-mouth from those who have seen your show. Clever copy and intelligent exploitation will keep alive public interest—but it will not change public opinion.

Must Have Reader-Interest

Newspaper display space demands, in the theatrical business, the backing of reader interest publicity. Not the story of the kind of tooth brush Greta Garbo uses; not the breed of dog Lew Ayres likes best; . . . not Norma Shearer's opinion of the current or coming style in pajamas. But . . . why Joan Crawford was picked for the role she is playing; . . . what dramatic value the story had to warrant its production—the supporting cast, a brief synopsis of the plot, the director—the high spot of the most dramatic sequence. There is newspaper value in every screen attraction. . . . It is this news value that you must sell to your newspaper reader clientele; it is the very news which is too big . . . too wordy—to get into your display space. Stories must tie up with the idea that is back of your display campaign. It is the combination of the two which makes display space the most valuable of all theatrical advertising outlets.

The billboard is the reminder . . . the place, the date—the name of the attraction. You can not sell an argument on a billboard . . . you can sell policy and . . . what is more important, you can give your campaign that added punch to back up your newspaper space. The efficiency of billboard space will vary with the seasons and the part of the country in which they are located.

To me the key of an advertising campaign is newspaper display space. It is the foundation—every other form of advertising is merely an adjunct to the newspaper. Every other medium should point toward the newspaper campaign—they should build for and with the newspaper space.

Newspapers—the good ones—mould public opinion. You depend upon them every hour of

When we decided on this series we were well aware that the majority would give the newspaper as the most valuable form of theatre advertising. But we wanted to get the assorted viewpoints on WHY news paper advertising was the favorite.

In this series you will find the answer. Bear in mind that in addition to the advertising and publicity directors contacted, we took special pains to also get the reaction from typical showmen who were handling such problems in all sorts of locations and theatres.

Some of the best known leaders in theatre advertising work were kind enough to contribute to this series and to each of them as well as the others, we are extremely grateful. They are helping us get a vital point across to showmen throughout the world and what they have to say will, undoubtedly, prove tremendously valuable to the industry as a whole.

This discussion is not restricted to those who were asked to write on the subject. It is as open as any other discussion on the Round Table pages and every member or reader can set forth his views for publication. "CHICK"

THE ANSWERS TO A TIMELY QUESTION!

Fox Advertising Chief Points Out Six Good Reasons!

The executives of Fox Theatres Corporation and Fox West Coast Theatres believe that in such theatres as can afford it the best medium for advertising attractions is the daily newspaper. It is the belief of these executives that the exigencies of the business make the daily newspaper the one ideal medium and for the following six reasons:

1. Frequently the theatres must make quick changes in programs. These can always be advertised in newspaper columns.
2. The newspaper columns also permit the best use of decorative advertising which is so essential to the advertising of our theatres.
3. Increased or decreased space is always available in newspaper columns.
4. Newspaper advertisements can be changed or corrected with greater dispatch, minimum cost and greatest convenience.
5. Except in rare cases, theatrical advertisements in the newspapers do not have to compete with non-theatrical copy.
6. Newspaper advertisements can be digested at the convenience of the reader.

It will be noted that no other medium can claim all six of these assets.

In houses which cannot afford newspaper advertising we set store first by the trailers shown on the screen. Next in importance comes the mailing list and following that outdoor advertising of various kinds.

In the case of deluxe houses we frequently see all of these mediums used but with the bulk of the advertising appropriations spent in newspapers.

We feel that 10% of the average gross of a theatre is the maximum which should be spent on advertising and exploiting and we feel that the idea set-up in the deluxe theatres is 7% for newspapers and 3% for everything else. Included in the 10% we figure all accessories, lobby displays, salaries for the publicity department, art work, cuts, trailers and stunts.

In certain localities where for one reason or another a theatre should have newspaper advertising but cannot afford it, groups of our houses have clubbed together to produce tabloid newspapers of their own and this idea has worked out very well.

Although we put trailers second in importance we feel that they have their limitations. In the first place they are read only by those whom we have already enticed into the theatre and do not give us coverage for those who do not have the habit of attending. We also feel that in many instances the manner in which trailers "sell" pictures is not always the best and we have had instances in which our managers complained that certain trailers drove away business. This, however, is something which will ultimately be rectified.

The two Fox Circuits do not put any premium on bizarre stunts. The executives feel that the best exploitation of this kind is that which on its merits breaks into the news columns of the dailies. Very often exploitation of this kind is harmful, especially when it involves tie-ups with things that are not of the essence of the theatre, and we have tried to adhere to the rule that where arrangements are made for tie-ups with merchants the resultant displays should be in the merchants' windows and not in our lobbies.

Ralph Cokain (Marion, Ind.) Gives the Smaller City Slant On Newspaper Advertising For Theatres

In this day of critical theatregoers, the best form of advertising is through the columns of the local newspapers. To many exhibitors, this will seem rather ridiculous, in view of the fact that the newspaper has been the standard form of theatre advertising for a long time. Yet unlike other forms, it has remained throughout the years because of its dependability.

Right now we are passing through a depression that is slowly showing signs of improvement; but we must not fool ourselves too soon. The problem of getting patrons into the theatre is not the same as it was ten years ago. At that time we lured them in with big street ballyhoos, or anything to create a desire within them to see the show. The public knew very little about the movies then and for that reason it was easy to draw them in. Today, conditions are different. Times are hard, and a picture must be exceptionally good if it is to attract crowds. The public is not so easily fooled by big ballyhoo nowadays, and they know better than to expect every picture to be as "colossal" and "magnificent" as we would have them believe.

Good, consistent newspaper advertising will reach more people and will keep your theatre before their eyes more than any other form of advertising. The whole family reads the paper, and they generally digest everything that's in it. Whether you think so or not, they read the theatre advertisements.

Recently I wondered if there could be any doubt as to whether or not our ads were read. I hit on an idea and carried it through. It was this: Our smallest house, showing westerns and second run all-talking pictures, was at time a silent theatre. I always used small four or five inch ads in the paper every day; the theatre did not demand larger ones, and it would have been a waste of money to use more space. As an attraction one day the theatre had Bob Custer in a western thriller whose title I have forgotten already. There was a Bob Custer in our town, so when I wrote the ad, I put in small letters beneath the star's name, "Not the Marion Boy." I was kidded thoroughly about that the very next morning by dozens of different people. It undoubtedly sounds silly to the reader, but it proved to me that the public does read the smaller ads.

By adhering strongly to newspaper advertising, I do not infer that ballyhoos and outdoor advertising are entirely taboo; they are not. But considering the fact that the exhibitor must be careful to spend his money where it will do the most good, I believe there is little question but that the newspaper is the only sensible form of advertising. When times are hard and every penny counts, it isn't possible to go out and arrange big ballyhoos; besides the expense would be greater than the good derived from it. Such advertising has become "old stuff" with the public; in most cases it has been trotted out in front of them so often that now they pay little or no attention to it. On the other hand, they will continue to read the newspaper until someone comes along and finds a better way of putting the news before them.

Window displays and good lobby displays are good forms of advertising, but the best of all is the newspaper. I believe most advertising managers and publicity directors will agree with me on this point.

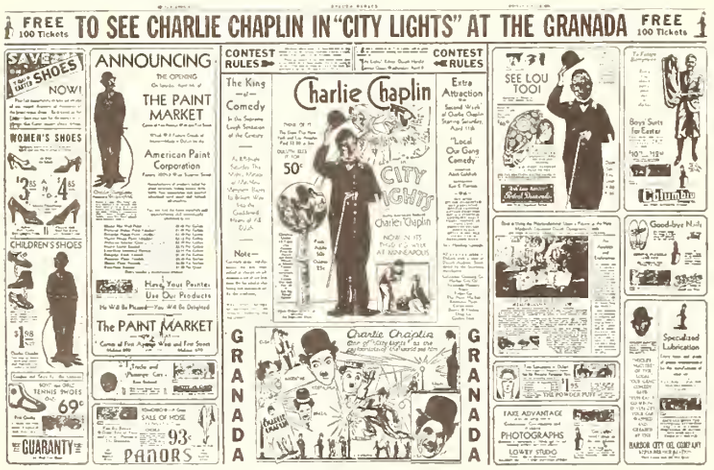
every day . . . for publicity space, for their assistance and co-operation in building good will for your theatre and for yourself. Many managers in many different cities—powerful, important managers in great centers of population, as well as the small theatre manager in small communities—have been led into disagreements with newspapers and I never knew one of them to win the argument . . . no matter if right was on the side of the manager. The public believes "what they see in the paper." They will believe your advertising campaigns, your publicity, your news stories . . . if you play square . . . deal honestly and truthful.

Without a newspaper the smallest crossroads settlement lives in darkness and ignorance . . . the theatre goes into bankruptcy. Be a friend to your newspaper . . . not a servile, favor-begging nuisance—but a business associate, a believer in the power of newspaper advertising . . . a friend to the editorial, business and mechanical staffs and . . . play as fair with your newspaper friends as you do with your ticket-buying public.

Pritz Crashes Two Duluth Papers With "City Lights" Drive

A corking newspaper campaign on "City Lights" is contributed to the Club by Roy Pritz, manager of the Granada Theatre, Duluth, Minn. It is one of the best examples of newspaper co-operation which we have seen in some time and agree with Roy that he can pridefully bring it to the attention of our fraternity. Particularly, in view of the fact that Duluth papers were cold to this brand of exploitation.



His first move was to sell the daily on the double truck and coupon idea which we are herewith reproducing. A double truck was arranged with the "star's eyes" gag as the interest-getter. A streamer head called attention to 100 free tickets to be distributed to those who correctly filled in the name of the several stars whose eyes appeared in advertisements. The cuts show but a portion of the full face.

The coupon ad was used to fine success and read, "Through the courtesy of the Duluth Herald and News Tribune this coupon and 10c will admit any boy or girl under 12 years to see," etc. In connection with both these ideas the paper used a great many special readers, some original and others signed UP stories.

Most of you Round Tablers know what it takes to crash the editorial page of a city daily. Well, that just what Pritz did. Under the head "Chaplin" an editor commented favorably on the film, outlined the story and paid credit to the leads.

Another gag that further enlisted aid from the two newspapers was a special morning showing arranged for newsies and carriers of both dailies. This was carried out in connection with the special Kiddie coupon which was given choice positions in each paper.

Still another business booster that Pritz used in connection with the "City Lights" showing was the making of a special local "Our Gang" comedy. All players were locally recruited kids and the paper devoted a deep three column cut for portrayal of the leading players. Readers were also given choice positions. This was a local interest gag that just couldn't miss.

At its easiest, newspaper co-operation is hard to obtain, particularly, as Roy points out, in his town where local dailies have never gone in for this sort of thing. The point is that he forgot all about any existing newspaper opposition bugaboo in his town and just went out and sold the idea. He got his man.

Ben Cohen Hard At Work, But Sends Club His Hazelton Paper

When the Club request for a contribution to the Third Anniversary number reached Ben Cohen, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., it found him in the midst of a big campaign on "Skippy." It was too early for Ben to forward a description of his work on this picture, he was up to the ears in work, so he sent along a couple of copies of a newsy eight-page tab size paper which is gotten out by the three Publix theatre in this city.

The tab is neatly gotten-up with a generous sprinkling of cuts of motion picture scenes and stars and also carries a good assortment of ads from local merchants. This latter would indicate that the tab has a circulation which commands respect in the community. In the issue Ben sends us we note that he has written an article on "How Animated Cartoons Are Made," crediting some excerpts to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. For which we all thank you, Ben. It is also noted, in an enclosed clipping taken from the local newspaper, that he further publicizes his theatre and himself by writing a column headed "Wise and Otherwise." Oke, Ben, on what you did contribute. The Club will wait for a further account of your work in Hazelton. Give Prof. Nick Girard our best regards when you see or write him. We're glad to hear that he's gone in business for himself.

Phillips Gag On "Dracula" Raises Hair On East Side

No, gentle reader, the spooky-looking photo on this page is not an undertaker's advertisement, but just another hair-raising stunt on "Dracula" put over by J. H. Phillips, manager of the Eagle Theatre, upper Third avenue, New York City.

Phillips arranged with a storekeeper one block away from the theatre to have the casket placed in the window. He does not tell us what kind of store it was, but that's all right. Most any kind will do providing the owner is not a creepy individual. In the casket was placed the nice-looking dummy you see. And alongside the casket a cabinet containing that pleasant looking skeleton. Phillips says it sure looked spooky all right, but that they did get a thrill and how! We believe you, J. H.

Now it may be that certain communities would react unfavorably to picture exploitation of this type as too gruesome an exhibit. The Club brothers will have to use their own judgment as to this. What we do know is that J. H. tells us his play dates were the largest in the past 20 years. So there you are. Take it or leave it, and if you cash in, say a good word for J. H. for taking off time to send it in. Let's hear from you again, Phillips. We have some further accounts of this member's activities at the Eagle theatre and these will make an appearance in an early issue of Club pages.

Berkimer Boosts 'Hells Angels' With 'Plane Parts Window

An empty store next to the theatre provided space for an advance display of airplane parts when Harry Berkimer, manager of the Babylon Theatre, Babylon, N. Y., played "Hell's Angels." Harry borrowed the parts from the near-by airport at Valley Stream and the collection consisted of parachutes, propellers, etc.

Inasmuch as the public is so "air-minded" these days we can appreciate the amount of interest that these sorts of displays attract. Sorry, Harry, that the photos you sent were not sharper so that a cut of the Babylon front could be reproduced, but next time maybe you'll send a better view of your theatre. The Club also acknowledges receipt of your "Newsette," published weekly for distribution in Prudential, L. I., theatres. Let the Club know what else you are doing to sell shows down on the Island.

SELLING THE "KEEP COOL" IDEA FOR RESULTS!

The Power of Suggestion, An Important Angle

"Cool" looking newspaper ads will go a long ways towards selling the cool idea for your theatre. That is something every showman will agree on. And the frequent use of the familiar polar bears, cakes of ice, etc., etc., lend themselves admirably to the occasion.

The group of illustrations on this page were all taken from the western edition of Fox's, "The Last Word" and will give you some idea of how that progressive circuit is encouraging the use of this type of material in their theatre's advertising.

The three largest ones were designed for use as institutional ads to sell the coolness and comfort of the theatre. These can be made up in any number of different ways, while at the same time you can use the drawings as part of a regular ad, if you take enough space to work it in. Or rout out the copy on the large ones and use the borders and illustrations with new copy.

The small thumb-nails are all excellent little

The illustrations on this page and part of the text is from the western edition of "The Last Word," of the Fox West Coast Theatres. To that house organ we are indebted for the opportunity of passing along these timely suggestions.

plugs for your house and are bound to appeal to the humorous side of the prospective patron. Constantly used in your daily ads, they should help a lot to get the "cool" idea implanted in the minds of your customers.

Last year we were successful in securing a batch of these mats for members whose theatres were not considered opposition to Fox houses. Whether we could do this again we do not know but if you would like a mat, on some of these illustrations, drop us a line and we will try to get them.

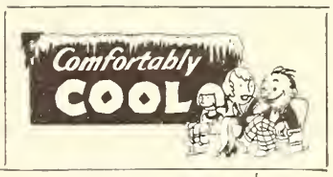
Inside the Theater

Aside from your regular newspaper propaganda to implant the "cool" idea in the minds of your patrons, there are many other valuable angles worthy of your consideration. For example, you might make a tie-up with some local merchant and serve iced tea and coffee. Soda fountains will co-operate with a "Joan Crawford Special" or "Janet Gaynor Parfait." Local bottling works are good for a tie-up.

Try anything that will tie-up coolness with your theatre. A swimming stunt in the municipal pool or bathing pavillion. An ice-melting gag in the lobby or in front of the theatre. Small cut-outs frozen by your local ice plant into the center of a large cake of ice.



Florist tie-ups can also take in the furnishing of ferns and greens to be placed about the lobby and foyers. Cut flowers for the ladies' lounge rooms, etc. Possibly a beach-costume show in your main foyer through the aid of a local merchant selling such merchandise. Or, better still, if it can be worked, a bathing beauty parade on the stage along the lines of the fashion show idea.

Houses with expensive refrigerating apparatus must, naturally, work out their advertising campaigns along more definite lines in view of the fact that their theatres can be kept so cool and refreshing. Here you have the type of house that not only preached "coolness" but is actually cool. They are in the best spot during the warm weather.

Neat icicle displays around the edge of the marquee, incorporated in the sign work and displays, or erected about the marquee. These and any similar ideas are always suitable for the majority of theatres and help get the idea over.

Various other warm weather suggestions have been carried in the Club section during the past month or so and those who follow the pages regularly are probably making use of some of the ideas published.

A DIGNIFIED CIRCULAR!

Measuring about six by nine inches, this fine looking circular was printed on a good grade of stock for the Fox Congress Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y.

We particularly want to call your attention to the neatness of the copy and the way it is laid out. Sensible use of some rule also enhances the appearance of this piece of printed matter and lifts it out of the usual run of theatre circulars.

The man responsible for this throwaway had three things to sell: "Skippy," the theatre's roof garden and a cool house. This he succeeded in doing as a glance will reveal.

We wish we could impress this type of circular on the minds of many other managers who, liking such a medium for advertising, use them quite frequently. Unfortunately, however, there are but few out of over three hundred that we could select for reproduction. Some were poorly printed, others were jammed full of unnecessary copy, others had too many cuts, etc.

We are not trying to tell you how you should make up a circular or herald. We are merely showing you what the other fellow is doing by way of those circulars which we feel are above the ordinary. If you like their style you are welcome to the idea yourself.

Chicago's Big Jubilee Week Inspires Walt Auerbach's Co-op Ad

They're holding Jubilee Week out in Chicago as we scan a recent contribution to the Club from Walter S. Auerbach, manager of the Lane Court Theatre, Chicago, and from the evidence we have in front of us regarding Walter's part in the celebration we believe he intends to cash in on the celebration.

The Lane Court Theatre is on Centre street, one of Chicago's busy shopping centres, and the Centre Street Business Men's Association is not only acting in concert with the city-wide movement but is staging a three-months' drive of its own, a part of which the Jubilee celebration will be stressed in good old Centre street fashion.

As a trade booster for the occasion Auerbach sold a weekly tab paper, which has a considerable circulation in his district, the idea of running a co-operative page with the mis-spelled word gag as the come-on. Most of our members, we believe, are familiar with the rules of this stunt; that is, the running of a co-operative page of small ads, several of which have words that are misspelled. The gag is to find them and send answers to the theatre and thereby receive a pass. We have pages from two issues of the tab at hand and can see that the idea was liberally supported by the merchants. We are reproducing a box that Auerbach used in the center of one of the pages for the benefit of those who may wish to try a community move of this nature. It is our personal opinion that they not only serve to boost business but vastly aid in building up good trade relations between merchant and theatreman.

You will note by the accompanying cut of box that Auerbach saw to it in the matter of giving the merchants a good break on copy. The rules, as outlined, will explain it all plainly for anyone who wishes try a similar co-op ad. The Club thanks you, Walter, for remembering it and hopes that you will continue to do so. We also hope that Jubilee Week pans out to be a winner.

Give Louis Lamm A Cheer For Co-op Ad On "Finger Points"

We've seen a lot of co-op pages and we've published quite a number of splendidly arranged double trucks on the subject but the Club will certainly have to give Louis Lamm, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lorain, O., a pat on the back for getting one of the finest breaks on a current attraction we've ever seen. The whole trick amounted to taking advantage of a "natural" title—"The Finger Points"—and how it points! In every ad the "finger" points to the ad copy. Take a look at the cut on this page and see if you don't agree that Louis made some killing on this one. And look at the break the house gets on current and coming attractions.

Alright, Louis, go to it and get some more of the same kind. More power to you. We also note that the Palace and your Club staged a Third Anniversary at practically the same time. What can this be but a good omen? We thank you for sending this matter along and know that it will prove interesting material to your brother members. Don't forget us in the future.

Nolan And Howard Use Attractive Cut-Out On "City Lights"

When they played Charlie Chaplin in "City Lights" at Loew's Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., Manager Nolan and Publicity Director Howard turned out a novel cutout for lobby display which well nigh reaches a state of perfection. Note the exceedingly true-to-character pose of the star and the realistic background arranged by these two live-wire showmen of Upper New York State. This was but one of a series of aggressive exploitation stunts responsible for record-breaking attendance during the run of this picture at the Rochester.

If any members of this Club are still shy a pattern for a cutout display for "City Lights" we should have no hesitancy in recommending the above. A regular Chaplin poster plus compo-board and a little art work or other ingenuity will work wonders towards the making of an attractive display. The Club is indebted to Nolan and Howard for this contribution and hopes to publish further examples of their show selling at Loew's Rochester theatre.

Diversified Effort Puts "Trader" Over Big For Fred Perry

From Fred Perry, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Binghamton, New York, we get word of the successful campaign he engineered when he played "Trader Horn" at his theatre recently.

Apparently, there was very little that Fred didn't do to put this one over, because he tells us that he is sending us but part of the campaign. The picture below shows how he dressed his front in atmospheric effect. The entire box office and entrance decorations were obtained gratis from a local greenhouse in exchange for the publicity the theatre gave the concern.

Through the courtesy of two leading naturalists in his neighborhood, he was able to borrow specimens of several rare African birds, monkeys, leopard skins, buffalo skins, an elephant's foot, spears and other articles. These were placed in glass cases and used to excellent advantage as a lobby display.

In addition to this he tied up the schools by getting permission from each local school principal for the students to get a half day off to attend the show. And anything you are able to tie children in on, you are assured of getting plenty of word-of-mouth comment.

Fred tells us that his campaign shattered all previous box office records in Binghamton. And since we're all out to do the same thing, you'd better put this one in your tickler for future use, the best part of it is that this need not be wedded to this particular picture.

O. K., Perry, remember us to the boys up your way and don't forget us when you put over your next campaign.

Covered Wagon Used On 'Cimarron' Helps Comerford Sell Show

A street ballyhoo was used to excellent results by J. T. Comerford, manager of the Shawnee Theatre, Plymouth, Pa., when selling "Cimarron." The outfit consisted of a small covered wagon pulled by a tandem of seven Shetland ponies. The head pony had a boy on his back, and the covered wagon carried copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. The accompanying photo on this page will give an idea of how the ponies were hooked up. The stunt was a novel one and J. T. tells us it not only attracted plenty of attention, but sold the picture, too. Thanks for sending this in, J. T., and remember the Club in the future.

PROGRAM ECONOMY!

Many theatres, faced with the usual drop in business during the summer, are now using a two-weeks' program instead of the customary weekly affair.

Under the weekly plan the cost was as follows:

5,000 programs cost about $20.

Mailing 3,000 cost them $30 plus envelopes which cost $6.50 making a grand total of $56.50.

Taking the two-week plan it figures something like this:

7,000 programs (the extra 2,000 to cover the second week for theatre distribution) cost $28. Mailing figures are same as above except that this expense only occurs every second week. The total would then be $64.50 for two weeks as against $113 under the once-a-week plan. Making a saving of $48.50, which over a period of ten weeks represents a sizable amount of money.

Understand, these figures are average and would vary according to the quantity used and the number of programs mailed. But you can figure it out according to your own accurate figures.

Those houses now using this plan claim that it is answering the purpose and well warrants the switch in view of the saving involved.

Tucker Has Record-Breaking Week With 'Skippy' Down South

As S. B. Tucker, manager of the Byrd Theatre, Richmond, Va., writes the Club in reference to the Third Anniversary issue his house is experiencing a record-breaking week with "Skippy." S. B. is all pepped up over the success of his campaign and is passing it along for the benefit of his brother Club members.

Ten days in advance of the regular showing Tucker tied in with the Parents-Teachers' Association, the Woman's Club, Y. M. C. A. and Boy Scouts for a special preview showing of "Skippy." Members of each organization were well represented at this performance and cards were handed them for an expression of opinion on the picture at the close of the show. Many well known citizens of Richmond were present and the cream of these comments were picked for use in following advertisements. We are reproducing one of the several ads run in connection with the endorsements made by prominent citizens and you will note that the opinions are right to a point in the way of boosting the show.

OPINIONS OF SEVERAL WHO SAW THE PREVIEW LAST WEEK

One of the best pictures for adults as well as children I have ever seen. —Mrs. Henry Lee Staples.

Excellent. Is a picture that every parent should see. Reveals much of the conflict of childhood with regard to our present home situations. —R. H. Atheern.

One of the very best pictures I ever saw. I feel while children will enjoy it is more for "grownups." A splendid study in psychology. —Mrs. R. L. Simpson.

I advise every Mother and Father to see "Skippy" as it will give them a better understanding of their boy. —Mrs. Ruth Gibbs.

Another effective tie-up Tucker made on the above picture was an arrangement with a local distributor of tooth-paste for distribution of samples of the product to pupils of seven schools. A card was gotten up (about the size of a postcard) with a cut of "Skippy" in the left margin and with copy reading: "Do not be like 'Skippy'! Brush your teeth regularly!" Space directly in the center of the card was reserved to carry a glued sample of the tooth-paste.

Additional exploitation included a tie-in with the Yellow Cab company for the placing of tire covers, advertising "Skippy" on all cabs and cars of employees.

The Club congratulates you, Tucker, for putting over such an effective campaign on this picture. We are particularly interested in the preview you arranged to secure endorsements for ads.

As an advance campaign on "Subway Express," he effected a tie-up with the local Lucky Strike cigarette factory which netted him the placing of 50 additional tie-ups in cigar stores without the usual granting of passes to the theatre. The company also allowed him to place announcements on all bulletin boards in all factories and the privilege of distributing tabloid heralds to employees. A tie-up was also made with the Domino sugar company to hand out sample packages of sugar to all ladies attending matinee performances.

Bill Thomas Gets Attention Out West With Bill Post Gag

If you want to try something different in your community in the way of an attention-getting stunt take a glance at the photo on this page of the two dressed-up bill posters slinging the paste brush on the "Dracula" 24-sheet. This one was engineered by that resourceful P. A. Bill Thomas, of Universal, when this picture played the Hollywood Pantages Theatre. Thomas had the two men dress up in a "Count Dracula" outfit and timed the pasting of the "24" at 12 o'clock noon. Crowds lined the street while the stunt was being pulled and the interest was reflected by brisk trade at the box-office.

Questionnaire Stunt On "Father's Son" Used By Lou Smith

A questionnaire gag on "Father's Son" is receiving a favorable share of attention from the neighborhood boys, writes Lou Smith, former manager of the Highway Theatre, Brooklyn. Distribution of the questionnaire was, of course, made in advance of the showing and the herald bore notice that the first fifty boys who correctly answered the questions would receive a free pass. The names of winners were posted in the lobby. The questions related to U. S. historical events and biblical characters and most all of them are of a nature that the average school boy is instructed on in the course of his studies.

This appears to be an excellent means of arousing interest among the younger generation, Lou, and we're glad to hear that it brought you much favorable returns. Also note that schools are the logical points of distribution for matter of this nature.

Sid Holland's Big "Cimarron" Drive Put B. O. Over Top

When "Cimarron" was originally booked to play his house, Sid Holland, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Hammond, Ind., along with his associatites, decided to take a ready-made advantage of the big National Campaign plus the success of the picture in Chicago and other key cities, and simply announced that the picture was in town. But SOMETHING, over which he tells the Club he had no control, made him and the staff go out and sell the attraction for all that it was worth. The Club opines that this Something was just Holland's natural born showmanship coming to the front, whether he will admit it or not. Anyway, here's the story in his own words:

"Our first step was to take advantage of one of the biggest auto shows to be held in this part of the country, two weeks in advance of the opening of "Cimarron." In exchange for adequate space for our displays and for seating of an audience we agreed to furnish some entertainment.

"Our next step was to wade into an extensive billing campaign in Hammond and surrounding territory, using two-sheets, 24's, window cards, heralds, set-ups, window display and school bulletin boards. Book marks were distributed in local libraries and 2,000 special sales postcards were mailed.

"Our newspaper campaign consisted of teaser copy, starting three and a half weeks in advance of the opening. Small ads were taken in the Weeklies of rural surrounding towns. We took a little over average space in selling this attraction, but stayed within our newspaper budget.

"Three weeks in advance of the opening teaser trailer strips were spotted in all programs (usually four six-inch strips in the program). A week in advance of the opening the regular trailer was used. Four days in advance of the opening our organ novelty was prepared so as to feature the "Cimarron" theme.

"Our lobby in advance of the opening carried an overhead shadow box, a special art panel as well as a side wall shadow box. A special front was built for the attraction and the brilliance of this is best described by the accompanying photo."

Holland states that the record-breaking gross resulting from this campaign is particularly outstanding in view of the fact that his "opposition" was playing a popular star at one house and double-featuring at the other at 20 and 30 cents. This, Holland believes, warranted the extensive campaign and the gratifying returns bear out his claims. A great effort, Sid, and one that you can put down in the book on the winning side. We are glad to pass along the good work to your brother showmen. Many thanks for sending this in for the Club's Third Anniversary, and we know that you are not going to forget us in the future.

Nicol Is Boosting Box Office Nicely With Country Store

Country Store Nite is boosting trade for M. H. Nicol, manager of the Palace Theatre, Waterloo, Ohio. We are displaying a cut here which will give readers an idea how Nicol arranges his collection of goods. During the week the counter is displayed in the theatre foyer and each Friday, when the Nite is held, it is placed out in front of the theatre. M. H. tells the Club that people in his town are very much interested in the gag and indications are that it will pick up from week to week. The entire cost of the counter came to $12 and it was made by the art department.

ALL SET FOR ACTIVE MEMBERSHIP!

HAMILTON R. KUPPER manages the Fox-Capitol Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., and with his application at hand our files for Jersey City practically show a full quota of Round Tablers. Your city, Kupper has been the source of many a constructive yarn on show-selling and it is the Club's sincere hope that you will follow the footsteps of your loyal brother showmen as regards contributions to these pages. And why not include a photo next time you write?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. J. LA FAVE is the assistant manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Walkerville, Ontario, Canada, and comes to Club membership with a recommendation from his manager, William Yurman. La Fave is 20 years of age and started in this business as an usher. He was promoted to his present position and under Yurman's able coaching it is the Club's prediction that he will soon be managing a house of his own.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES E. DARBY is the assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass., and his recent application for membership in this Club swells the ranks of the big New England group of Round Tablers. Darby comes to us with a recommendation from George Laby, manager of the Washington St. Olympia Theatre, Boston, and we will hope to hear more from this new member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LESTER KNAPP manages the Melba Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and his application for membership is forwarded with a recommendation from that well-known theatre man, Fred Wehrenberg. We surmise that there will be keen competition out your way, Lester, to garner summer trade so let's hear about how you get your share. Why not send a photo next time you write?

Here's the Blank

Application For Membership In

"MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB"

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

Name .....

Position .....

Theatre .....

Address .....

City .....

State .....

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

R. D. WRIGHT is in charge of the Wright Theatre, a 625-seat house in Gurdon, Texas. Inasmuch as the house bears his name and is independently operated, we take it that Wright is to be classified among the new members as an owner-manager. That will mean that we can expect to hear a most interesting account of how he puts shows over the top for his house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN C. ANDERSON is the owner-manager of the Cover Theatre, Fort Morgan, Indiana, and the Club takes this opportunity to acknowledge the membership application from this new Round Tabler. Further, we will look forward to an account of some snappy work in connection with show business out his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM J. BLATT is in charge of the Grand Theatre, Patton, Pa., and the Club welcome is herewith extended to this new member from a State in which we proudly acknowledge the listing of a great many representatives. Keep up the standard that your fellow citizens have set, Bill, by letting us all know what's doing down your way. And how about that photo next time you write?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK TEMPLIN manages the Wood Theatre, Kokomo, Indiana, and we are in receipt of what we should term an illustrated application for membership in this Club. Frank's idea of the Round Table is expressed on a card picturing two donkeys, tied together and each striving to reach an opposite haystack. In the end, the two beasts confer, and the fade-out sees them eating at the same stack. That's the spirit, Frank, "all for one and one for all," so why not follow up with a contribution to these pages?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT E. HIGGINSON is the manager of the Jose Theatre, San Jose, Calif., and the Club is glad to add his name to its roster of the West Coast unit. Robert, or "Bob" as you will henceforth be yclept, keep up the good pace set by your fellow showmen out your way and help fill these pages with interesting yarns about how you sell your shows in San Jose. And why not include a photo the next time you make a contribution?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. G. CROUCH is the manager of the Princess Theatre, Troy, Alabama, and it is the Club's privilege to extend a welcome to this new member from a live little Southern city. He is in charge of a small, independently operated house that has everything that is latest in sound and we will look forward to hearing about what he's doing in the way of selling shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. UNGER manages the Vernon Theatre, in the city of Vernon, Texas, a sound-equipped house in the Publix circuit. In fact, Unger is not only a manager but a City Manager and it is the Club's hope that his duties will not prevent him from sending along an account of his many activities. Include a photo next time you write, J. E., so we can give you a proper send-off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. W. WOODALL is in charge of the Palace Theatre, Guntersville, Ala., a house in a group belonging to Amusement Enterprises, Inc. Woodall's town is small likewise his house but we know he has to put in a proportionate amount of work to put his shows over the top.

JOHN WATT is in charge of the Empress Theatre, Penticton, British Columbia, and with his membership application at hand Watt's country is speedily becoming entirely Round-Tableized. Keep the Club posted, John, as to how show business is going along up your way. And why not send along a photo next time you write.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. F. BONNER is the manager of the Community Theatre, Pine Bluff, Arkansas, and the Club herewith extends a royal welcome to this new member. Send along a photo next time you write so the rest of the boys can identify you, and don't forget to let them know what you are doing to boost trade conditions in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN J. LYNCH is the manager of the Manor Theatre, Chicago, Ill., and thus the Club ranks continue to expand in this big city. Lynch's house is one of the Publix-B. & K. circuit and that means that he's one of a group of live-wire managers in that organization. Next time you write, John, let's know what you're doing. And why not include a photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES A. LUCAS, JR., is in charge of the Rex Theatre, Pampas, Texas, and this, along with his biography which has already been set up in type, will serve to introduce him to fellow members. Keep the Club informed, James, as to what you are doing to put shows over in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ART GOSTOL manages the Strand Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., and the Club takes this occasion to welcome this new member from one of the Twin Cities. Art's house is a link in the Publix chain and he will now be able to swap show-selling yarns with a great many fellow-managers. That is, if he remembers the Club spirit and carries on. Let's have a photo next time you write, Gostol, so the rest of the boys will know you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. I. FISH is the manager of the Gem Theatre in Dumas, Arkansas, and a hearty pat on the back is hereby given to this new Round Tabler. Fish operates an independent house and the rest of the boys will expect to hear more about him.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. E. RUH is the manager of the Ozark Theatre, Ozark, Ark., and the Club takes pleasure in welcoming this new member from the middle west. Ruh manages a 225-seat house, sound equipped and we will look forward to receiving a further account of his activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

D. B. WHITE is the manager of the Ritz Theatre in DeFuniak Springs, Fla., and is another lady-manager to join the ranks of the Round Table. Mrs. White comes to the Club with a recommendation from Earle Holden, an old time member, and it is a real pleasure to extend the usual welcome. A woman's slant on show-business is always interesting and we will hope to receive a future letter from her concerning local conditions.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEO STEPHANY is the manager of the Music Hall Theatre, Newport, Kentucky, and his name is now listed among the Blue Grass members of this Club. Leo, the Club reminds you that once a member it becomes obligatory to swap show-selling ideas with your fellow Round Tablers. A word to the wise is sufficient!

Speaking of HITS...

HERE is one for everybody! It's Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2... a new negative film, two to three times as fast as previous emulsions under Mazda lights. Possessed of an unequalled combination of other advantages, it is bound to improve the quality of sound pictures. Yet its price is the same as that of regular negative. Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative, Type 2, is a film whose effect will be felt throughout the industry. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
